HEAVY WHEAT CROP.—We learn from our friend, David Stonestreet, Esq. who resides in the valley of the Cedar Creek, in the southwest part of our county, that the farmers in that locality were much more favored in an abundant wheat harvest than our farmers generally are. This valley, however, is a most fertile one, and seems peculiarly adapted to the growing of wheat. One farmer, Samuel Harbor, shocked thirty acres this season, and thrashed therefrom 830 bushels, nearly 28 bushels to the acre. This beats anything we have yet heard in this part of the State. Mr. Stonestreet averaged over 20 bushels to the acre in his crop, and Mr. John Hogue, had 14 acres that ran close on to thirty bushels to the acre. Farmers are putting in large crops this season, those having but small farms seeding down 30 and 40 acres. We are glad to hear of their good fortune and only regret that it is not more general.

The Kendallville Standard has the following account of an interview of one of our citizens:

Uncle Henry Gonsor, of Fairfield township, DeKalb county, gave us a call again last Saturday. He appears to be about 65 years of age, and his eyesight has become very imperfect. Many of our citizens remember him as having been the victim of a swindling Indianapolis "plow agent," last spring. The sharper on the 29th of May, found Mr. Gonsor at his residence, and poured wily words into his ears about making him "sole agent for a celebrated plow." The old gentleman finally consented to take an agency, but before he could wear such honors, the impostor said he must sign a "contract." The paper was produced, and at this period advantage was taken of an impaired vision. Uncle Henry informs us that the agent held the paper in his hand from which he pretended to read the words of a contract making him agent for the sale of a plow. The "contract" afterwards was found to be a negotiable note payable in 3 months. The note calling for $168 was due on the 28th ult., and is in the hands of an Indianapolis broker, who called on Mr. Gonser last Saturday and requested the payment. This of course was refused, and an effort will probably be made to force payment by law.

We have been known in Fort Wayne many years to be the most successful clothing house ever opened in the city. It is not only our liberal advertising that has made us popular but our fair and honorable dealings, with those who have stood by us since we have been in the business. In selling them nicely made clothing at reasonable prices they have advertised us. With the 20 years experience we have had since boyhood, we profess to know the wants of every one and what class of goods are wanted. Therefore we can say that we can fit a boy of the small size up to the largest man in the grade of goods, from the finest to the lowest grades. We caution those who are not acquainted in this place to enquire for us before you drop in some other place where they have been trying to imitate our well established place. It is to your own interest as well as to ours to come direct to us at the popular Red Front, No. 5 Keystone Block.

Good common suits for men from $6 to $10, Cassimere suits from $9 to $20, fine cloth suits from $12 to $25. Cloaks from $3 to $25, with or without saques, men's working pants from $1.50 to $2.50, children, boys and youths suits from $3 up. We also keep a large line of hats, caps, shirs, underwear, gloves and many articles too numerous to mention, at exceeding low prices.

[illegible]SUMMARY.

The East.

IN the course of the investigations that have followed the collapse of the Brooklyn Trust Company, it has been developed that Rodman, the cashier of the concern, and Deputy City Treasurer of Brooklyn, has stolen about $250,000 belonging to the city. He has been arrested, and will be prosecuted....The citizens of Newburg, N. Y., are improving the appearance of the old headquarters of Gen. Washington, in that town. Secretary of War Belknap is co-operating, and has ordered thirty [illegible] to be sent there, to be placed on headquarter grounds....Two bank officers have recently committed suicide—William R. Boyce, President of the First National Bank of Lynn, Mass., and J. H. Rosanquest, Cashier of the First National Bank of Tarrytown, N. Y.

A LEGAL investigation into the affairs of the Philadelphia Morgue has developed the fact that the Coroner has for a long time been in the habit of selling bodies intrusted to him for burial. Dr. Hedges, of the Medical College, testified that he was in the habit of buying these unclaimed corpses, and could see nothing reprehensible in so doing....Michael A. McFarland, who spent his whole fortune in securing the acquittal of his brother Daniel, for the killing of Albert D. Richardson, has just died in a New York hospital. Having no friends, he was buried in the Potter's field....At Montpelier, Vt., Joseph Daniels shot Carrie Dennison, and then killed himself. Love and jealousy.

JOHN W. HORTON, the Lancaster (Pa.) forger, has been arrested in Providence, R. I. It turns out that he is an old swindler. In 1860 he was in the employ of a Philadelphia banker, and mysteriously disappeared with $41,000 belonging to his employer, and it was supposed until recently that he was murdered and robbed....Walter Snowden, a Philadelphia insurance clerk, the other day robbed his employer's safe, then struck himself with a dumb bell and simulated unconsciousness, to make believe he had been robbed. The trick was discovered and he confessed to the theft....A boat containing two men and a woman was swept over the falls at Reading, Pa., the other day, and one of the men and the woman drowned....Williamson, the principal in the bond forgeries which have brought transactions in New York Central bonds to a stand-still in Wall street, has not yet been arrested. So far, $[illegible] worth of the forged securities have been discovered, and it is rumored in Wall street that one bank has been swindled to the figure of $500,000.

THE bond forgeries in New York grow more formidable every day. It is now believed that $1,000,000 worth of false securities have been put on the market by the counterfeiting gang. ....Edwar[illegible]tterson, clerk for Keep & Cross, New York [illegible], has decamped with over $30,000 belonging to his employers.

SEVERAL well-executed $500 counterfeit greenbacks have been received at the Sub-Treasury in New York. Experts pronounce them the best counterfeits that they have ever seen. Few of them are in circulation in New York, and it is believed that they have been issued mostly in the West. An old man named Sweet has been arrested at Titusville, Pa., for passing one of these counterfeits.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., the famous fishing port, lost 35 lives and $90,000 by the late gale on the Nova Scotia coast....Ten of the counterfeit $500 notes have been received at the New York Sub-Treasury. It is thought that it will be found necessary to call in the whole genuine issue of $35,000,000....There is a law in Massachusetts which permits the Governor to grant conditional pardons; that is, to provide that if the prisoner be convicted of a crime committed after his release, he shall be required to serve out the remainder of his previous sentence. A prisoner who was detained under these circumstances recently applied to the Supreme Judicial Court by a writ of habeas corpus for release; and that tribunal has just granted the application, holding that the law is unconstitutional.

The West.

THE land of Illinois is assessed by the State Board of Equalization at an average of $22.88 an acre improved, and $8.47 unimproved.... Several of the Iowa railroad robbers are said to be in La[illegible] county, Mo., and that the citizens are afraid to arrest them....A sailor named John T. Irving, and claiming to be a relative of Washington Irving, now in San Francisco, has [illegible] himself the murderer of Benjamin Nathan, of New York, and says he was [illegible] to do the job by the son of the murdered man. The fellow is believed to be insane....The Texas cattle fever has broken out among the cattle in the St. Louis dairies....Beane, the conductor of the coal train which collided with the passenger express on the Chicago and Alton railroad, causing a frightful massacre, has at last been arrested in Will county, Ill., where he has been skulking ever since the disaster occurred. His captor was Simon L. Miller, a merchant of Monee, and an old friend of the prisoner, who was tempted by the $1,000 reward to betray him into the hands of justice. Beane is now in jail in Chicago, and will be tried for his crime....A wonderful magnetic spring has been discovered near Watertown, Wis. Remarkable cures of rheumatism, kidney complaints, and other evils to which flesh is heir, are reported.

ANOTHER railroad slaughter is added to the frightful list of recent disasters—this time in Michigan. The accident occurred on the Detroit and Milwaukee road, near Muir station, and was occasioned by a freight train running into the rear of a passenger train. Result: six persons killed and some twenty wounded, all emigrants....Freiburg and Workum, recently expelled from the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, have appealed to the courts for redress....Various portions of California were visited by earthquake shocks on the 29th ult. ....Near Cairo, Ill., the other day, a bank caved in at a gravel pit, killing and wounding a number of railroad hands. Three have died, and others are not expected to recover.... William Campbell (colored) was hung at Cairo, Ill., on the 29th ult., for the murder of the mate of the steamer Grand Tower, on the 24th of last April. The culprit was obdurate to the last, repelling all attempts at conversation and all religious offices, and died protesting that he was hanged unjustly.

A dispatch from Clinton, Mo., states that a skirmish had taken place in St. Clair county, between the Iowa sheriff and the Rock Island train robbers, in which one of the sheriff's posse and one of the robbers were wounded. The sheriff and his posse were in hot pursuit at last accounts....Near Galion, Ohio, last week, a train ran into a farmer's wagon, containing himself, wife and two daughters, killing the children outright, and severely injuring the father and mother.....Advices from Eastern Montana foreshadow formidable Indian troubles there this fall....Those Modocs not under sentence of death are to be turned over to the Oregon authorities....The reported Indian massacre at Ft. Sill was a vile canard.

THE steamer Jay Cooke ran down a yawl containing nine men, near Sandusky, Ohio, a few days ago. Four were drowned, and one had a shoulder broken....A horrible tragedy was recently enacted near Sedalia, Mo. A crazy man named Knightly killed his sister and nephew, set fire to the house, and then killed himself. The remains of all three were almost entirely consumed by the flames.

CHOLERA has been raging fearfully at Okawville, Ill., a little town [illegible] miles from St. Louis. Twenty-three died in twelve hours. Five died in one family within three hours. The patients die within fifteen minutes after attack, and turn black immediately....A balloonist, named Palmer, made an ascension at Beloit, Wis., the other day. When at the height of 1,000 feet, Palmer let go the ropes, and, falling backward, hung by his toes to the bar; his toes slipped from the bar, and, as he dropped, his hands caught the two rings which were suspended eight feet below the trapeze. It is described as the most daring feat ever performed....Population of Leavenworth, Kansas, 23,037—an increase of 8,129 in [illegible].

THE Chicago Times, of the 5th inst., prints special dispatches from over a hundred different points relative to the condition and prospects of the corn crop. They embrace reports from almost every county in the great corn belt through Illinois, Iowa and Kansas, and there is a general coincidence in the statement that the corn has suffered severely from the drought, and that the yield will be considerably below the average....Cincinnati has just completed her new stock yards. They cost, including the land, $500,000, and will accommodate 50,000 head of live stock....At a meeting of the Western Nail Association at Pittsburgh, on the 3d inst., a four and three-eighths card was adopted. The association unanimously resolved to make the agency price of nails in Chicago $4.62½, with an eighth off to the trade, while the price in Cincinnati was fixed at $4.35 net; at Indianapolis, $4.50, and at Kansas City, $4.75 net.... A dispatch from Sedalia, Mo., says: The Lafayette County Vigilance [illegible] have been in pursuit of the Io[illegible] robbers, have returned here [illegible] They traced the robbers to S[illegible] and surrounded the house [illegible] posed they were hiding, bu[illegible] flown. TREASURER SPINNER doubts whether covering back pay into the Treasury, as repentant members are doing, places it legally beyond their reach. The money is theirs by law, and, as the transfer to the United States is without consideration, it is a question whether any legal defense could be made to the suit of an heir-at-law, for instance, for its recovery....A Washington dispatch says the Manitoba question will be brought before a British tribunal in a few days. Minister Thornton says the British Government is firm in its conviction that the action of its officials was strictly in accordance with law, and expresses his conviction that the decision of the court will be adverse to the parties in custody. The court will be held at Fort Garry, Winnepeg. Meanwhile, the proposition to release the American prisoners on bail is rejected.

IT is stated that the Secretary of the Treasury is maturing a plan by which banks may be detected and punished for aiding gold conspirators....The Postmaster-General states that the revenue of his department has largely increased since the abolition of the franking privilege, and thinks that it will be self-sustaining by the close of the year....The Post-office Department has great trouble with the contractors who supply the postal cards. They have utterly failed to comply with the conditions of their contract, and constantly furnish cards below the standard. The contract calls for paper that costs the makers 25 cents a pound, but they furnish paper that really costs them but 16 cents a pound. It is said the mill owners and contractors are in collusion in the fraud.

Foreign.

THE cholera is raging in Pesth, Hungary. The deaths average 600 a week, in a population of less than 300,000....The British Government has decided to send an expedition from Cape Coast Castle against the Ashantees. ....Serious riots are reported in the city of Leipsic....Twelve of the Barcelona (Spain) artillerymen, who recently mutinied, have been sentenced to death....Don Carlos has issued a stringent order against the interference by his forces with railroad communication in Spain. The penalty of death is decreed for violation of this order.

The Carlists and Communists in Spain are making common cause with each other....The Khivans took advantage of the absence of Gen. Kaufman a short time ago to get up an insurrection. It was easily quelled by the Russian troops, who, in retaliation, destroyed the town of Khiva, the Capital of the Khanate. ....The Prussian Government has ordered the expulsion from the country of all emigration agents who fail to prove that they are German subjects....A boiler in a flax factory near Stockholm, Sweden, recently exploded, killing nine persons, and injuring a great many more....An insurrection has broken out in the Fiji Islands, and many white settlers have been murdered.... The expedition of Sir Samuel Baker, about which so much has been said and written, during the past three years, turns out to be a failure in every respect. It is stated that he has returned to his starting point after a loss of three-fourths of his soldiers, furnished by the Khedive of Egypt, and the wasting of an immense amount of money. The objects of his expedition were the abolition of slavery in the provinces lying between Gondokoro and the Lakes Albert and Victoria Nyanza, and the settling of certain geographical questions connected with these lakes, to facilitate which, he was furnished with three iron steamers built in sections. It is now affirmed that he has lost his steamers, has settled no geographical questions, and has not abolished slavery.

AND now comes forward another pretender to the throne of Spain—the Prince of Asturias —who, it is said, will shortly proclaim his succession....The black flag has been hoisted by the insurgents at Cartagena, Spain....The trial of Marshal Bazaine will commence on the 6th of October....It is said the Spanish [illegible] The anniversary of [illegible] 1) was celebrated with much pomp at Berlin. ....Nine passengers were killed and fifteen wounded by a recent accident on the Luxembourg railroad, in Germany....Ninety persons were lately drowned by the capsizing of a ferry-boat near Kairah, India.

A FIGHT lately occurred on the Lima and Oroyo railroad, in Peru, between Chilian and Peruvian laborers, in which many of the latter were killed....The Emperor of Germany has ordered that the forts in Alsace and Lorraine be rechristened in honor of the leading generals of the conquering army.

Political.

THE Republicans of Mississippi have nominated Senator Ames for Governor, and — Davis (colored) for Lieutenant-Governor.

THE Democrats of Ohio opened the campaign at Columbus on the 29th ult. William Allen, candidate for Governor, was the principal speaker. He denounced Credit Mobilier, and charged the responsibility of the salary grab on President Grant....It begins to look as if Ben Butler would be the next Governor of the Bay State, despite the powerful opposition arrayed against him.

SENATOR JAMES L. ALCORN has taken the field as an independent candidate for Governor of Mississippi, in opposition to Senator Ames, the Republican nominee.

THE Democrats of Iowa will hold no State Convention this year.

The Convention of "Anti-Monopolists" at Owatonna, Minn., nominated Asa Barton for Governor, and Ebenezer Ayres for Lieutenant-Governor.

STEPHEN B. ELKINS, Republican, has been elected Delegate to Congress from New Mexico....The Democrats of Massachusetts have nominated the following ticket: For Governor, William Gaston, of Boston; Lieutenant-Governor, William L. Smith, of Springfield; Secretary of State, Benjamin F. Mills, of Williamstown; Treasurer, Nathan Clark, of Lynn; Auditor, Waldo Coburn, of Dedham; Attorney-General, C. Osgood Morse, of Northampton.

General.

THE national debt has been reduced $250,000,000 in the three years which have elapsed since July 1, 1870. During the last year the reduction has been only one-fifth this sum, or $43,667,530. Receipts from taxation, both customs and internal, are decreasing. The former last year was $30,000,000 less than in the preceding year, and the latter was $17,000,000 less....The storm that recently ravaged Halifax, N. S., and the whole northeastern coast, was the most terrible that has visited that country in years. Wharves, railways, bridges, barns, and houses have been washed away or beaten down by the storm in every direction. Vessels have been wrecked by scores in Halifax harbor. Over fifty are ashore in Cow Bay, and fully one hundred are believed to be stranded on the shores of Cape Breton. The crops have not suffered less terribly. Within a radius of 200 miles all the fruit trees are stripped. The loss of life seems miraculously small, as is shown by the fact that but one soul perished in the fifty shipwrecks at Cow Bay.

FURTHER details of the disastrous gale on the Nova Scotia coast have been received. The loss of life, which at first was reported insignificant, turns out to be very great, some estimates putting the figure as high as 100. It is said 40 dead bodies have drifted ashore on the north side of Prince Edward's Island, and at other points bodies are washing up on the beach. It is reported that 40 American fishing vessels were lost off the north side of Prince Edward's Island, and that only 18 lives were saved out of all the crews, but none of the late arrivals credit the report. There are over 100 vessels ashore at different parts of Cape Breton, and 17 are ashore at Louisburg. The schooner Ocean Wave went to pieces on Cape Hogan, all hands perishing. Another schooner lost two men, and a brig went down at her anchorage in Carriboo cove, with all on board. Other vessels and crews are known to be lost. It is estimated that over 100 buildings have been destroyed in Canso and vicinity, entailing a loss of over $100,000. At Canso every ship in the harbor is high and dry. Every wharf and fishing establishment has been swept away, and debris lines the entire shore. The public hall there is a heap of splinters. All the buildings, public and private, are more or less injured. The Catholic chapel is a ruin. Out of a fleet of over 300 fishing vessels, only 20 remain. A schooner from Labrador spoke an American fishing schooner in the straits of Canso, which reported 30 American fishing schooners ashore at Pleasant Bay. At Charlottetown, Prince Edward's Island, the storm was very destructive to life and property. The destruction of fishing boats is unprecedented. Six square-rigged vessels were wrecked on the northern coast, and the crews of two of them were drowned. Four American fishing vessels were also wrecked, and the crews all lost. Dead bodies and wrecked material are floating ashore daily. The wharves and bridges throughout the island are damaged. A number of buildings were blown down. The schooner Bonnie Jean was lost with all hands, at Cape Cavendish. The ship [illegible], timber laden, for Liverpool, is a total loss at Cave Head. The crew were saved. The Collector of Customs at Magdalen Island reports 50 British and American vessels ashore there.

THE total losses by the late disastrous storm on the Novia Scotia coast will foot up over 100 human lives, and not less than a million dollars in property.

I published [illegible]ce. He placed such [illegible]upon my letter to him [illegible]ch offense. He proposed renewing the fight, which we did on exceedingly desperate terms. He shot me down, giving me an exceedingly dangerous wound. In three months we were good friends, and lived in the greatest amity and harmony up to the period of his death, which happened in 1848."

Strange Religious Insanity.

A religious insanity has seized upon the negroes in the neighborhood of Spartanburg, S. C. A colored man named Bobo had been preaching to a large congregation that he was an inspired prophet, and instructed by God to lead them to the promised land, distant 160 miles. He persuaded 50 or 60 of them to sell out their crops, stock, furniture, etc., and go with him. One negro sold a crop worth $600 for $150; another sold a cow and calf for $1.50. The prophet told them that to insure success to their journey they must offer up a human sacrifice. They accordingly took an old negro woman, tied her in an out-house, and went in search of a particular kind of stick, with which, under the direction of the prophet, they were to commit the deed. They were some time finding the sick, and the whites interfered and released the old woman. Bobo and his followers then left the country, and when last heard of were going over the mountains. Their belief is that when they reach the promise land they will have wings and fly.

The Legislature of Greece.

The National Legislature of Greece is pronounced a curious assemblage by a correspondent: "Most of the members are dressed like other Europeans, but some of them wear the fustinella, which looks at a little distance like a butcher's shirt. These are probably from Arcadia, Sparta, and other rural districts. Some smoke, some walk about, and all hands speak at once. You might imagine yourself in the House of Representatives of Nebraska or Oregon. The building they now occupy is a temporary barrack, but a handsome one is in process of erection. The question before the house the day I was there was upon granting a pension to the widow of Marco Bozzaris, and the votes were deposited in a singular-looking box, with the word nai (yes) on one side, and ochi (no) on the other side. The Greeks seem to be thoroughly republicans. They have no orders of nobility, and say that but for fear of trouble with other powers they would not keep a king. From economical motives they have abolished their foreign embassies, and complain of the expense of royalty."

Twelve Grandparents.

Western papers are rivaling each other in the telling of stories about large families, which at the same time are noted for longevity. The worst yet is furnished by a correspondent of the Detroit Tribune, who writes from Litchfield, Mich., thus: "I saw in your paper an account of a child having nine grandparents. We, in our town, can beat that by three, for we have a child about six months old with twelve grandparents, and all blood relations, viz.: two grandfathers, two grandmothers, three great-grandfathers, three great-grandmothers, one great-great-grandfather, and one great grandmother. Moreover the great-great-grandparents are husband and wife. Can you find anyone to beat that?"

WHILE an old hen and chickens were scratching vigorously on a pier at Richmond, Va., recently, a rat stealthily approached from the wharf and, seizing one of the brood by the leg, attempted to drag it to its retreat. In an instant the old hen pounced upon the back of the invader, trampling him ferociously, while another hen joined her, and with two successive strokes of the beak, expeditiously plied, succeeded in cutting the rat's throat as cleanly as if it had been done with a knife.

A Romantic Story.

The following story is told by the Galveston (Texas) Commercial of a man who was sent to the penitentiary of that State a week or two ago: "He is a German of noble birth. His uncle and brothers distinguished themselves in the late Franco-German war; they were high in rank and live in princely pomp. Yet this brother, perhaps of morals as good as the best of his family, will for two years live in the Texas Penitentiary. This young man seems to have been the favorite of his mother, but the hated of his father. He was sent to the first schools of Germany, and is proficient in ancient and modern languages—but he was allowed to spend money at random, being taught nothing that is useful. When of age, he was given a few thousands and sent to this country. Here we may premise that while the young man is neither crazed nor a fool, he does lack that which is called gumption. He married a woman who after a season deserted him. From the time of his desertion he became a wanderer. Being sick he returned to Germany and was sent by his family to the most celebrated springs in Germany, and when he was fully restored they returned him to this country with sufficient to have established him in a small business, but he wasted all—and it is strange that did so, for he does not appear to be addicted to any of the money-eating vices. Reduced to beggary, he walked from Mobile to New York, hunting employment. Then he got back to Galveston. Here he acted as scullion in fourth-rate boarding-houses, waiting on the table and cleaning knives. While engaged in this work he stole two watches worth $7, and on being charged with it, he confessed the offense and begged the Recorder to send him to the penitentiary, that he might learn a trade, and be able to support himself. He told the Recorder that if he was not sent to the penitentiary, where he could learn a trade, he would go out and commit some crime that would send him there. He was the most anxious man to get in jail we ever saw. We hope that his residence at Huntsville will be productive of all the good he anticipates from it, and that when he leaves he will be a self-supporting, respectable citizen."

The Austrian Canine.

Whilst the large dogs in Austria are made to work, and to make themselves useful in various ways, the little fellows are taken to the bosoms of the ladies and treated as if they were veritable angels. It is not uncommon when traveling to see almost every lady with a dog in her arms, and occasionally a footman or maid, whose duty in traveling with the mistress is to take care of the dog, and see that he has water and food on the route. The doctors tell many amusing anecdotes of having been called up at midnight and finding that their services were needed for a poodle that had been over-fed in the effort to kill them with kindness. They could make heavier charges with the assurance of prompt payment in such cases than if the call had been for a child or a husband. "Love me, love my dog," seems to be the sentiment of these ladies, and on one occasion we saw a fine-dressed lady who had her dog in her arms take off her gloves whilst standing in a depot, and diligently pursue and kill a flea which she had discovered depredating among the fleece of her favorite. It is quite common to see them led tenderly along with ribbons, and in some cases to see a gold chain attached to a lady's belt, and at the other end of the chain a poodle dog traveling by her side or reposing in her arms. Signs in the shop windows tell you that "dog-soap is sold here," and that various patent compounds that will induce canine health and longevity are on sale. A lady walking in any of the public grounds without a dog is sure to be accosted by a number of seedy-looking individuals who will draw out of their pockets pups, which they offer for sale. The offering for sale of anything in the public grounds being prohibited, they thus keep them concealed in their pockets. In the upper grades of life a mother trusts her children to servants and governesses, but her poodle dog she keeps under her own eye, and a scream from the nursery might pass unheeded, but a yelp from the drawing room or boudoir would startle madam from the soundest sleep. Of course these are exceptional cases, but it includes most of those who aspire [illegible] caress [illegible] and th[illegible] care.—[illegible]

THE best suggestion we have heard since the mercury went up above the nineties, comes from Galveston, Texas. It is a proposition for an Aerial Sanitarium. It is to consist of a large balloon secured at the proper height with strong cables. The correspondent who proposes the novelty writes to the Galveston News that Galveston is within one mile of the most salubrious and delightful climate in the world, the only trouble being that it is directly overhead and the man is not a bird. He proposes, therefore, to balance a mile high in mid air a stationary balloon with an appended hotel capable of accommodating one hundred guests. Smaller balloons will act as elevators, and when the barometer prognosticates bad weather, the gas can be let off, and the hotel or saloon lowered to the ground.

Mr. Pilaster's Experiment, and its Unpleasant Results.

There are people who are credulous in the matter of new remedies, and hasten at the first opportunity to justify their confidence. Mr. Pilaster, a resident of Nelson street, is such a man. He recently read a statement in his agricultural paper that a pebble-stone held in the mouth would very much modify the craving for thirst, and as he was afraid to drink large quantities of ice water, he was glad he heard of the plan, and determined to give it a trial. He did so that afternoon, selecting a nice, smooth stone, and rubbing it clean on the leg of his breeches. Pretty soon after he got back in the house, and was holding the pebble in his mouth, and thinking with tears of gratitude in his eyes of the man who made the discovery, the pastor of the Pilasters' church, together with two deacons, and a prominent female member of the Khidghluv Mission Society, made a call. Mrs. Pilaster showed them into the parlor, where Pilaster, with the pebble in his mouth, joined them. After a few suitable and impressive remarks upon the weather, in which each one contributed something and heartily concurred with what had already been advanced, the subject of the Khidghluv Mission was brought up, and the conversation soon became quite animated on the part of the clergyman and two deacons and the female Khidghluv, while Mr. and Mrs. Pilaster attentively listened. Mr. Pilaster was sitting on a Mohair cushioned chair, sitting on the very edge, so as not to injure it, and was staring in a mild and forgiving manner at the lady, when he suddenly experienced a tickling sensation within his nostril, and wrinkling his nose to prevent it, he broke out in a gurgling noise, and the next instant his eyes protruded, he bounded from the chair, threw his arms in the air, and dropped down on the floor, and immediately went rolling and kicking under the center table, upsetting that article, and strewing the floor with bound books, visiting cards, and wax flowers. Then he rolled over, and reared up, and pounded his heels, and turned black in the face, and worked his hands, and threw his arms. The people were terribly frightened. Mrs. Pilaster and the member of the Khighluv Mission screamed and wrung their hands, and tried to get out of the door. One of the deacons got behind the stove, and the minister, who had no doubt it was a case of hydrophobia, shrieked above the din, "Don't be frightened, ladies; heaven will protect us," and immediately crawled under the sofa. The other deacon was the only one to retain his presence of mind. He thought it was a fit, and catching the unfortunate Pilaster by the slack of his nether garment, as he evoluted about, he held him down, and rubbed the back of his head with an album. Then he called the other deacon to help him, and both of them fell to rubbing the miserable man and pounding his breast, and shaking his head, and in the meantime Mrs. Pilaster got a pail of water and poured it on his head and down his back. And in the midst of these extraordinary exertions the pebble came up, and rolled on the carpet without being perceived, but Mr. Pilaster was too weak to tell them. Then the two deacons picked him up and carried him to his bed, and took off his clothes, and the clergyman started after all the doctors he knew the names of. Mrs. Pilaster heated water, and the female Khidghluver spread mustard plasters and prepared onion drafts; and ten minutes later the wretched patient was steaming in a blanket and smarting under the combined effects of the mustard and onions. Then the doctors commenced to arrive, and pretty soon there were seven of them in the room, and what they didn't know about the case would have been a wicked waste of time hunting up. The first doctor said it was something with a name an inch-and-a-half long and nine joints. Then the next man fetched up something with a name still longer, and he was followed by a doctor who had to sit down to pronounce his. At this Mrs. Pilaster fainted dead away, and when she came to, the seven doctors were calling each other names of twelve syllables, and the poor lady went off again. By this time Mr. Pilaster had so far recovered as to regain his consciousness and some of his strength, and bounding out of bed with no clothing to speak of other than three mustard plasters and a couple of onion drafts, he at once put an entirely differ[illegible]spect on the condition of affairs. [illegible]when Mrs. Pilaster recovered, and [illegible] the female member of the Khid[illegible] recovered, which both of them [illegible]hen they discovered there was no [illegible] assist them, they found the room [illegible]ed, and saw Mr. Pilaster scraping [illegible]rd from his leg, and howling the [illegible]dismal language discribable. Dangerous Cosmetics.

In a paper read to the Paris Academy of Medicine, the necessity is argued of preventing perfumers from selling poisonous or dangerous articles, which should be left exclusively to the responsibility of regular chemists, and not sold without a physician's prescription. Arsenic, the acid nitrate of mercury, tartar emetic, cantharides, colchicum and potassa caustica are common ingredients in these cosmetics. The so-called lettuce soap does not contain the slightest trace of lettuce; and this and other soaps are colored by the sesquioxide of chromium, or of a rose color by the sulphuret of mercury, known as vermilion. The cheaper soaps contain 30 per cent. of insoluble matter, as lime or plaster; while others contain animal nitrogenous matter, which, having escaped the process of saponification, emits a bad odor when its solution is left exposed to the air. The various toilet vinegars are also declared in this paper to be so far noxious that, being applied to the skin still impregnated with soap and water, they give rise to a decomposition, in consequence of which the fatty acids of soap, being insoluble in water, are not removed by washing, become rancid, and cause chronic inflammation of the skin.

AUBURN COURIER

T. C. [illegible], Publisher.

Gen. Sherman.

The General of our army, whose salary is $13,000 a year, came among us three days, and we shook off bureau restraint and conventionality, and exchanged opinions freely.

Sherman is a pure, frank type of man, who will have and hold his own. He substitutes for mere imagination a short-cut, original observation, which is charming and surprising. In thirty minutes he will say so many new, pithy, innocent things of depth that you begin to feel that your man has just come into the world seeking after truth, and does not know what anybody had said previously on the same subjects. This quality of first-sight never grows vagarious and lapses into the mere verbosity of a professional talker—one of those elbow-chair fellows, who sentimentalize, talk a straight rhapsody sprinkled with inconsequential anecdote, and kill time and thought like a masculine Dorcas Society. Sherman says much in little, with vistas of silence between, like the passing ships you see, small and suggestive, on the water-line. Not dogmatic, but little given to qualifying anything he is sure of, there is yet a cool, soldier's materialism about him which is contented with a fact, and leaves the reason for it to somebody else.

"The French are not a military people," he said; "they may have been at some day, but the spirit is not there now. They live in a simple way in their little villages, and try to avoid the conscription." How palpable, and yet previously unsaid, is this remark! Again, Sherman remarked: "I think city and county corporations, and their abuses, are more dangerous than the railroad corporations. The one is a long line; the other is the whole area. Every town of any proportions in America is bonded away by the least responsible people in it, and taxation is rising around us like a freshet. Stop these local politicians from selling good citizens out; that's where competition begins and ends." At another time he alluded to Washington City life, and expressed the sentiment that he was not wholly satisfied with it all. There were a set of bureau-officers there who were tenacious of their places, and perpetually and annoyingly apprehensive of being transferred to some other points of duty. "I prefer the West," said the General, "and think my California experience was the healthiest and most useful I ever had." He further said he had formed no very high estimate of the destinies of Europe; had little or no desire to return there, and had never been tired but once in his life, when he ascended Vesuvius and returned the same afternoon.—Seaside Letter.

All's Well That Ends Well.

Saturday evening, says the Sacramento Union, a gentleman in the employ of the Central Pacific Railroad Company drove out to a place about fifteen miles from the city, where his family are stopping, and soon afterward started on his return to town. Before starting he lighted his meerschaum and indulged in a long and pleasant smoke as he drove along. This over, he placed the pipe in the outer breast pocket of his coat, and paid no more attention to it. By and by a peculiar smell greeted his olfactories—a smell of burning woolen cloth—and, as it increased, he began to look about to see if his garments were on fire, and at the first movement he found that the whole pocket had burned out of his coat, and the fire was spreading rapidly. He grabbed at the burning material hastily, but was so nervous about it that he frightened the horse, and the animal ran. To make matters worse, the lines were not buckled together, and one slipped out of his grasp while he was endeavoring to smother the fire with his other hand. Still worse, the increased speed increased the breeze, which fanned the fire, and portions of it dropped down upon his pants, burning through them, and causing him to bounce up and down on the seat as though he were trying to settle an unusually hearty meal! And there he was—horse running away, line dragging, and fire rapidly making the cuticle of his leg rival the hue of his red-flannel underclothing! At last by dent of dexterous clawing he managed to smother the fire, then stepped out on the shafts and recovered the line, and in course of time subdued the horse. Exceedingly thankful to get out of his trouble without broken bones, he rode on to the city in a subdued frame of mind, and never thought of being profane until, just as he was quietly slipping into a clothing-store with the buffalo robe gathered about him to conceal the deficiency of his wardrobe, he met full in the face two lady friends, who insisted upon his escorting them home, and wanted to know what in the world he had got himself wrapped up that way for?

Singular Lightning Stroke.—The Wilmington Commercial says that on Tuesday last, while working in the woods, William Palmer, of Concord, Delaware county, was struck by lightning. The current entered below the left shoulder-blade, and passed down the left side, tearing and burning the skin, but not injuring the clothes in any way. Mr. Palmer was not stunned in the least, but felt disposed to lie down, and so walked to a good place, where he prostrated himself, and instructed his son to throw some water over him, when he (the son) took his shoe and carried some water, which he dashed on his father. Mr. Palmer was afterward taken home, and has not yet recovered from the shock received. He had been driving wedges with a maul at the time he was struck, and the handle of that implement was shivered to splinters by the current which struck him.

Emma Black, living in a small town on the Mississippi, saved a man's life the other day in a curious way. He was fishing, and tumbled out of his boat, and being unable to swim, would have perished had not the maiden, discovering his danger, swam out to him, and throwing into his hands her back hair, four feet in length, towed him to the land.

The Nile.

The sources of the Nile are contained in the rain-clouds of the equator, which pour themselves down on the forest plateau, form into a thousand rivers, and finally collect in enormous lakes, the precise number and importance of which are yet to be determined. From Baker's Albert Nyanza—the most northerly in latitude and lowest in level of these inland seas—the Nile runs toward Europe and plunges into the Sahara. From its great equatorial reservoirs it receives a sufficiency of water to maintain its existence throughout this land of fire, where all other rivers are speedily extinguished. But the Nile not only flows through the Sahara, it also overflows the flat country lying near its mouth, and, casting mud on the surface of the sand, creates that meadow which is called Egypt.

Now this black mud does not come from the lands of the equator; the waters of the Nile are clear, or white; and although the lakes can keep the Nile alive in its journey through the desert, they cannot make it overflow. Whence, then, proceed these rich soil-laden and redundant waters to the weary Nile?

On the right-hand side of that flowing river, between its waters and the Red sea, a cluster of mountains rises in the air. These are the highlands of Ethiopia—the romantic Abyssinia, the Switzerland of Africa; and down these hilly slopes, at a certain season of the year, rush two noisy streams—the Blue or Black Nile, and the Atbara—which, stripping their country of its black upper soil, fall into the Nile, and bestow upon it such a wealth of water that, as soon as it escapes from the rocky walls which line its course in the Nubian desert, it is forced to overflow.

Thus the Nile is created by the rainfall of the equator, and Egypt by the rainfall of the tropics. If the White Nile did not exist, the Black Nile would be nothing—it would perish in the sand. But if the Black Nile did not exist, the White Nile would be merely a barren river in a sandy plain, with some Arab encampments on its banks.—Winwood Reade's "African Sketch-Book."

Nails.

Every farmer who has had occasion to drive a nail into seasoned oak posts knows its liability to bend and break. If the point be moistened in the mouth it will usually drive more kindly. Oil is still better, but then it is inconvenient to dip each nail separately into it. Another point observed is that boards become loose eventually from the rusting of the nails, which communicating to the wood, causes not only an enlargement of the nail hole, but the wearing away of the nail itself, rendering the fence or building shaky and insecure. This may be prevented by heating any rough grease until it smokes and then pouring it over the nails to be used. The grease will penetrate the pores of the iron, and cause the nails to last, without rusting, an indefinite period. Besides this no trouble will then be experienced in driving them into the hardest wood. The reason is that the coating of grease prevents contact by air, and consequently oxidation. Oxygen is the great destroyer of iron, and moisture is the inducing cause. Anything which is kept from contact with the air is preserved indefinitely, and if it is kept dry the effect is measurably the same. Paint upon buildings prevents the contact of air and moisture. If the whole fence cannot be painted, the heads, at least, of the nails should be touched therewith.

A Couple Married Three Times.

The men are few to whose lot it has fallen to be married three times; rare, though less rare, are the women who have achieved three ceremonies of that interesting character; but here we have a couple who have been married three times to each other. Nine years ago Mr. Charles Wood, then living in De Kalb county, of this State, was united in marriage to Miss Martha Bailey. Within a year or two, she developed what Capt. Dalroy calls, "a very large temper," and Mr. Wood procured a divorce. A year or two more elapsed, they came together again, buried the hatchet or the broom-stick, or whatever it is that typifies domestic warfare, and were married again. This time the connubial peace was destroyed by the green-eyed monster, and the second divorce was procured at his suit on a charge of adultery. Then Mr. Wood moved to Iowa, his divorced wife remaining in De Kalb county. A short time ago she wrote to him, asking if he would not take care of the children, to which petition came the reply, "Yes, and of you too." She went to him, and is now, for the third time, his wife.—Chicago Times.

A Mormon Husband's Miseries.

From a recent sermon by Brigham Young we extract these touching remarks:

Brother George Q. Cannon says the sisters have borne a great deal. So they have, but if they could only stand in the shoes of their husbands, who are good, true, and faithful, they would know that they are by no means free from perplexities. Just fancy a man with two, three or half a dozen of his beloved wives catching him on one side, and before he can take three steps more catching him on the other, and "I want this," "I want that," and "This is not right," "This is not right," and so on; their minds just pulled to pieces. I say if the hair is spared on their heads, they may consider that they have blessed good wives. I have as many wives as any other man, and I keep my hair yet. But as to trials, why, bless your hearts, the man or woman who tries to live according to the Gospel of the Son of God, and at the same time clings to the spirit of the world, has trials and sorrows acute and keen, that too continually.

Decidedly the newest thing in the way of expositions is the one that is now in progress at the North Woolwich Gardens, near London. It is an exhition of beards and mustaches, to compete for certain prizes. Surely it must be an inspiring sight, these hirsuted specimens of manhood standing in a row, each duly ticketed to show his class and number. Of course the judges are ladies,—mature ladies, let us hope, and beyond the years of susceptibility.

The Instinct of Locality.

A short time ago an account was given of a dog that had been carried seven hundred miles somewhere at the West, but not liking the place, alone, guided by a faculty quite unknown to man, he footed his way to his old loved home without making inquiries, consulting a guide-book, or traveling out of the way, at the rate of nearly a hundred miles each day. An old horse, purchased of a farmer in Vermont, many years since, was shipped at Seabrook, Conn., with others, to the West Indies, for grinding cane. A storm occurring in Long Island Sound, the deck horses were washed overboard and supposed to have been lost. The old Vermonter, however, reached land in the darkness of a stormy night, and, finally, was found standing at the barn-door of his old home. The horse had never been far from the town till sold, therefore could not have been familiar with the way. Carrier-pigeons perform feats as swift messengers through the air because they are in a hurry to reach home. However far they may be carried confined in baskets, they invariably speed their way, without resting on the voyage, till they reach the place dear to their affections. In 1819, with a view to ascertain their speed, a pigeon was carried from Antwerp to London, and there liberated. The bird was at its cote, having flown 180 miles in a straight line in just six hours. Horses, mules, dogs, cats, and all the migrating birds, find their way as unerringly as the carrier-pigeon does, but how they do it is beyond our ken. Some imagine birds see telescopically one or two hundred miles, when high in the air, and over tops of mountains. But the theory throws no light upon the movements of the mule that found his home in Brazil, hundreds of miles over a region where man could hardly move, having neither a path to follow nor a companion to lead the way. Science, therefore, has something more to do to clear up this mystery.

Freaks of Lightning.

At the last sitting of the French Academy of Sciences, a letter was read from M. A. Parent, giving an account of the effects of a violent stroke of lightning which fell on the 29th ult., at Troyes (Aube), in a central quarter of the town, with a noise equal to the report of several pieces of artillery. The phenomenon seems to have been confined to the Rue de la Monnaie, where, at No. 37, a young girl who was standing on the threshold of her dwelling, saw a fiery globe, of the size of an orange, fall at her feet, then roll along the street, and disappear. She experienced a violent shock, causing a trembling that did not cease until the following day. The pins in her hair were torn away, as well as all the other metal articles she had about her person. Her father, who was leaning against the iron bars of a window of the next house, was paralzyed for a few seconds, and did not recover from the commotion for several days. At No. 24, same street, in the "Election-house," as it is called, the electric fluid fell on a turret behind the house, pierced a hole through the weather-cock, slid down the roof along the zinc which covered it, got inside by loosening the beams that supported the woodwork, broke through the floor into the lower story, made its way through a hall into the spouts and pipes laid down to the first story; thence passed to the next house, broke into a warehouse where there were some iron stoves, with the usual cast-iron ornaments, such as wreaths, flowers, etc., all of which it faithfully designed on the ceiling with the precision of photography; then melted the wire of a bell, the trace of which it left on the wall, and at length took a fancy to some gilt wooden rods intended for sale and wrapped up in paper. These it enriched with fantastic but elegant designs, and after a few more vagaries, took its leave.

A Wonderful Story.

The Oude (India) Excelsior prints the following story: "Very recently a native, having ornaments on her person worth about 400 or 500 rupees, accompanied by her daughter, who also wore ornaments worth about 200 rupees, alighted from the train at Hurdui, and hired an ekka to convey them to their village. On arriving at a lonely spot about six miles from Hurdui, there being no villages within miles, the ekka drew up at the side of the road, and the driver suddenly demanded the whole of the jewelry to be given to him. On being refused he tied the woman and the girl up to the ekka, and cooly divested them of every article. He then drew a knife with the intention of murdering them, but in the excitement of the moment let the weapon fall into a ditch about three feet deep. He jumped down, and was just in the act of clutching at the knife when a black snake darted from a hole, and fixed its fangs in his hand; knowing the snake to be an extremely venomous one, he fell down almost senseless with terror, and died in a few minutes. The woman and girl remained there about two hours, when, seeing some villagers at a distance, they screamed for assistance, and, on being released, gave information at the nearest thannah. The police came to the spot, and found the corpse of the ekka-driver, and the snake still there. The corpse was taken to the nearest station for an inquest to be held. The snake was blocked in its hole with a large stone, as the police had not the courage to kill it. The ornaments were found tied up in the kummerbund of the corpse, and were restored to their owners. The forgoing facts were related to us by one whose veracity we have no reason to doubt."

New Use for Door-Knobs.

Some people have agreeable ways of amusing themselves in the Southwest. An Austin (Texas) paper tells of a barber living in Lampasas, who ornamented the front door of his shop with a white door-knob. It was the first introduced into that fashionable watering-place. The Horrell gang, after killing Capt. Williams and his men, and being rescued from the Georgetown jail (parenthically remarks the journal referred to), returned to Lampasas, where they go and come unmolested. Spying the white door-knob, they deliberately began to practice at it with their six-shooters—it was such a nice mark—and fairly riddled the knob and the door, and now the barber finds the climate more invigorating on the avenue of our city.

All for Honor—Two Kentucky Fights.

One day last week a novel affair of honor occurred between two gentlemen, living near Water Valley, in this county. Both gentlemen are highly respectable, and are among the bravest men in the State.

It appears that some difficulty having arisen between them, they met and had a regular drawn hand-to-hand battle, when the younger of the two came off victorious, and they separated in good humor, and as friends.

The old gentleman, who has never met with defeat before, booded over the affair until he became dissatisfied, or rather satisfied that if he could make another trial of strength with his opponent he would come off victorious. He went to see him, and frankly told him the state of affairs and that he was not satisfied with the result of their late combat, and wished to renew it, saying that if he was again defeated, he would look upon his opponent as a high-toned, honorable gentleman, and would respect him more than ever.

After expressing a wish not to fight again, as he knew the result would be the same as at first, his opponent finally agreed to the arrangement, also saying that if he were whipped he would respect and esteem him as a friend. Taking a friend each, they repaired to a secluded place and fought until satisfied.

The result was the same as at first, the young man coming off victorious. The young man bound up the wound of the other, while the old gentleman returned the compliment by loaning his friend a shirt. A good dinner was ordered by the winner, and the friends of both parties partook of it with as much zeal and good humor as if nothing had occurred between them. Both gentlemen seemed anxious to conduct the affair honorably, and appeared perfectly satisfied with the result.—Mayfield (Ky.) Democrat.

How Stock Speculators Become Bald-Headed.

Nearly all of the men along the line of Comstock lode are fast becoming bald-headed just above the right ear. A manufacturer of hair-restorer observed that among the first to come to his place for advice were curb-stone brokers; next, dealers and dabblers in stocks generally; finally, mining superintendents and experts and commission brokers in stocks began to call, all displaying bald spots more or less clearly defined an inch or two above the right ear. Taking a hint from observing the class of persons first afflicted, the hair doctor kept close watch about the several bulletin-boards in front of the offices of the stock brokers and narrowly observed the actions of those who came to read the reports. He noticed that each man, after studying the reports a short time, invariably gave his hat a slight shove over to the left and walked off, scratching his head vigorously about two inches above his right ear. After this discovery all was as clear as day to the great hair-doctor. He went home and hung up a sign announcing his ability to cure the "new baldness," which he calls "sympathetic." His treatment is simple and efficacious. His first condition is that the patient shall get out of stocks; second, that he shall be kept out. After this the hair generally starts within a week. In some obstinate cases it is found necessary to put the right arm in a sling in order to correct old habits.—Virginia City Enterprise.

Hens and Eggs.

There is just now in England an effort making to substitute poultry for meat, on account of the high price of the latter. This is found practicable in the country, but in London the cost of the ducks and chickens precludes any idea of economy, as it would in this country in cities, and we are afraid in rural regions also. Yet with our large farms and the ease with which poultry is cared for, especially in Southern latitudes, there is no reason why it should not be abundant and cheap. For want of thought, Americans waste more ground and more opportunities for money-making in ten years than most foreign farmers have in a life-time. In connection with the poultry question an English writer says that if there is one thing more difficult than another to obtain in London, it is fresh eggs; and that if it were well known that any establishment could be depended upon to furnish these, a large profit would be certain. We commend this statement to the independent American citizen. If in New York, for instance, there was a shop where people could be absolutely sure of finding fresh eggs, perfectly pure milk and other country dainties, they would not complain in being asked to pay slightly increased prices. The piquant little description which Mr. Charles Read in "The Simpleton" gives of such a shop and its success is not one impossible to realize.

Ex-President Thiers, in a retrospect of his brief career as head of the French Republic, may at least congratulate himself upon the fact that in the French departments hitherto occupied by the Prussian troops, and which the latter are now evacuating, his name and fame have been kept in honor. As the Prussians retire the liberated citizens throw to the breeze flags bearing incriptions expressive of their sentiments, and among these inscriptions such legends as this, seen in the streets of Epinal, in the Vosges, evacuated on the 30th of July, are not unfrequent: "Honor to Thiers, the liberator of the territory!"

The Nose-Bleed.—A correspondent of the Scientific American says: "The best remedy for bleeding at the nose, as given by Dr. Gleason in one of his lectures, is a vigorous motion of the jaws, as if in the act of mastication. In the case of a child, a wad of paper should be placed in the mouth and the child instructed to chew it hard. Of course an adult does not need the paper. It is the motion of the jaws that stops the flow of blood. This remedy is so very simple that many will feel inclined to laugh at it; but it has never been known to fail in a single instance, even in very severe cases."

S. M. Smith, Secretary of the Illinois State Farmers' Association, says that seven-tenths of the farms of Illinois are mortgaged.

GREAT TIME IN BAXTER SPRINGS.

A Municipal Lead Mine—Wonderful Discoveries of Ore—The Streets Vacated for the Benefit of Miners

[From the Kansas City Times.]

The reported discovery of valuable deposits of lead at Baxter Springs has given rise to many wild exaggerations and unfounded rumors of the fabulous wealth being taken from the streets of that beautiful young city. With a view to satisfying the public craving for reliable information concerning the new discoveries, a special reporter of the Times was instructed to proceed at once to the scene of the excitement and obtain a full and correct report of the condition of affairs at Baxter.

It has been well known to the citizens of Baxter for many years past that lead existed in considerable quantities beneath the town site, and several lodes were opened to the depth of a few feet some years ago, but new discoveries at Lowell, Granby, and at Joplin, drew attention and enterprise away and prevented a development of the Baxter lodes. It remained for a colored boy, named Henry Jackson, a porter at the Cottage Hotel, to make the last and most important discovery of lead. Jackson was crossing Spring Branch ravine at its intersection with Grant street, last Friday morning, when he discovered a number of bright particles of metal shining in the morning sun. The rain of the preceding night had washed a channel down the bank of the creek, exposing a rich deposit of lead. Jackson, with the aid of his pocket-knife, dug out a handful of lead and carried it to the Mayor, H. R. Crowell, who accompanied the negro to the scene of his discovery.

The city soon became agitated by the discovery, and crowds of citizens proceeded to the corner of Council and Grant streets, where the new lode had been opened. It was found that the new lode was an entirely different vein of ore from any previously discovered, running at right angles with the old lodes east and north of the town. Shovels and picks were soon brought into requisition, and prospecting began in earnest. It was found that the vein of ore varied in width from one to three feet, and increased in size as it went down.

A special meeting of the Council was called, and the streets and alleys in the northwest corner of the town, where lead had been discovered, were declared public property, and staked into "mining claims," and an ordinance was passed regulating the opening of mines in the streets of the city.

A general stampede of all the ambitious, unemployed men in town took place toward the newly-staked-out mining claims, and during the first three days thirty shafts were opened and sunk to the depth of about four feet. The "pay dirt" was found in a crevice or seam between layers of limestone. In some places it is pure lead mixed with yellow clay and small gravel; in other places the lead is blended in the rock itself in proportions of 50 per cent. pure metal. The character of the rock is such that it readily yields to the influence of heat, and promises a very rich and abundant yield of pure lead.

Our reporter visited all of the principal shafts and made a careful examination of the work being done and the quality of the ore taken out. In none of the newly opened mines were practical miners found at work, nor did those at work profess to understand the art of taking out ore, only the rudest tools being used and the simplest modes being employed to remove the rock.

In answer to the universally propounded question, "Is there lead at Baxter?" The Times replies as follows: Yes, there is lead in the streets of Baxter, and in quantities that will pay to mine. The prospecting now being done is of such a primative character that it is impossible to say how deep the heaviest vein is from the surface of the street. But the inquirer may be assured of this fact, that it will require more capital to develop these new mines than appears to be found at the disposal of those working in the mines at this time.

An Exciting Scene.

The inhabitants of the Boulevard Pereire, Paris, were witnesses recently of a chase of the most exciting character. A distinguished velocipede rider appears every day on this boulevard and performs remarkable feats in this line of horsemanship. He had just bestridden his bicycle, when cries of "Out of the way! Kill him, kill him!" resounded through the streets. The foot-passengers darted into the houses, closing the doors after them with a crash, and the velocipedist was left alone on the road, along which rushed an enormous dog with staring coat, inflamed eyes, and jaws bathed in foam. The mastiff, which was evidently mad, perceiving the bicycle and its unlucky rider, instantly bounded after it, and a cloud of dust soon concealed the details of the chase. The velocipedist whirled his machine round and round, taking as many turns as a hare, but the horrible brute followed him closely. At length, in despair he darted forward at full speed, when suddenly a cry of alarm burst from the spectators at the windows. The bicycle had broken down and the rider had been thrown senseless to the ground, whilst the dog, gathering up his remaining strength, sprang toward him. But by this time the police had headed the animal, and one of them cut off its fore-paws with one stroke of his sword, just as the furious beast was about to throw himself upon his victim, who soon awoke from his swoon to find himself safe and sound.

Another Cholera Specific.—Velpau's specific against cholera might usefully be brought to public notice at the present time. He said in the Academy of Sciences, when the cholera last visited us: As soon as the slightest diarrhea appears, take six drops of laudanum on a lump of sugar, and continue to take six drops of laudanum on a lump of sugar after successive dejections indicate the diarrhea to be still unchecked. At the same time take injections of starch into which six drops of laudanum have been poured. This was used with great success during the last visitation of the cholera here. Sir Joseph Olliffe and Dr. J. Marion Sims used chlorodyne constantly in their practice.

A Question with Only One Answer.

A young man from the provinces, who was sent to Paris to finish his education, had the misfortune of getting into bad company. He went so far as to wish and say there is no God, God was only a word. After staying several years in the capital, the young man returned to his family. One day he was invited to a respectable house where there was a numerous company. While all were entertaining themselves with news, pleasures and business, two girls, aged respectively 12 and 13, were seated in a bay window reading together. The young man approached them and asked:

"What beautiful romance are you reading so attentively, young ladies?"

"We are reading no romance, sir; we are reading the history of God's chosen people."

"You believe, then, that there is a God?"

Astonished at such a question, the girls looked at each other, the blood mounting to their cheeks.

"And you, sir—do you not believe it?"

"Once I believed it, but after living in Paris, and studying philosophy, mathematics and politics, I am convinced that God is an empty word."

"I, sir, was never in Paris, I have never studied philosophy or mathematics, or all those beautiful things which you know—I only know my catechism; but since you are so learned, and say there is no God, you can easily tell me whence the egg comes?"

"A funny question. Truly the egg comes from the hen."

"And now, sir, whence comes the hen?"

"You know that as well as I do, miss; the hen comes from the egg."

"Which of them existed first, the egg or the hen?"

"I really do not know what you intend with this question and your hen, but yet that which existed first was the hen."

"There is a hen, then, which did not come from an egg?"

"Beg your pardon, miss, I did not take notice that the egg existed first."

"There is, then, an egg which did not come from a hen?"

"Oh! if you—beg pardon—that is—you see—"

"I see, sir, that you do not know whether the egg existed before the hen or the hen before the egg."

"Well, then, I say the hen."

"Very well, here is, then, a hen which did not come from an egg. Tell me, now, who made this first from which all other hens and eggs come?"

"With your hens and eggs, it seems to me you take me for a poultry dealer."

"By no means; I only asked you to tell me whence come the mother of all hens and eggs."

"But for what object?"

"Well, since you do not know, you will permit me to tell you. He who created the first hen, or, as you would rather have it, the first egg, is the same who created the world, and this being we call God. You, who cannot explain the existence of a hen or an egg without God, still wish to maintain to be able to explain the existence of this world without God."

The young man was silent. He quietly took his hat, and, full of shame, departed.

A Delicate Operation.

The Davenport (Iowa) Democrat says that Dr. E. H. Hazen, a few days ago, performed the rare and delicate surgical operation of removing the crystalline lens from the left eye of a Mr. Rhoads, of Muscatine, aged 56. The lens had become opaque, and the eye was practically valueless to him. As this lens lies back of the cornea, iris and aqueous humor, the extreme delicacy of the operation may be imagined. A slight tremor in the hand of the operator, or a slight movement of the patient, might have resulted in the permanent ruin of the eye. Fortunately the operation was highly successful, and, with the adjustment of a glass of the proper focus to the eye, Mr. Rhoads will again have the use of it.

Kentucky Equestrianism.

A Kentucky paper tells a story of a negro, whose mule took fright and ran away with him straight toward a precipice at a point where there is a sheer descent of fifty feet. The mule saw his danger, and stopped suddenly at the very brink, but the shock threw the negro over his head. He didn't fall, however, for just as he was going over the mule's head, he clutched at the rein, and held on to it, and, as the mule sprang back at that instant, he was landed in safety on the bank.

From a microscopical examination of the blood of 143 lunatics, by Dr. H. Sutherland, of London, it appears that the blood of the insane generally contains an excess of the white corpuscles, and that its red corpuscles frequently show no tendency to arrange themselves in rouleaux. The coexistence of these two abnormal characters in the blood indicates, according to Dr. Sutherland, a very low degree of vitality. In ten men suffering from general paralysis, whose blood was found to exhibit one or other or both of these conditions, five died within three months after their blood was examined.

Chickens, dwarfed and scrubby, can yet be seen at nearly all our barn-yards. They are but little above, in appearance, the common crow. It is just as much trouble and expense to raise a chicken of this kind that will weigh two pounds as it is a fine brahma that will weigh from eight to ten pounds. It gives one a poor opinion of the enterprise of the neighborhood to see farmers yet raising scrub chickens.

The Dominion immigration report for 1872 shows that the number of immigrants who entered the Dominion in 1872 was 88,186, of whom 35,578 settled in Canada, and 52,608 came to the States. The Dominion and Provincial Governments assisted many of the immigrants by paying a portion of their passage-money. $261,963 being expended in this way.

Escape of a Convict.

The art of escaping from prison is so fast becoming extinct that it is a relief to find an occasional daring exploit in that way. While the steamer L'Orne, from France, was lying at the port of Melbourn, Victoria, with 500 Communists prisoners on board destined for the penal settlement of New Caledonia, one of the prisoners named Serigne, at dusk got over the side of the vessel, and hanging in the portauvans waited untill 7:30, when, dropping into a collier, he lay concealed among the coals until 9:30. He the tied his pocket book and papers in his hankerchief to keep them dry, and, lowering himself over the side of the lighter, swam to the stern, where a boat was in tow. cutting the rope with his knife, and hanging to the portion of the rope which remained, he drifted into the bay with the boat until about 300 yards from the vessel, when, hearing a cry and thinking an alarm had been given, he loosened his hold on the boat and struck out in the direction of the lights on the Sanbridge shore. After swimming for about three-quarters of an hour, he caught the cable of a vessel and rested there for nearly an hour in a state of exhaustion. He then started again for the shore about midnight, and after half an hour,s swim got safely to land.

NEBRASKA PRODUCTS.

The New York Economist says. "During the period embraced between the years 1865 and 1872, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Missouri, although growing immensely in population and in general productiveness, fell off in their relative yield of wheat; while Minnesota increased its production from 3,000,000 to 15,000,000 bushels; Iowa from 13,700,000 to 20,600,000; Kansas from 200,000 to 2,000,000; and Nebraska from 166,000 to 5,500,000."

The wheat yield of Nebraska then has increased faster than that in any other State. Nor is it surpassed in the yield per acre more than a trifle over one bushel (1.2) by any of our thirty-seven States. The frontiersman's first crop finds a home market at high prices among the white topped wagons, each holding a family, which are always pressing to the front in order to get the first pick of homesteads. South of the Platte, wheat need not be carried far for flouring, for the mill privileges not only on the three Blues but on many of their tributaries make mills follow close on the heels of pioneers. Wheat also forms the bulk of freight exported from Nebraska, whether by rail or steamer. But the favorite crop of most farmers in southern Nebraska is Indian corn. This truly golden grain is the first crop on new breaking. It is sometimes sent with profit to Colifornia, oftener to Salt Lake and Colorado. But it goes east in larger quantities, though a'most always stowed in bags of hogskin and cowhide which have been discovered to hold ten times more than any canvas bags ever woven. High freights also are thus dextrously dodged. Before the close of May 490 cars of cattle had gone east from Nebraska City, this season.

When, a little more than twelve years ago, treason lifted its hydra head in the land, and threatened to blot out from our sacred flag several of its glorious stars; when the whole North arose as one man to defend the best Government the sun ever shone on; when the horrors of a great civil war fell upon our country like a pall; when men rushed at their country's call by thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands from every city and village and farmhouse to fight the battles of liberty; when others sent their first born to the smoke of the battle field, and wives parted with broken hearts from husbands dearer to them than life, and sisters bade adeu for the last time to their soldier brothers, and maidens sent their lovers to the very verge of the perilous edge of battle; when the fires of patriotism burned brightly in every loyal heart; when lives and fortunes were offered up in defence of an imperiled country—then was it not the great Republican party that, unaided and alone, without any admixture of Democrats, rushed to the front of battle? When sorrow brooded over the whole country for that the land was stained with blood, homes desolated, hearts made forever heavy, battlefields dotted with nameless graves, were they not Republican faces alone that stared at us, pale and cold, from out the open graves, and were they not Republican bodies that were lying among the unburied dead on the gory field? And now that peace has smiled once more upon the land over which the old flag waves again with no star absent or dimmed, are not Oakes Ames, and Harlan, and Delano, and the Pattersons, and Caldwell, and Colfax, and Bingham, and Noyes, and Garfield, and Cameron, and Grant and the other Christian Republican statesmen entitled to reap the fruits of the war? Having saved the whole country by their unaded patriotism, are they not entitled to steal half of it And shall they not be thus entitled forever?

There is a body of Christians in Maine calling themselves "Repository Baptists," a schism from the Freewill Baptists. Their distinctive principle is opposition to an educated ministry.—Standard.

—The citizens of South Bend were treated to an unusual sight one day the other week—a man with a ball and chain to his leg, handcuffed around a post, on one of the principal streets, where he stood for an hour or two, the observed of all observers. The man s name is Kelly, a stranger here, says the Tribune, who was fined and sentenced to jail for a crime which shall be nameless here. He was bro't out to work on the streets, but refused to do so—hence his punishment. He took it all with the equanimity of a man who was used to it.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes. which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

BAXTER AND HIS BILL.

The lecture of the Hon. William Baxter, at the Friend's Chapel, last evening, was not a lecture, unless the meaning of the word is shifted, but was a fiery appeal and moving sermon all through. The manner of the gentleman is indicative of his deep convictions in the cause he represents, and his whole nervous energy is thrown into speech and gesture. The characteristic of his speeches in a literary light is a wealth of illustration, a constant succession of forcible anecdotes, bringing conviction to his opinions with the most startling effect. A full attendance of the most thoughtful of the community of all ages anb sexes, gathered in the cosy little church to hear this address on the subject: "What are the duties of professing Christians in relation to the present temperance law?" The use of intoxicating liquors was stated to be the source of pauperism and crime, and solid and standard authorities were cited as testifiers to this well settled fact. It is inimical to the spread of the gospel. Dr. Guthrie is authority for the statement that among prisoners tried at Glasgow, in September, 1848, sixty two had been connected with Sabbath Schools, fifty nine of them having fallen by drunkenness. He spoke of the "Temple Society," which had been in operation forty years, and much good, and of Father Mathews, by whose labors millions had taken the pledge, and poor house and prisons had been emptied for a while. Moral suasion alone is not sufficient but the traffic must be restricted by law. The failure of such agency was shown by reference to other evils, such as prize fights and that moral suasion must be embodied in law. This particular topic was discussed at some length. The leading features of the present temperance law were stated and discussed It is a strict law, and such prevent crime. Restrictive laws suppress intemperance. But they must be applieu—the best of laws when not applied prove valueless, and they can only be enforced when people interest themselves in them. Use this law as you use others against horse stealing, prize fighting, theft, and inform the officers of its violation when you see it broken. Although the law is not all we could ask, yet it is a talent put into our hands—if we use this talent well. more will be given to us. The liquor sellers have combined to break the law, and we must do all we can to organize for its enforcement. Let each church have its committees. and divide the city into wards to sustain the law and see that it is enforced. You should raise funds and prosecute these men who sell liquors. When we come across a man who is violating the law, we put the screws on and punish him. To crush these grog shops, you must act; as Demosthenes said, the germ of eloquence was "action!" The wreckers put out false lights, and the deceived mariners are dashed upon the rocks, and the wreckers reap a rich harvest. So do the grog sellers steal the possessions of their victims. Men can do much, but it is hoped that woman, the reserve pawor now, will some time go to the ballot box and vote this cursed thing down.

As a denomination the United Brethren are intensely hostile to Secret Societies. A revolt is breaking out, however, in opposition and a paper has just been established at Harrisburg Pa., called the Tribune which combats this exclusiveness. Its views can be gained from the following paragraph from its prospectus:

The United Brethren Tribune will advocate the modification of our law on the question of secret societies. It will not be, however, in any sense, the organ or advocate of such societies. We believe they are all unnecessary, and that better methods might be adopted for the accomplishment of the ends they seek, by open undisgnised associations and gatherings, and that some of them are injurious to the spiritual interest of the christian. Nevertheless, we think our law, which excludes all persons connected with what we define secret combinations, whether so or not, even the Sons of Temperance, Good Templers, Trades Unions, Farmer's Granges, Grand Army of the Republic, is unnecessarily severe, brings us into merited disrepute before the more intelligent classes of the country stands as an almost unsurmountable barrier to our entrance into cities, divides and destroyes many of our long established churches, alienates brethren, and contrary to the Bible, and the noblest aspirations of the human soul attempts to put fetters on the conscience and reason of men made in the image of God.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

Western Manners Through French Spectacles.

An exchange is responsible for the following extracts, which gives an idea of a recent publication entitled "Round the World in Eight Days," by Jules Verne, a French author of more imagination than veracity The book is in part a purport of a narrative of events occurring in December last on the Pacific railroad, at a point near Fort Kearney:

The door of the next car opened, and Proctor appeared on the platform, attended by a Yankee of his own stamp as his second. But just as the combatants were about to step from the train, the conductor hurried up, and shouted,

"You can't get off, gentlemen!"

"Why not?" asked the Colonel.

"We are twenty minutes late, and we shall not stop."

"But I am going to fight a duel with this gentleman."

"I am sorry," said the conductor, "but we shall be off at once. There's the bell ringing now."

The train started.

"I'm really very sorry, gentlemen," said the conductor. "Under any other circumstances I should have been happy to oblige you. But, after all. as you have not had time to fight here, why not fight as we go along?"

"That wouldn't be convenient, perhaps, for this gentleman," said the Colonel, in a jeering tone.

"It would be perfectly so," replied Phileas Fogg.

"Well, we are really in America," thought Passepartout, and "the conductor is a gentleman of the first order."

So muttering, he followed his master.

The two combatants, their seconds, and the conductor passed through the cars to the rear of the train. The last car was only occupied by a dozen passengers, whom the conductor politely asked if they would not be so kind as to leave it vacant for a few moments, as two gentlemen had an affair of honor to settle. The passengers granted the request with alacrity, and straight way disappeared on the platform.

The car, which was some fifty feet long, was very convenient for their purpose. The adversaries might march on each other in the aisle. and fire at their ease. Never was a duel more easily arranged. Mr. Fogg and Colonel Proctor, each provided with two six-barreled revolvers, entered the car. The seconds, remaining outside, shut them in. They were to begin firing at the first whistle of the locomotive. After an interval of two minutes, what remained of the two gentlemen would be taken from the car.

Before shots had been exchanged, however this affair is stopped. for a party of Sioux Indians attack the train, jumping upon it, as is their custom, while it is going at full speed, some of them skipping about the roofs of the cars like monkeys, and pistoling the passengers, while others throw the baggage out on the roadside. As for the chief, he takes charge of the engine, which he runs at double the regular rate, so that it may pass Fort Kearney too rapidly to permit of interference by the United States garrison. This, however, is not the most remarkable thing that happens to "Train No. 42."

Just before reaching a station called Medicine Bow, it came to a dead stop, the station master at that point having sent on a signalman to say that the suspension bridge over the rapids was shaky, and would not bear the weight of the train. At this the passengers pour out, swearing at the delay, our friend, Col. Stamp Proctor, of course, making himself very conspicuous. There is much grumbling and wrangling, till at last "the engineer, a true Yankee," suggests a plan which he has known to be successful in other instances

"Gentlemen, perhaps there is a way, after all to get over."

"On the bridge?" asked a passenger.

"On the bridge.'

"With our train?"

"With our train."

Passepartout stopped short, and eagerly listened to the engineer.

"But the bridge is unsafe," urged the conductor.

"No matter," replied Forster; "I think that by putting on the very highest speed we might have a chance of getting over"

"The devil!" muttered Passepartout.

But a number of passengers were at once attracted by the engineer's proposal, and Colonel Proctor was especially delighted, and found the plan a very feasible one. He told stories about engineers leaping their trains over rivers without bridges by putting on full steam; and many of those present avowed themselves of the engineer's mind.

"We have fifty chances out of a hundred of getting over," said one.

"Eighty! ninety!"

Passepartout was astounded.

The engineer's advice is acted upon, which proves to be the best that could have been given under the circumstances. "And they passed over. It was like a flash. No one saw the bridge. The train leaped, so to speak, from one bank to the other, and the engineer could not stop till it had gone five miles beyond the station. But scarcely had the train passed the river when the bridge, already dilapidated, fell with a crash into the rapids of Medicine Bow."

The distinguished colored politicians from Louisiana who have been sent by Kellogg to enlighten the people of the North upon the merits of his spurious Government are doubtless having a good time, but not at their own expense. The Louisiana office holders were assessed to pay the cost of their trip, but they are hardly of the right material to make a very favorable impression upon intelligent men. The most prominent and imposing member of the delegation, Major Gen. Barber, was formerly second steward of the steamer Natchez, and he retained this position after he had attained military honors. The Captain of the Natchez tells a story of the Major General which is worth repeating. Having once been detained for some time at Baton Rouge with his boat on the 4th of July he happened to walk into the pantry which Barber had in charge, and to his surprise found his second steward dressed in full uniform. "Halloa! Major-General," said the Captain, "are you in command of this pantry?" "Yes," replied Barber, respectfully doffing his chapeau. "Well, then, Major-General," said Capt. Leathers, "just deploy these plates and dishes on that table, open fire on that coffee pot, charge bayonets on that roast pig, and wheel your platoons of chairs into line, and in the mean time double-quick that chapeau and epaulettes into your bunk, and put on your carving apron and move upon the enemy with all your arms." As the Captains outranked the Major-General on board the Natchez, these peremptory orders were at once obeyed. The public speeches of the Major-General lead to the conclusion that his true sphere of usefulness would still be found in the pantry which he deserted for politics and military glory. One instance of the brilliant diplomacy that has been exhibited by these Kellogg ambassadors will serve as an illustration of the way in which they are fulfilling their mission. It is deemed necessary that the bankers and capitalists of Wall street shall be impressed with the belief that the financial interests of Louisiana are not likely to suffer under Kelloggs rule, and so one of the ambassadors has proceeded with the gravity of a young owl to publish the statement that the State Government is contesting the legality of six millions of the debt contracted by Warmoth, and hopes to succeed in repudiating it, thus decreasing the rate of taxation. Of course this threat of repudiation is calculated to help Louisiana credit amazingly!

Another Federal office-holder has "defaulted"—that is the accepted euphemism which the monopoly organs employ to indicate what plain people designate as Stealing. This latest office-holding thief is John T. Harper, Collector of Internal Revenue in Springfield District, in this State. The amount of the "swag" with which Harper has got off—for, of course, he was beyond the reach of penalty before the public were allowed to know that he was a thief—is put down as between $50,000 and $300,000. "The cause which induced the defalcation," says the merciful, gilt edged philanthropist and organist, "is the same that is prevailent among men employed in fiduciary capacities—speculation; a use for their own purposes of the funds intrusted to them." But this alleged cause is nothing but the effect of a preceding cause. What the preceding or actual cause of this and a thousand other official thefts is, the honest Elder is careful not to say. To mention that a system which tempts and encourages public fiduciary agents to steal, is the real cause of the enormous amount of stealing now going on, might "hurt the party." It is suggested that Harper has perhaps gone to Iowa to help the Carpenter Rankin thieves keep themselves in office.—Chicago Times.

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, SEPT. 18, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

It cost New York $52,500,000 to run her city government last year....The Fashion stud-farm stables at Trenton, N. J., were burned the other day. Nine valuable horses were consumed, including two road-mares belonging to President Grant. Total loss, $75,000.

A New York telegram says that the amount of bogus securities which the railroad bond forgers expected to negotiate in this country and Europe was $2,000,000, and that $1,000,000 are already on the New York market. Two of the gang, it is said, left for Europe some time since, with a large amount of forged bonds, which are reported to have already been disposed of in the English market....A strange tragedy has just been enacted at Williamsburgh, N. Y. A young lady called on another whose school-mate and most intimate friend she had been for years. This female thereupon murdered her, and, after keeping the body in her bed-room for two days, set fire to the building to destroy the evidence of her guilt. It appears that the motive of the murderess was to obtain a sum of money which she supposed her friend to have upon her person. The murder, and the singular circumstances surrounding it, have produced a profound sensation in Williamsburgh....Titusville, Pa., was visited by a $60,000 fire on the 7th inst.

A large and important meeting of prominent New York merchants was held in that city, last week, to discuss the question of "cheap transportation." The resolutions adopted begin with the organization of an association to be known as the New York Cheap Transportation Association. After alluding to the rapid increase of the agricultural and manufactured produce of the country, the resolutions set forth that the policy of the Government should be to protect the producing interest and commerce from corporations and monopolies, which tend to subvert the rights of the people. Double-track railways, exclusively for freight, are pronounced absolutely necessary, and reform in the management of railways is demanded. The frequent and arbitrary changes in freight rates are denounced and uniform rates demanded. A resolution was also adopted sympathizing with the producers and merchants of the West in their movement to obtain cheaper transportation, and pledging hearty co-operation in all just and reasonable efforts to that end......The most remarkable sale of short-horn cattle ever made in this country or Europe took place at Utica, N. Y., on the 10th inst. The prices paid were enormous. One hundred and eleven head of cattle, comprising the celebrated New York Mills herd, the property of the Hon. Samuel Campbell, were sold at auction for an aggregate sum of $380,890. The Eighth Duchess of Geneva brought the startling price of $40,600. The Tenth Duchess of Geneva sold for $35,000, and $30,600 was given for the First Duchess of Oneida. The average price paid for ten of the Duchess tribe was $21,700 each. This herd was beyond question the most valuable ever got together, and its sale attracted fancy stock-breeders from every part of this country as well as from Europe. The three highest prices were paid by Englishmen.....An important female witness in the Stokes case has been arrested in New York. It is claimed that she picked up and concealed the pistol with which Fisk was trying to shoot Stokes at the time the latter killed him....A Butter and Cheese Exchange was formally opened in New York city last week. Washington.

It is stated that the attempt will be renewed in the next Congress to repeal the Bankrupt act, or to obtain such amendment to the same as shall render its operations more favorable to commercial interests....There is considerable talk in some of the departments of asking Congress to amend the law passed last session abolishing the franking privilege, so that letters on public business, addressed to Government officials, may go through the mails without prepayment of postage....A Washington dispatch says: "The police are looking for the persons who mutilated the body of Beau Hickman. When the undertaker went to the potter's-field to remove the body to the Congressional burial-grounds, he found the legs disjointed at the hips, the head severed from the trunk and skinned, the viscera taken out and removed, with the exception of the heart, which was found in the bushes near by, wrapped in a newspaper. What could be gathered was interred in the cemetery."

The Attorney-General most emphatically denies the published statement that the Government has determined to abandon the prosecution of the Credit Mobilier suits....The Supervising Inspector of Steamboats has hit upon a plan for more effectually bringing to grief such owners of steam vessels as fail to conform to the law for the protection of human life. The plan is, without previous notification or warning, to send special agents of the Bureau into the regular Inspection Districts, so that not only the steamboat companies shall be taken by surprise, but the Inspectors also.

Quartermaster-General Meigs opened bids last week for furnishing tombstones for the national cemeteries. There was a large attendance of bidders from different parts of the country, and the bids ranged from $800,000 to $1,000,000.

The secret agents sent abroad by the Treasury Department, to test by experience the treatment immigrants received from the ocean steamship companies, have returned from Washington. They claim to have detected a number of serious abuses, and will recommend to Congress, in December, the following changes:

First—The establishment of a treaty with England, Germany and France for the joint appointment of a Government agent to travel on every steamship plying between the United States and Europe, and carrying 300 passengers and upward. The agent to be known as such, and to act as mediator when necessary between the captain of the steamer and the emigrants.

Second—That the various lines of railway in this country shall be compelled to run emigrant trains on schedule time, like regular trains, instead of as extras, as at present.

Third—That for every emigrant killed on a railway the company shall pay to the Government for his heirs the sum of $5,000, and in case of maiming, a proportionate sum.

The $15,500,000 awarded to our Government at Geneva, Switzerland, was paid into the United States Treasury on the 9th inst., by Secretary Fish, in one bond. The bond was skillfully printed with a pen, being a fac simile of a printed form. Upon being duly executed, it was photographed, and then sent to Secretary Fish, who is its present custodian. The certificate of deposit, retained by the Secretary of the Treasury, will be framed and preserved among the archives of the Government as a memorial of the amicable settlement of the difference between the two countries. Secretary Richardson invested the money in 5 per cent. registered bonds, to await further action by Congress.

Foreign.

Thursday, the 4th inst., was the anniversary of the proclamation of the French Republic; but on account of the ban pronounced by the MacMahon government, there was no observance of the day in Paris. At Lucerne, in Switzerland, however, ex-President Thiers was waited upon by a number of his fellow-countrymen, to whom he made a speech strongly advocating the preservation of republican institutions....The total force of the Carlists in Spain is put down at 40,000. They are arranging to establish a cannon factory at Tarragona.

The Pope is again announced to be ill....So stern was the repression by the French Government of any attempt to celebrate the anniversary of the establishment of the Republic, that American citizens in Paris were not even permitted to make a complimentary display of the United States flag on that day.....Nicolas Salmeron, President of the Republic of Spain, and all the members of his Ministry, have resigned.

Minister and Historian Motley is convalescent....Emilio Castelar has been elected President of Spain. This young Republic, though only six months old, has had four rulers during its existence. Castelar, before his election, demanded, as conditions upon which he would take the office, that he should be allowed to increase the army, purchase 500,000 rifles, organize the militia, impose a forced loan, suspend the Constitutional guarantees, and be furnished with material and appliances sufficient to overcome both the Carlists and the Intransigente insurgents. The Cortes has granted him these conditions, and, therefore, Castelar takes upon himself the responsibility of crushing out the opposition to the Republic. It remains to be seen whether he is equal to the responsibility....The cholera is raging in Hungary....Five men sent out from Madrid to assassinate Don Carlos have been executed....On the last day of the Vienna Exposition, the fair was thrown open to the public, and was visited by 100,000 people....On the night of the 6th of September a square of buildings in Havana, Cuba, known as the Plaza Vaper was reduced to ashes. Fire broke out simultaneously in four corners of the square, and is supposed to have been the work of incendiaries. Loss estimated at over $8,000,000. It is reported that twenty lives were lost. The scenes around the burning square were exciting and terrible. Parents threw their children from balconies to save them from the flames.

A report comes from Shanghai that the Chinese are planning a massacre of all the Europeans in the interior of the Empire. The provocation which has inflamed them to this bloody design is the refusal of the French Minister to some changes which the Chinese Government wishes made in a treaty....President Castelar begins his administration of Spanish affairs with energy. He has decided to reinforce the Republican forces by calling out 150,000 of the regular army reserve and by making a levy of 500,000 men from the militia, and with these accumulated resources intends to wipe the Carlists and Intransigentes out of existence....San Domingo item: Col Rivas attempted the life of Col. Luperon with a sword. Luperon evaded the blows, drew a revolver, and shot Rivas through the head.

Further particulars of the great conflagration in Havana have been received. The total loss is variously estimated at from $8,000,000 to $8,000,000. The insurance only amounts to $524,000, nearly all in English companies. Owing to the rapidity with which the flames spread, very little property was saved. In less than three hours from the time the fire broke out the entire square was a mass of ruins. Upwards of 2,500 people who occupied the buildings are homeless, and nearly all have lost everything. Great distress prevails among them, and numerous subscriptions have been started in the city for their relief.

The cable reports another accident on the Northeastern railway, of England. Three persons killed and twenty injured....A party of Mormon emigrants, who recently arrived in Paris on their way to America, were notified by the Prefect of Police that if they attempted to hold their religious exercises in public they would be expelled from the city.

The cholera has broken out in Paris....William of Germany will shortly pay a friendly visit to Joseph of Austria....Salmeron, late President of Spain, has been unanimously elected President of the Cortes.

Political.

The Anti-Monopoly party in San Francisco has elected two Senators and twelve Representatives to the Legislature. The returns from the interior indicate that the Anti-Monopolists will have a majority in both houses of the Legislature.

Foote says he never applied for office in his life, and desires no position in the gift of Gen. Grant....The Texas Democrats have nominated Richard Coke for Governor, and R. B. Hubbard for Lieutenant-Governor.

The Maine election came off on the 8th inst. Dingley, Republican, is elected Governor by 12,000 or 15,000 majority. The vote was very light.

The San Francisco Bulletin gives the composition of the newly-elected California Legislature as follows: "Republicans, 44; Independants, 36; Democrats, 40. Sixty-one votes will be required to elect a Senator. The Independents and Republicans together would cast 80 votes. Assuming that some hold-over Republicans will vote for Booth, his strength at the outset would be greater than any other candidate."

The Massachusetts Republican State Convention, at Worcester, nominated Washburn for Governor by acclamation—Butler, recognizing the hopelessness of the contest, having very sensibly withdrawn his name. The balance of the ticket is composed as follows: Lieutenant-Governor, Thomas Talbot; Attorney-General, Charles R. Train; Secretary of State, Oliver Warner; Auditor, Charles Endicott; Treasurer, Charles Adams, Jr. The resolutions condemn the salary-grab, deprecate the practice of interference in State elections on the part of Federal officers, and favor cheap transportation and temperance laws.

General.

News has been had from the Juniata expedition in search of the Polaris. On the 19th of July, Commander Braine was at Holsteinberg, Greenland. He sailed thence to Disco, and will go from there to Upper Navik. Up to the 10th of July nothing has been heard at Disco of the Polaris or her crew.

The late storm on the Nova Scotia coast was by all odds the most fierce and destructive ever experienced on this continent. Additional particulars of the disaster continue to be received. A late Halifax dispatch says: "The loss of property is immense. In Cape Breton those farmers who have lost their barns will have difficulty in saving their crops. It is feared there will be starvation among the fishermen, and it is probable that even among the farmers, who sustained heavy losses by the gale, there will be suffering. The country will not get over it for years. On the Nova Scotia side of the strait of Canso, all the wharves between Port Mulgrave and Sand Point are carried away. Thirty vessels, with all hands, were lost in North Bay alone.....The whole number of Modocs killed during our late unpleasantness with that tribe was exactly four. For every Modoc engaged in the war there were two United States soldiers killed.

The schooner Abbie Bradford, which arrived last week at New Bedford from Hudson Bay, reports the wrecking of two whalers, which went ashore on Marble Island. Fourteen of the crews died on the island from exposure and lack of proper food. Among those who died was Murray D. McConnell, of Jacksonville, Ill.

THE POLARIS.

She is Found to have Sunk off Littleton Island—Her Crew Escaped in Boats Made from the Ship.

The Secretary of the Navy has received the following dispatch from Commander Braine of the Juniata:

United States Steamer Juniata,
St. John's, N. F., Sept. 10.

The Hon. George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.:

The Juniata arrived to-day. Met the Tigress at Upernavik and coaled her. She sailed Aug. 11 for Littleton Island. The Tigress met the Juniata's steam launch, Lieut. DeLong, off Tessnisak, who had been to Cape York in the launch, and returned, at Disco. Met the Tigress again, and coaled her, Aug. 25. Commander Green reports that the camp of the Polaris was found Aug. 14, off Littleton Island, latitude 78 deg. 23 min. north, longitude 73 deg. 46 min. west. The crew of the Polaris were all well. Had gone south two months before in two boats made from the ship. The Polaris sank one month after. The Tigress kept a careful lookout going north and coming south. There were no signs. Stopped at all settlements for news. The crew of the Polaris are probably on board of a whaler from Cape York. The Tigress left Disco Aug. 25 for the Labrador coast, to continue the search so long as coal and season permit.

(Signed) D. L. Braine, Commander, U. S. N.

Littleton Island, referred to, is about 60 miles north of Northumberland Island, where the party rescued from the Polaris supposed they had left her. It is a little south of the life boat depot of Dr. Kane, in 1853. The probability is that the Tyson party were mistaken as to the locality of their separation from the Polaris, and that it was really Littleton Island instead of Northumberland Island. It is hardly possible that, after separation, the Polaris in her disabled condition succeeded in any way in reaching a point 60 miles further north. It is understood orders were sent to Commander Braine to continue the search for the crew of the Polaris.

It is stated that 75 per cent. of cotton factory operatives in England are women and young persons. A Lancashire cotton-spinner shows how small an item of expenses wages form by the statement that he pays $12,000 annually in wages, and from £70,000 to £80,000 for raw material, to say nothing of rent, coal, oil, and many other things.

A fashionable young lady accidentally dropped one of her false eyebrows in her opera-box the other evening, and greatly frightened her beau, who, on seeing it, thought it was his mustache.

THE QUESTION OF THE DAY.

The Attempt of Great Aggregations of Capital to Control the Government in Their Own Interest—The Forms of the Republic to be Retained, but Its Spirit Destroyed—Aims of the Railroad Magnates—Magnificence of the Prize at Stake.

[Extracts from the Great Speech of Gov. Booth, of California, at San Francisco.]

Fellow-citizens: The issues involved in the political canvass of this year are peculiar, and the conditions under which they are to be decided anomalous in American history. We shall err, however, if we suppose these issues and conditions are confined to California; they are common to the people of the United States. Everywhere there is a deep pervading feeling that old things are passing away; that the nation confronts new questions and difficulties—that again the Sphinx's riddle is propounded to us, which we must read or be destroyed. And yet when we come to consider these questions closely we find them new indeed in our history and new in form, but in substance and universal history they are as old as history itself; it is a new phase of the old, old contest between prerogative and personal freedom—between the power of the strong to take and the right of each man to his own. [Applause.]

PARTY TIES RELAXED.

In the presence of new dangers party ties are relaxed. Where they bind together it is rather from social affiliation than the power of political allegiance. From force of habit and personal association, we look to our old political leaders and comrades for guidance and counsel; but pass along the street, take the men as you meet them, listen to their frank avowals, and you will find that the old party discipline, which was wont to marshal its hosts like contending armies, is destroyed. Gather together a representative, intelligent assemblage like this, composed of Republicans and Democrats, poll it, and you will find that on the living questions of the hour, where there are differences of opinion, men no longer differ as Democrats and Republicans, but as men of independent convictions; and those who prefer to remain with old organizations simply feel that for the present there is no where else to go, and hope to accomplish new purposes with old forms. This is not a local, but a general truth, and there is a general feeling that a warfare should cease whose motive and meaning have gone.

REASONS FOR DISINTEGRATION.

It is natural under circumstances like these that men who believe that political parties are simply incorporations for the purpose of paying salaries to directors and dividing offices among stockholders, should begin to inquire, "What man hath done this?" and to look about for some victim for their impotent wrath. Sir, no man hath done it! They might as well seek for the hunter who built his camp-fire on the upper Mississippi, to account for the ice-gorge that comes crashing and grinding down in a spring flood after an April thaw. There are moral forces in society which can no more be controlled by conventions and resolutions than the tempest can be stayed by a proclamation of peace. While parties sincerely represent differences of opinion upon great and living political questions; while they continue the outward embodiments of principles, the representatives of ideas; while they are forces moving openly to the accomplishment of a given result—they never err, may be wrong, but they will live. No desertion of leaders, no betrayal of principles can destroy them or perceptibly abate their strength. When they cease to be these things, and become "a pipe for Fortune's finger to sound what stop she please" on, no man, though he combined in one the leadership of Clay, the eloquence of Webster, the iron will of Jackson, the philosophical prescience of Jefferson, and the moral weight of Washington, can hold them together. An agreement of purpose—genuine—sincere—is as necessary to their cohesion as is the law of gravitation to hold the world in shape, or the hidden force of life to keep corruption from the corporal frame. [Applause.]

PARTIES NOT MANUFACTURED.

Nor can political parties be manufactured to order by joining and dovetailing materials upon a given plan. If they have any value at all, they are living growths, not mechanical forms. In political as in ecclesiastical affairs, the preaching of doctrine precedes organization, and with the acceptance of doctrine the organization arises, we can scarcely see how or when. Yesterday it was not, to-day it is. Yesterday it was a spirit diffusive as the air and as impalpable; to-day it is strength incarnate—embodied power. You need have no fear, my friends, if your convictions are deep, sincere, and truthful, that they will not find form, expression, and triumph. Where two or three are gathered together for a good cause, the all-compelling spirit that organizes, directs, and conquers is also in their midst.

INEQUALITIES THAT RESULT FROM WAR.

There is no lesson enforced by history with more emphasis than that one of the effects of a great war, and especially a civil war, upon a republican government, is to create a strong tendency to a centralization of power, to raise up a ruling class or a governing man. There are many philosophical reasons for this. One is, that success in war depends largely upon secrecy in council and unity in action; and the thoughts of the people become habituated to these conditions, until that is tolerated as custom which was at first accepted as a necessary sacrifice. Another, that great wars generally bring to the surface great leaders. Another, and in our days a still more potent reason, is that war creates great social inequalities, by affording opportunities for the accumulation of gigantic and overshadowing fortunes; and in our days money is power. I do not refer now to the fortunes that are made immediately out of the operations of war, and the vast disbursements of armies; these, indeed, are great, but they are only feeders to the riches realized by money-kings out of the general disturbance of financial laws and accepted values. When gold, as measured by a standard fixed by the Government, for five years fluctuates between par and 280, and all commercial prices are afloat, unsettled, so that no day, no hour, is a criterion for another, the men of money, sense and instinct, the men of coolness, boldness, sagacity, and training, find golden opportunities, and they who are eminent in these qualities make for themselves thrones of gold. We sometimes see in show windows cartoons of "Before and After War." If we could see correctly represented the social conditions of the whole country "before and after the war," we should realize what a vast increase there has been in the inequalities of fortune, to which custom deadens our sense. What was a handsome independence is now scarcely a ticket into the upper gallery, the third tier, of social life. Private fortunes mount up into millions—in two cases approximate a hundred millions—and corporations control revenues which, a few years ago, would have sufficed for a first-class kingdom. This of itself would present a great but insidious danger to the Republic, for every student of history knows that government is but the outward form of what society is the inward spirit. To preserve a republic, there must be a general sense of manly independence, of equality of right, and freedom of personal thought and action. Great accumulations of riches tend to destroy this by creating upon the one hand the feeling of dominance, the arrogance of power, and upon the other a sense of dependence—the servility of want; and there is still another class—would it were smaller!—hybrids in human nature, who are sycophants from the choice of their own slavish and subservient souls. [Immense applause.]

THE OPEN DANGER.

To this insidious disease, which time might develop or cure, there is added an open danger, the bold attempt, stripped now of all disguise, of great aggregations of capital to control the Government in their own interest for purposes that are selfish and corrupt. The forms of the Republic are to be retained, but its spirit destroyed. Like Augustus Cæsar, they prefer the power to the title of King, and are willing we should toy with the semblance while the substance is theirs. This is the danger foreseen with prophetic power by Jackson. What was then a possibility is now a fact; what was then a pigmy, is now a giant

EXPERIENCE OF HISTORY.

If there were no a priori reasons to teach that the tendency to concentrate power was a natural outgrowth of the war, the experience of history would demonstrate the fact. In the times and countries where military power is the highest controlling force, the gravitation is toward successful leaders and chieftains, and the military class; where money is the most active principle it is toward aggregated capital—or, rather, to speak with exactness, toward those men who from disposition and opportunity desire and are able to make the operations of Government tributary to them, so that they shall have the control of all property, whether they claim the right of ownership or not.

OPPORTUNITY OFFERED BY RAILROADS.

The management of the railroad system of the United States, the great method of intercommunication affecting all property and every value, affords an opportunity for this of which history furnishes no parallel.

Do not understand me now to say that the owners or managers of railroads are different from other men, or that they have met together in a conspiracy to do a particular thing, and are methodically proceeding upon a fixed plan. Great social or political changes are seldom or never wrought in that way. Forewarned is forearmed. Even the great Napoleon declared that his life was not governed by a fixed idea, but that occasion furnished opportunity, until he believed that his steps were controlled by fate, and that his footprints marked the path of destiny. Wherever the opportunity of irresponsible power is presented, the man or men, or principle, will not be wanting. That is the one gap in human affairs which is filled as soon as opened. We may want heroes and poets, statesmen, orators and inventors, but in the race of self-seekers the strongest always survive.

CHANGES IN METHODS AND PRINCIPLES OF TRANSPORTATION CAUSED BY RAILROADS.

Before the introduction of railroads, all public highways by land and water were free to all upon the same conditions. The facilities for travel and transportation were insufficient, the methods often crude and imperfect, but the means were free. Exchanges were difficult, but they were not controlled. With the introduction of railroads all this has been changed. The facilities and methods have been improved—exchanges have been made easy, but the freedom is gone. The means are in the hands of a power, and that claims to be, and seems to be, independent of law and public opinion—a power which is often able to make law in defiance of public opinion. It is as easy as it is brutal to say, If you do not like "our" railroads, you can go back to ox-carts and pack-mules. The old order of things has been destroyed by the new. The railroad was built over our highways, through public domain, through private possessions, by right of the highest prerogative of Government—the right to take private property for public use; it was built for public use, for a just, equitable, and necessary public use, and with a full consciousness that it was to destroy the old order of things these grants and concessions were made to it, and it was armed with these prerogatives. It is as easy as it is insulting to say, If you do not like the management of "our" railroads, build others yourselves. The answer is: The men who use railroads are not able to build them; most of them are poor, and those who are not have their means in other pursuits; besides, the probabilities are, you did not build with your money the road you control—the road may have made you rich; your riches did not make the road. [Overwhelming applause.]

APPROVED PLAN OF BUILDING RAILROADS.

For many years it has not been the American fashion for the owners of railroads to put their own money into their construction. If it had been, it would have insured a more conservative and business-like use of that species of property. The favorite plan has been to get grants of land, and loans of credit from the General Government; subscriptions and donations from counties, cities and individuals; and upon the credit of this issue all the bonds that can be put upon the market; make a close estimate as to how much less the road can be built for than the sum of these assets; form a ring; call it—say the Credit Mobilier, or Contract and Finance Company—for the purpose of constructing the road, dividing the bonds that are left, owning the lands, owning and operating the road until the first mortgage becomes due, and graciously allowing the Government to pay principal and interest upon the loan of her credit, while "every tie in the road is the grave of a small stockholder." Under this plan, the only men in the community who are absolutely certain not to contribute any money in the construction of the road are those who own and control it when it is finished. This method requires a certain kind of genius, political influence and power of manipulation, and furnishes one clue to the reason why railroads "interfere in politics." The personal profit upon this enterprise is not a profit upon capital invested, but the result of brain-work—administrative talent they call it—in a particular direction. When the road is built, capital will seek it; but until the whole principle of subsidies is abolished, it will not seek to build it. It is easier, more delightful and more profitable to build with other people's money than with our own.

Again, I do not wish to say that railroad men are more selfish than other men, but that opportunities are offered—of which only the strong can avail themselves—that might make Cæsars of the best, and that no men are moderate enough to be trusted with arbitrary power. When Lord Clive was before a committee of the House of Commons on a charge of having enriched himself by the plunder of India, according to Macauley he justified his acts, "described in vivid language the situation in which his victory had placed him—a great prince dependent on his pleasure, an opulent city afraid of being given up to plunder, wealthy bankers bidding against each other for his smiles, vaults piled with gold and jewels thrown open to him alone—and exclaimed, in conclusion, 'By——, Mr. Chairman, at this moment I stand astonished at my own moderation.'"

MAGNIFICENCE OF THE PRIZE.

To form some idea of the magnificence of the whole prize at stake, let us suppose that the whole railroad system of the United States is under the control of one company, nor is this a violent presumption. When we consider the colossal strides of the New York Central and the Pennsylvania Central toward this result—the latter now owning or operating more than four thousand miles, making thousand-year leases and guaranteeing dividends for thirty generations, and reflect that the owners of the trunk lines control their feeders as though they owned them, it will not seem improbable that the whole system may pass under one general management. Imagine this accomplished, and that the principle that the law cannot fix rates and compel uniformity is established—one company would then have a monopoly of all inland transportation. A, B, C, and D own the coal mines which supply the city of New York. The mines of A are most valuable and nearest to market. He finds to his astonishment that his rivals can undersell him, and the value of his property is destroyed. He learns upon inquiry that, while he pays freight according to the published tariff, B, C, and D have special rates. He complains, and is told that he can haul his coal on carts or pack it on mules. He remonstrates, and is informed that he can build his own railroad. Finally, as a choice between that and bankruptcy, he sells or gives a controlling interest in his mine to the Directors of the "Mammoth Railroad Company."

The same process goes on successively with B, C, and D, and reaches the same result. Then the great "Anthracite Company" is formed, composed of the Directors of the "Mammoth Railroad Company;" a stock of coal is accumulated in the city; winter has come; the Director of the Mammoth looks in the mirror and says to the image he sees there: "Anthracite, we have got to advance your rates!" and the image reflects a smile and a bow; coal advances in the city, but there is no panic. Then some new regulation is established at the mine, which provokes a strike. The rumor goes abroad, "No more coal." Then there are panic and famine prices in the city—murder at the mine—and the poor shiver and freeze over the white ashes in their grates, that Anthracite may swell Mammoth's profits. Some one ventures to say this is wrong—this is monopoly—and the whole brood of parasites that bask in the social sun shine of Mammoth's favor, and eat the crumbs that fall from his table, join in the cry, "He is a Communist! a demegogue! and don't believe in the rights of property! We are comfortable—Mammoth gives us gold for our flattery. 'After us the deluge!'" The sentiment has been heard before—it was on the lips of the courtiers on the eve of the French revolution—and then a whisper brought down the avalanche. [Loud applause.]

The illustration I have instanced might be multiplied until every coal-field in the United States would be under the absolute control of transportation—and coal is the great source of manufacturing power, as it is also the comfort and life of almost every home. You can scarcely imagine a single industry that would not be affected, might not be controlled, by a monopoly of the transportation of coal.

Does the result I have sketched seem an exaggeration? It is neither impracticable nor unprecedented. Do you believe, if you owned a coal mine on the line of the Central Pacific, and the railroad company owned another, that you could compete with them on fair terms in this city? Under such circumstances, would not their arguments to you about election time have an eloquent persuasiveness of more than mortal utterance?

Then suppose the Mammoth turns its attention to wheat. It builds warehouses and elevators. The wheat passing through these can have "special rates," and get into cars with red stars or blue stars, while the refractory farmer finds his in a car without any star, and it never reaches the market in time. If there happen to be an election about that time, and a ticket comes around with a red star or a blue star on it, don't you think the "star-back" would commend itself to the farmer with a magnetism which would require manhood to resist? Then opposition warehouses and elevators become tenantless; other buyers find their "occupation gone," and every pound of wheat pays its toll before it gets to mill. This may seem an unnecessary addition of machinery, as the road could put the additional tariff on the wheat direct; and so it would be in California, where the Directors are the road. It becomes important, however, say in Illinois, when the Directors of the road own the warehouses and elevators, the blue stars and red stars, and a larger body of stockholders own the road, and is one of the ingenious appliances by which the "inside ring" gradually possess themselves of the whole stock. For it often happens that those who most loudly invoke the principle of the sanctity of property act as though they believed that sanctity was a quality which belonged to their property, but not to that of other people—on the principle, I suppose, that to the saintly all things are sanctified and that sinners who do not belong to the ring are altogether ungodly, whose inheritance should be taken away and given to the saints.

The Tiger of the Air.

A few days ago, remarks the Trenton Gazette, we saw two large winged insects fall struggling from the air upon the top of the canvas awning in front of our office window. Upon a closer expection they turned out to be a hornet and a locust. The hornet had stricken its prey as it was flying through the air, and had given it a mortal wound, for it died almost instantly. In a few moments the hornet lugged its rather unwieldy game to the ridge of the canvas, and then sailed slowly and heavily off with it. The hornet appears to be constantly on the alert for the familiar sound of the locust flying through the air, and darts upon and stings its prey with fatal ferocity. When struck the locust utters a short, sharp cry, familiar to those who have witnessed their encounters. The hornet has its nest and rears its young in the earth, each pair having a separate round hole leading from the surface to the den below. To these retreats the hornet bears the dead body of the locust, where it and its young feed upon it. In the yard of Mr. W. G. Cook, in State street, there is a colony of these hornets, the ground being perforated with nearly a hundred holes, each of which is large enough to admit the body of a locust. The earth which the industrious insects excavated in making these nests or retreats forms considerable heaps. In digging down among some of those holes, a workman, a few days ago, found half a peck of dead locusts, which had probably been stowed away for future use.

The Three Friends.

Trust no friend before thou hast tried him, for they abound more at the festal board than at the prison door.

A certain man had three friends; two of them he loved warmly; the other he regarded with indifference, though that one was the truest of his well-wishers. The man was summoned before a tribunal, and though innocent his accusers were bitter against him.

"Who among you," said he, "will go with me and bear witness for me? For my accusers are bitter against me, and the judge is displeased."

The first of his friends at once excused himself from accompanying him on the plea of other business. The second followed him to the door of the tribunal; there he turned back and went his way, through fear of the offended judge. The third, on whom he relied the least, spoke for him, and bore witness to his innocence, so that the judge dismissed and rewarded him.

Man has three friends in this world; how do they demean themselves toward him in the hour of death, when God calls him to judgment? His best beloved friend, gold, is the first to leave him, and accompanies him not. His friends, kinsmen, accompany him to the portal of the grave and then turn back to their own houses. The third, whom he is most neglectful of, is his good works! They alone go with him to the Judge's throne; they stand before him and obtain mercy and grace.

Capt Jack's Drum.

Capt. E. M. Camp, of the Twelfth Infantry, has presented to the California Pioneers the most notable trophy taken from the Modocs during the late campain, being a war drum found at the mouth of Capt. Jack's cave, upon the evacuation of the Lava Beds. The drum was made by using the four sides of a small box, about as large as a candle box—say two feet in length, one foot deep, and about eighteen inches in width. The bottom and cover being removed, a fresh ox hide was drawn tightly over each side, and securely fastened with thongs of the same. On drying, the hide shrank, and the result was a rude, though sonorous drum, which the Modocs say was the only one they had. Before abandoning the instrument, the Indians cut a large hole in each side, thus rendering it almost worthless as a drum. The holes, however, serve to show more clearly the construction of the drum, proving the frame to have been originally intended for other purposes by a more cultivated people. The box is of sawed boards, neatly put together and fastened by eightpenny nails. The Indians utilized it for a peculiar purpose, rendering it an object of especial interest; thus an ordinary candle box becomes a memento of one of the most noteworthy conflicts of modern times.—San Francisco Bulletin.

The Oldest Man in the World.

We copied recently a sketch of Fortune Snow, a colored man near Louisville, Ky., who is said to be one hundred and twenty-four years old, and was styled "the oldest man in America." The Sterling (Ky.) Sentinel now prints the following account of another colored man of that State, who may with safety be called the oldest man in the world. Perhaps the end is not yet:

"Sam Bowles, who lives near the foot of that wonder of nature, Carrington's rock, one of the attractions of that charming resort of summer, the Olympian Springs, in Bath county, is the oldest darkey in the country. Sam is so old that the clock in his rude cabin long ceased ticking off the hours, old Father Time having given up in disgust the job of numbering the hours, days, weeks, months and years that stretch out that old nigger's life a long ways back toward the dying hour of the late Mr. Methuselah, who was said to have been no spring chicken when he handed in his checks. Sam claims to have been the cook on the vessel that brought Christopher Columbus over. He doesn't know his exact age at the time, but thinks he was upward of forty. He was born in Africa, and was presented to Queen Isabella by a Moorish prince who courted her favor.

"He is one of the most remarkable specimens of humanity in existence. He doesn't remember how long he has been blind, but distinctly recollects that the last sight his eyes ever looked upon was that great warrior, Ponce de Leon, kissing an Indian princess behind an angle of the stone fort that eminent military General erected at San Augustine, Fla., and which still stands as a proof of the correctness of the old darkey's memory. His blindness was brought about by his being stung in the eye by a mosquito or an alligator or a buffalo, he doesn't know which, as he was asleep. He lost his last tooth one hundred and fifty years ago, and owing to chronic rheumatism in the gums, he has been compelled to subsist by smelling his victuals.

"Taken altogeter, old Sam Bowles is a curiosity, and we have no doubt of the truth of his story, for he proved it to us on the spot. 'Why, massa,' said he, 'do you see dat dornick out dar?' meaning Carrington's rock. We assured him that we saw it very plainly. 'Well, said he, 'I planted dat dornick when it was no bigger than a warnit (walnut) de day I first settled heah, an' you may know dat's been no little while.' We believed him, and came to the conclusion that he is really older than he claimed to be, for, though no geologist, and never having tended a crop of rocks, we are satisfied that it took substantial old Carrington several thousand years to reach his present imposing proportions. When we suggested that it was that ancient mariner, Admiral Noah, for whom he cooked, he emphatically insisted that it was Columbus, whom, he maintains, was a better sailor in a minute than Noah was in three years' voyage. Not being posted in nautical matters, we gave in to the old darkey's superior knowledge of things pertaining to the sea. He thinks his life has been prolonged by drinking the Olympian waters, the only beverage he uses, a barrel of which Mr. Gill has had hauled over to his cabin regularly every week for about a hundred years."

Brown's Burden.

The Boston Traveller says: "Brown, our insurance friend, was told by his wife on Saturday to be sure and bring home at night something nice to eat. So he purchased a couple of watermelons. Not owning a paper-mill, the dealer could not do them up, and Brown took the market-basket, containing their Sunday dinner, between his teeth, a watermelon under each arm, and started for the cars. First one melon slipped back while the other went forward, and while balancing them by an ingenious system of jerks the basket got swinging and nearly pulled every tooth out of his head. Brown retired to a door-way and readjusted things, and coming out, started on his way, with the consciousness of being late for the train. Oh! how slippery those melons were! They lurched and slid, and rolled and revolved on their axes, until Brown thought they must be alive. Then a man passing by, who saw Brown doubled up, and trying, while half-seated on the sidewalk, to bring equilibrium into play once more, offered to help Brown. So Brown stood up, and the man pushed one melon frontward and the other backward, and everything would have been all right had he not pushed the latter one too far back, so that it slid out from under Brown's arm into a tub of eggs that luckily stood on the sidewalk and prevented the melon from being broken. Brown left it, however, after paying for some dozen eggs, also not taken by him, and started afresh, with but one melon. He was now obliged to run, and presented a truly pitiable sight, as the small children remarked who were fighting over the abandoned fruit. Finally he reached the depot just as the train had started, put the basket on the last platform, tossed the melon on after it, jumped on himself, saw the melon bound down the steps on the other side, and burst on the track, and then went home and told his wife he could not find any decent fruit in the market."

A CORRESPONDENT residing at Santa Barbara, California, sends the following "secret" for starting a balky horse: "Get him to think about something else while starting. One convenient, sure method is to put the hitch-rope around the fore foot, draw the foot forward off from the ground. In a few seconds the horse steps forward to get his foot on the ground, and is in motion. Away he goes. Let him go. Drive with a rein, without blinders, check, and stag-chain. Never worry his mouth when he is in motion."

Jeff. Davis Interviewed.

A reporter of the Memphis Appeal interviewed Mr. Jefferson Davis the other day as to his speech at the White Sulphur Springs. Davis said his speech was then impromptu, and he thought it strange that "a few remarks addressed to a few friends and associates, on a subject upon which between them and myself there could be no diversity of opinion as to the propriety of a historical vindication of the course and conduct of the Southern people in the late war, should be regarded as an address made to the public with any expectation of affecting political opinion. But, waiving all question as to the character of the address, the place where it was made and the circumstances under which it was delivered, what is there in it to justify criticism or excite apprehension of an evil effect upon the efforts of those whose political success I desire? The expression which is usually referred to is that the Southern people have been more cheated than conquered. Now is this true or not? Did not the Congress of the United States, by solemn resolutions, assure the people of the South that there was no purpose to interfere with the institutions of the States? That the object was to preserve the union, and the purposes for which it was ordained and established? Did not the executive (Mr. Lincoln) by proclamation give like assurance to the people of the Southern States? Did not the United States generals commanding the departments encourage the same belief among the people? And did not all this lead to the impression on the part of very many that the war was waged for an abstraction, or at most for the preservation of property in slaves? And was not the consequence frequent desertion in the winter of 1864–65, and were not the people reluctant to furnish commissary supplies for the support of the confederate armies? And was not all this the result of the belief that their material interests and domestic peace might exist as well under one Government as the other? Has the result justified that belief? Is there any well-informed man who will not say, that had the armies known what a surrender would bring, they would and could have continued the struggle, and that the people of the country, as long as they had any food, would have contributed it freely to the support of the armies? And that the contest would have continued until the invader, wearied of what might be regarded as an endless struggle, would have returned, and, in the language of Gen. Scott, have allowed the 'erring sisters to go in peace?'"

In answer to a question regarding the word "cheated," used in his speech, he said:

"Of course the idea conveyed by the word 'cheated' was that the people of the South were deceived by assurances given them by the United States Government, through its officials, into the belief that if they laid down their arms they would be restored to all the advantages and privileges of citizenship which they previously enjoyed. The trials of a long war had made all men desirous of the ease of peace."

Mr. Davis said the Southerners "could have prolonged the war by withdrawing more into the interior, so as to compel the enemy to lengthen his line of communication, and it was the opinion of a soldier now no more, and in whose judgment the greatest reliancee was placed, that in the mountains of Virginia a defensive war could have been continued for twenty years."

A Southern Tragedy.

The Opelousas (La.) Journal, of Aug. 15, is responsible for the following:

"Down in the parish of St. Martin an old widow lady, whose children had all married off and left her alone, had been persuaded to sell her little place and live with them. She sold her land, buildings and improvements one day for $2,000, and received the money in cash on the spot, in her own house, where the act of sale was passed before two witnesses, the number required by law, and who witnessed also the paying of the money. In a short time she was to give possession, but she remained in the house the night following the sale all alone, or with no masculine adult inmates, as was her custom. That night two negro burglars broke into the house and demanded her money or her life. She gave it to them, but begged them to let her have $100, as she owed that amount and wanted to pay the debt, when she would be satisfied. They then ordered her to make some coffee for them to drink. In doing so she bethought herself of the strychnine she had in the house, and quietly dropped it into the pot of steaming coffee, and placed it on the table with cups, spoons and sugar for them to pour out and sweeten to their taste. This they did, and drank in a jolly mood, each one having $93 in his pocket. But in a few minutes the tables were turned. One gave up the ghost where he sat at the table in his chair, the other got up, staggered off a few feet and tumbled over into eternity. The good old lady recovered her money, and on examining the persons of the black, burglarious robbers, they turned out to be the two witnesses to the act of sale, both white men blackened for the occasion—both her neighbors, and one was her cousin."

A Hive of Bees in the Dead-Letter Office.

Among the unmailable matter sent to the Dead-Letter Office a few days ago was a package about ten inches in length by four in width, which, upon being opened, proved to be a small hive of bees. The pine box in which they were inclosed was perforated with twenty-four auger holes, twelve on each side. The bees were in these, each hole having a sponge in it saturated with some kind of saccharine matter for the sustenance of the occupants. These little cells or holes were covered with a fine wire to prevent the escape of the bees, which appeared to be in a good state of preservation, buzzing around in their narrow confines in quite a lively manner. They were evidently sent by some bee dealer to a customer or friend, the package, however, having no mark. What disposition will be made of them remains to be seen.—Washington Chronicle.

The Philosopher's Stone.

One is supriesed to remember how many eminent men have believed in the Philosopher's Stone as a means by which everything could be turned to gold. Roger Bacon believed in its production, and Arnold de Villeneuve professed that he could increase the stone at pleasure. In 1545 Henry VI. granted patents and commissions to find out the Philosopher's Stone, "to enable the king to pay all the debts of the crown in real gold and silver." No gold, of course, was ever made, but the king had a forge or smithy built for practice in Pall Mall, on the site of the first Carlton House. Ripley, the alchemest, wrote on "the twelve gates" leading to the discovery of the stone, in 1470, but he repented his wasted life, and begged all men would burn his books, which were "false and vain." Basil Valentine, the German monk, was of opinion that the metals were compounds of salt, sulphur, and mercury, and that the Philosopher's Stone was composed of the same ingredients. Cornelius Agrippa joined the French alchemists in searching for the stone. Dee and Kelly sought for the stone. Boyle and Sir Isaac Newton joined in a process for "multiplying gold," for which a company was established in London. Leibnitz joined a society of Rosicrucians in Nuremberg, in the pursuit of the Philosopher's Stone. Bergmann, the chemist, relates a number of cases in which gold was supposed to be formed by the use of the Philosopher's Stone; though they were the results of fraud, by secretly introducing into the crucible gold pretended to have been obtained by transmutation. Sometimes crucibles were made with a false bottom, gold or silver being concealed at the real bottom; when heat being applied, the false bottom disappeared, and the gold or silver was found at the bottom of the crucible. Sometimes gold or silver were introduced in charcoal—the hole stopped with wax—or in hollow rods with which the crucible was stirred, the end being closed with wax. A common exhibition was to dip nails in a liquid, and take them out half converted into gold. These nails were one-half gold and one-half iron, the gold being covered with something to conceal its covor, which the liquid removed. However, on the principle that "'tis an ill wind which blows nobody good," some benefits have accrued to mankind from the ancient practice of an art which is now considered a low delusion and imposture. The books of the alchemists show the effects of experiments; and though they were guided by false views, they made most useful researches, and thus laid the foundation of experimental science and modern chemistry. Two centuries ago, Sir Thomas Browne regarded alchemical studies as the cradle of chemistry.

One of the By-Gone Fashions.

It is a little singular how fashions come and go. Many of them at the time appear indispensable, but they noiselessly disappear and others come in their place, and we forget all about them. We were thinking the other day of that fashion which some years ago was more popular than any other, which was in such general use and seemed so fitted to its place, that it is doubtful if it was considered as a freak, any way, but was rather a necessary adjunct of society, which came in with the garment it was displayed on, and was as sure of the future as the garment itself. We refer to the fashion of turning up the pantaloon leg. The young men all did it in those days, and the variety of taste displayed in doing it was edifying to study. It was absolutely essential that the pants should be black, and the boots should be fine in quality with legs gracefully wrinkled. The width of the lap varied considerably, but one inch for the better class, and three inches for plebians appeared to be the standard. Rural people, to whom black doe-skins were not always suitable in absence of pavements, endeavored to incorporate the fashion on Kentucky jeans and light cassimeres, but it was a depressing failure. The white canvas presented no marked contrast to the rest of the leg, and when you saw a case, it made you sad and dissatisfied the rest of the day. There were others who rolled the leg, making a knotty, clumsy affair of it, and it was difficult to tell whether those people should be pointed at with scorn, or merely killed on the spot. In addition to being black it was necessary that the pants should fit rather snug about the boot. Otherwise the lap was not so smooth, and for awhile it was necessary to pin or stitch the lap up to keep it in place. But when it was snug up, and the broad black seam pressed flat, the boot polished, and the heel straight and narrow, it was difficult to imagine anything more comforting and sustaining. If we only had a dollar for every tear of joy we have shed over such sights there is no position of trust and honor we could not have. But the fashion has gone with the years that have passed before, and we watch its retiring form with eyes that are dimmed by emotion.—Danbury News.

A Wonderful Table.

A correspondent of an Eastern journal, now traveling in Russia, sends a description of the novel dining table of the Emperor, now in use in one of the Peterhoff palaces, near St. Petersburg. The table is circular, and is placed on a weighted platform. At the touch of a signal, like the rub of Aladdin's lamp, down goes the table through the floor, a new table loaded with fresh dishes and supplies rises in its place. But this is not all; each dish rests on a weighted disk, the table-cloth being cut with circular openings, one for each plate. If a guest desires a change of plate, he touches a signal at his side, when, presto, his plate disappears and another rises. These mechanical dining tables render the presence of servants quite superfluous. In this country, at the Oneida community, they employ dining tables having the central part made to revolve. Here the goblets, spoons, tea and coffee, castors, pitchers, and other necessary articles of table furniture, are placed; revolving the center piece, the sitter brings before him whatever article may be desired without the intervention of a special waiter. The Russians are evidently in advance of the Yankees in respect to dining tables.

The Cost of Smoking.

To preach to a smoker about the hurtfulness of using tobacco, is like trying to dip water with a sieve; but I have always noticed that, when all other arguments have failed, there is one which will tell on the most obdurate. Begin to talk money, and if the hearer's purse is likely to be affected, you will see his mouth open and his eyes begin to sparkle with excitement, and for this reason I will show the cost of smoking for five years, from which the cost for a life time may be easily reckoned. We will say a young man begins to smoke when he is sixteen, and on an average smokes two cigars per day (which is a very low estimate), and continues until he is twenty-one. Now let us reckon the cost. For the first year he smokes two per day, at a cost of ten cents each, making for the year a sum of $73. Now if instead of spending this money he had put it at interest at the end of the first year, during the next year at six per cent. it would have gained $4.38, which, together with the $73 which he would smoke up, would give him, at the end of the second year, $150.38, which again put at interest, together with the $73 for this year, would amount to the neat little sum of $232.40 at the end of the third year. Again getting the amount and adding $73 for another year, the whole amount is swelled to $319.34, which he puts at interest at the beginning of the fifth year. By reckoning up his bank account at the expiration of the five years he is astonished to find that his cigars have cost him the round sum of $411.50—and this is not all. Smoking as well as chewing creates a thirst which must be satiated. For a time water may do, but the smoker will soon find that the terrible craving for drink cannot be satisfied with water, and therefore to "set himself to rights," he must have a glass or two of cider, and perhaps something stronger. No less than two glasses for each cigar will answer, for which he will pay five cents each, making another twenty cents per day which he will drink, which at the end of the five years will amount to another $411.50—making in all $832—a nice little capital for a young man just starting out in life.

I suppose that all I can say about the filthiness and other inconveniences of this habit will be words thrown away, but after considering this subject, I feel as though I could not lay down the pen without saying a few more words to those who have fallen victims to it.

Having occasion to go down to the village store on a stormy day, as I entered, my nose, mouth, throat and lungs were filled with a cloud of tobacco smoke. The shock which it gave me was so great that I came near being sick, and could not relish my food for several days afterward, while the sickening scent of rank tobacco clung about my clothes for a long time. Now if, besides losing their time, these men could be made to understand what beasts they were making of themselves, and how they were clouding their brains and darkening their intellects with every puff theo took, while every particle of air which they inhaled was mingled with the poisonous fumes of poor tobacco, and every cent of money they paid out for the weed was just so much paid out to insure a shortening of the number of their days, they would throw aside the pipe and hasten home and there set themselves about their business.—Country Gentleman.

The New Infernal Machine.

We mentioned the other day that the French Minister of Marine had sent out a circular warning ship-owners, captains, and insurance agents against the new "infernal machine," intended for the destruction of vessels which, for fraudulent purposes, it is desired to destroy. But for the respectful authority on which the warning was given, the alleged invention might have been regarded as a hoax; and, indeed, we suggested as much. It was no hoax, however, but a grim and horrible fact. The Birmingham Daily Post has seen one of the villainous contrivances. It is an irregularly-shaped piece of metal, about six inches long, by three broad, and two and a half deep; and it is so constructed as exactly to resemble a small block of steam coal. Indeed, the specimen we have is evidently modeled from an actual piece of coal, and it is colored a bright black, so skillfully that on casual inspection it would readily pass muster for coal, and so might be put into the coal bunkers of a vessel without exciting the least suspicion. The interior is hollowed so as to admit of the introduction of a detonating compound, and a mechanical contrivance is arranged in the hollow part so as to insure explosion at a desired moment. We have also an exact description of the materials employed to fill the shell—for such it may be called—but these, for obvious reasons, we decline to publish. There is only one thing satisfactory in reference to this diabolical invention—that it is not of English make.—Exchange.

Obituary of a Western Editor.

Ye editor sat in his rickety chair, as worried as worried could be, for ye devil was grinning before him there, and "Copy!" ye devil, sayed he. Oh! ye editor grabbed his long quill pen, and it sputtered ye ink so free, that his manuscript looked like a war map, when—"Take this," to the devil, said he. He scribbled and scratched through the live-long day, no rest or refreshment had he; for the devil kept constantly coming that way, and howling for more "cop-ee!" Day after day he scissored and wrote, a saying the whole countree; while ye devil kept piping his single note, "A little more outside cop-ee!" And when ye boys in ye newsroom hear the sound of unequal fray, the voice of a blow and a blasphemous word, "He's raisin' the devil!" they say. And oft when a man with a grievance came in, ye editor man to see, he'd turn his back with a word of sin—"Go talk to the devil!" sayed he. And ever and oft, when a "proof" of his work ye proprietor wanted to see, "Ye proof shall be shown by my personal clerk; you must go to the devil," sayed he. And thus he was destined through all his life by this spirit tormented to be; in hunger and poverty, sorrow and strife, always close to ye devil was he. Ye editor died. * * * But ye devil lived on! And the force of life's habits we see, for ye editor's breath no sooner was gone than straight to ye devil went he.

Forests and Freshets.

At the current meeting in Portland of the American Association, Dr. Hough, of Albany, read a paper on the rain-fall and its relation to forests. He had carefully analyzed the returns of the rain-gauge for a term amounting to 2,000 years, and from these he had attempted to deduce a law of secular changes in the fall of water. But the returns did not justify it. They show marked variations from year to year, and reveal great irregularities at many localities, and they also indicate great tendency to drought for years altogether. Dr. Hough strongly reinforces the doctrine of the relation of forets to the flooding of streams, and in so far bears out the argument of the State Commissioners in reference to the preservation of the Adirondack woods. In a cleared country the water flows quickly away to the streams; these are at once at high-water mark, and then a season follows when water is not to be found. The actual effect of the evaporation of rain drops on the leaves, and the chemical action which goes on in the plant is obvious in the humidity and temperature of the atmosphere where trees exist. One can observe this in a casual glance at open fields—the sunburnt look of one which is treeless is in contrast with the fresh and vernal appearance of the inclosure in which clumps of trees are found. Houses shaded by trees are damper than those not so protected. In the driest season, one who walks in the country will notice a sensible change in passing from a treeless waste to the vicinity of a forest or into the forest itself. The necessity of tree-preservation for economic uses cannot be overrated. The supply of lumber is rapidly failing. In Europe the forests are regulated by law, and crops of trees are harvested in rotation and upon a definate and prearranged system. France has altogether 13,226 square miles of protected forest. The code by which they are governed dates from the time of Colbert, who was a master-hand in regulation and State interference. He showed as great wisdom in this code as in any other branch of his system of administration. By the Colbert code, "oaks were not to be felled till ripe, that is, able to prosper another thirty years." The French have carried their system to Algeria, and have already added several rainy days to July and August. In this country, the French system is impossible. The State owns no forests, and the work of preservation and careful husbanding must proceed from the people. One generation will plant for another, and the small sapling of to-day will be a forest monarch fifty or a hundred years hence. No crop would be more valuable; no investment more certain. As Dr. Hough says: "It must come to be understood that a tree or a forest planted is an investment of capital, increasing annually in value as it grows—like money at interest—and worth at any time what it has cost, including the expense of planting and the interest which this money would have earned at the given date." Waste spots should be planted, and the increased value of farms, whose roadsides are lined with trees, should be apparent to all. There is wealth, and health and comfort in the suggestion.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Mile a Minute.

Of the flight of a railroad train at the rate of sixty miles an hour, between Salem and Portland, in Oregon, on the occasion of the recent great fire at Portland, the Evening News, of the latter city, says:

The depots and towns along the road presented a ludicrous appearance. They seemed to be stretched out like a piece of rubber. The depots looked like bricks flying through the air, and telegraph-poles danced the "Highland Fling" to the music of the screaming whistle and the snort of the iron steed. The reins of steam were loosened, and the angry engine trembled as she bounded over the tinkling rails, scarcely touching them. With the speed of lightning, almost, she passed over bridges, around curves, and through deep gorges, hurrying on with her freight of human beings to aid a sister city in her dread affliction. In the short space of eighty-three minutes from the time of leaving the Salem depot the little Capital engine was doing beautiful work in the city of Portland. Although the train started thirty-six minutes behind time, it arrived at its destination thirty minutes ahead of time. Where can such rapid time be equaled? Where was prompter response ever made to a call so many miles away, and so soon answered? But one alone of the many passengers realized the dangers of the situation; the others would have said "Give her more steam," had that been their privilege. We have been told of a laughable incident that happened at Milwaukee. A gentleman who wished to come down in the train was in waiting at the depot, and had stepped out near the platform in order to jump on board as soon as the train started up. While waiting patiently, he turned his eyes up the track and saw something coming. Strange ideas flitted through his mind of death and hereafter. Not having time to reach tall timber, he embraced a large post in the shed, and clung to it for life. As the train shot past his hat was carried almost fifty yards, and his coat tails were both dislocated. As soon as he thought he was safe to loosen his hold, he made a break for home, bareheaded, having come to the conclusion he didn't care to go to Portland anyway.

THE days of summer grow longer as we go northward, and the days of winter shorter. At Hamburg the longest day has seventeen hours, and the shortest seven. At Stockholm the longest has eighteen and a half hours, and the shortest five and a half hours. At St. Petersburgh the longest has nineteen and the shortest five hours. At Finland the longest has twenty-one hours and a half, and the shortest two and a half. At Wanderbus, in Norway, the day lasts from the 21st of May to the 2d of July, the sun not getting below the horizon for the whole of the time, but skirmishing along very close to it in the north. At Spitzenberg the long-day lasts three months and a half.

THE New York Sun has the enormous circulation of 125,000 copies daily, being larger than that of any other daily newspaper on the continent.

Miscellaneous.

JENNY LIND's hair is brown and white. She might "do it up brown" entirely, if she was not one of those who were not born to die.

A MAN in Willimantic lately cut a hen's crop open, scraped out the bits of coal, and sewed it up again, and now she is cackling with her usual good spirits.

ENGLAND has lent to the Government of India the enormous sum of $1,000,000,000, and half as much more is to be called for for railways within the next twenty-five years.

THE increase of real and personal property in Boston this year, notwithstanding the great loss by fire, will be $7,000,000 over that of last year, and the rate of taxation will be $12.80 on $1,000.

THE Supreme Court of New Hampshire has just decided at Concord that railroad companies have no right to grant to any party or parties exclusive privilege to carry express matter over their lines.

THERE are in Paris thirty-two lines of omnibuses, with 665 vehicles and 8,118 horses. In 1872, 108,754,000 fares were collected. The taxes paid to the National and Municipal Government, exceeded 2,000,000 francs.

THE Echo du Nord announces authoritatively that the fortifications of Lille are about to be destroyed and a series of forts erected instead of them at a much greater distance from the city. The lessons taught by the Franco-Prussian war have evidently not been lost.

SPEAKING of a certain agricultural fair, a writer says that it consisted of a calf, a goose, and a pumpkin. It rained so hard the first night that the goose swam off, the calf broke loose and ate the pumpkin, and a thief prowling around stole the calf, and that ended the fair.

A LONDON letter says that at the approaching assemblage of German journalists, to be held at Hamburg, a German paper, which is about to be started at St. Louis, will be represented through a negro gentleman, its proprietor. He is well known as the only black journalist who has yet appeared on the continent of Europe.

SOME interesting archæological discoveries are reported in the mountain regions of Talamanca, in Costa Rica, in the shape of the ruins of three Spanish cities, which existed there 100 years ago. The ruins of an old Spanish fort were also found, with the cannon resting in their places, but all rusty and in a great conditon of decay.

KANSAS in 1860 had a population of 107,000. It now has 500,000 souls. In 1861, there was only $24,000,000 in taxable property. There was in 1871 $108,000,000. In 1861 there were 200 school-houses. There were 2,427 in 1872. In 1860 there was not a mile of railroad, but in 1873 there are 3,000 miles of iron track.

PROF. CHURCH, of Cirencester, the eminent agricultural chemist, announces that sulphate of lime appears to exercise a very remarkable influence in arresting the spread of decay in potatoes affected by the potato disease. In one experiment the salt was dusted over some tubers, partially decayed from this cause, as they were being stowed away. Some months afterward the potatoes were found to have suffered no further injury. A similar trial with powdered lime proved to be much less effective.

Tree Culture.

One of the most interesting papers read before the scientists assembled at the Portland Convention, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean, was that by Prof. Hough, on forest culture. Though the consequences which may be expected to follow the destruction of timber begin to be better and more generally understood in this country, and though the Western pioneer may no longer regard the tree in the light of an enemy, our people are, unfortunately, yet very far from realizing how much their welfare depends on the preservation of their woods and groves. Until the popular mind can be thoroughly enlightened upon the subject, Prof. Hough suggests that the several State Legislatures should take the matter in hand, and not only pass laws to guard the country against being stripped of its forest trees, but to encourage the planting and cultivation of them. For this purpose the Professor proposes the following measures: 1. That all lands mainly valuable for their timber should be withheld from sale, and that the profits netted from the necessary thinning should go to the State. 2. That all lands planted for timber should be exempted from taxation for a limited time. 3. That bounties should be offered to counties, towns and individuals for the greatest number of trees planted and made to thrive. 4. That rail and other roads should be compelled to plant trees by their waysides. 5. That a tree tax, payable in tree-planting or money, be imposed. 6. That the trees by the wayside be protected against injury by adequate penalties. 7. That the elements of the sciences applicable to forest culture be taught in our public schools.

Pay Up.

The Arkansas Statesman, of Jacksonport, in plain prose and threatening verse, thus urges delinquents to pay up: "We have several hundred dollars due us for subscriptions, and we want it. We are out of meat, money and other things. We are out at elbow. We are out of patience, and seriously contemplate running our face for about 200 postal cards, with which to remind those who owe us. Pay up.

"To avoid proceedings unpleasant,
We wish you would pay what is due;
If you do you'll oblige us at present;
If you don't then we'll oblige you.

"Persistently yours."

DR. REID, the celebrated medical writer, was requested by a lady of literary eminence to call at her house. "Be sure you recollect the address," said she, as she quitted the room, "No. 1 Chesterfield street." "Madame," said the Doctor, "I am too great an admirer of politeness not to remember Chesterfield, and, I fear, too selfish ever to forget number one."

The Governor of South Carolina spends $40,000 a year. He probably pays too much attention to what the Governor of North Carolina has to say on the subject of refreshment.

Ajax defying the lightning, the bull on the bridge defying the locomotive, and the Republican party defying the farmer's Granges, will hereafter be regarded as companion pictures.

John T. Harper, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Eighth District in Illinois, is $110,000 short in his accounts. The defaulter has tendered his resignation. He wasn't a "rebel Democrat."

* * *

The Crown Point Register seems troubled about the Democracy and the Granges. It does seem strange that the Granges should gobble up the Democracy. We are thankful that the Register has called our attention to the fact.

* * *

Gen. Butler, finding that he stood no possible chance for the nomination for Governor in the Massachusetts Republican State Convention, withdrew his name from the convention, and gave the nomination to Gov. Washburn. Exit Butler.

* * *

The Farmer's conventions, everywhere, pass strong resolutions denouncing monopolies, protective tariffs, salary grabbing, and speculation and fraud by men in high places. Who are these dishonest men in high places?

* * *

The salary account of Senator Morton, from March 4th to September 4th, stands. Oliver P. Morton, six months' pay, for services not rendered, $3,750, which has been paid to him in installments of $925.00 a month. Has Morton made any deductions in these monthly payments?

* * *

Poor Ben Butler! He made a gallant, a desperate fight; but the staid old Massachusetts gentlemen were too much for him. He is now a dead cock in the pit. Buffoonery has met with a merited rebuke. For the sake of political morality let us all be thankful that this political desperado has been laid on the shelf.

The recent election in California has resulted in favor of the anti-Monopoly ticket. Both the Republican and Democratic tickets were charged with complicity with the Railroad tyranny in that State, and the Republican Governor, Booth, took the field against both and for the anti-monopoly ticket. If the Republican ticket was so complicated, the Governor did just right.

The Ligonier Banner says that Sheriff Hough and his family had a lively tussle with two prisoners wh attempted to escape from the county jail last Sunday morning. Mr. H had opened the door of a cell in which three prisoners were confined, when two of them made a rush for the door. The first was caught by the Sheriff and, with the help of his wife and daughter who came to his assistance, prevented from leaving the cell. The other succeeded in escaping thro' the door into an adjoining room, but here he was met by the Sheriff's boys, one of whom, Ben, by a well directed blow with a club brought the prisoner to the floor. Just as the man had regained his feet assistance came from the Bradley House and the prisoners were soon again securely locked up in their cell from which it is not likely they will escape, except by due process of law.

Two terrible disasters were reported last Tuesday one by sea and anothor by land. The propeller Ironsides, one of the large Engleman steamers, foundered in lake Michigan, off Grand Haven, yesterday. She had on board nearly fifty people, passengers and crew, of whom half are known or supposed, to be lost. Fourteen dead bodies have already been recovered, and boats are still missing. The other disaster occurred on the Detroit & Milwaukee, Railroad. An eastern bound train was ditched and thirteen coaches filled with passengers were wrecked. Twenty-five lives are reported sacrificed in the disaster, and many more are wounded. The extent of the loss cannot be ascertained until to-morrow.

A "BUSTED" BALLOON

New York, Sept. 15.—An immense crowd visited the capitoline ground, Brooklyn, this evening to witness the departure of the big balloon of Europe. The process of inflation commenced at an early hour this morning and continued steadily until ten minutes past four o'clock this evening when the balloon suddenly swayed to the north, ripped half way around with a great tearing sound, and fell flat upon the ground. The immense volume of gas which had been pumped into it nearly four hundred thousand feet, escaped at the same moment, nearly suffocating those who stood on the inside. Inspector Falk Mr. Goodsell and Police Commissioner Briggs, had but an instant before shifted their positions to the eastward, and thus escaped being buried in netting and canvass. The crowd made a general rush over the ropes, with the intention of tearing up the canvass into small pieces and carrying them off as momentoes, but a strong force of police on the ground charged and drove them back. Mr. Stiner, who had contracted to fill the balloon, said it would be all folly to attempt another inflation, as the bag was not made of proper material, so the enterprise is abandoned for the present.

YANKTON, D. T., Sept. 12.—Last night an altercation occured between Gen. McCook, Secretary of Dacotah, and P. P. Wintermut, a banker of this city, in a billiard parlor at the St. Charles Hotel, during which Wintermut used insulting language, which was promptly resented by the General who gave him a thrashing. Wintermut was washing the blood from his face, and remarked to the bystanders that though McCook could whip him, he could shoot, and immediately went five blocks, got a pistol and returned. A railroad meeting was in session in the hotel at the time. Wintermut entered, and McCook, unaware of his presence, also entered, when he rose, and approaching him, fired the pistol, the shot taking effect in the left breast. The General grappled him. The second shot was fired, when Wintermut was thrown to the floor. During the struggle two shots were fired, one of which slightly wounded a bystander. Only one shot took effect, which proved fatal. The General lingered till this morning, when he expired. He was fully conscious to the last, and died like a brave man. Wintermut is under arrest. The city is shrouded in gloom. Flags are at half-mast. One time it was feared that Wintermut would be lynched, but cooler council prevailed. The body is dressed in the uniform of a General, which he wore during the war. The coffin is draped in the United States flag, and a large concourse of citizens will escort the body to the depot, from whence it will go by a special train to his friends in the East, accompanied by Gov. Burbank and others.

It is said that a short time since Senator Cameron (republican salary grabber) and Congressmen Samuel J. Randall (democratic salary grabber) held a conference at Bedford Springs to enter into an arrangement by which both parties of the Keystone State were to ignore the salary grab. Simon usually manipulates his party to suit himself, but we are happy to say that the Democracy, at their Wilkesbarre convention, rebuked Randall & Co most handsomely. That action makes usfeel proud of democracy.—Banner.

* * *

"We happen to know Gov. Morton. We were with him in republican council and caucuses through the war, and conceding to him the most eminent abilities, if you can get a more thorough political trickster than he is you will have to find him among the "Tammany thieves" of New York, or the "custom house ring" under Murphy. Gen. Butler exposed him on this salary swindle. Morton was the first to declare that if they did ont increase their salaries substantially he would oppose it. The higher it was, the greater the grab, the better it would please him.—But it met with such a storm of indignation from the people that he wavered up to within a few days as to what he should do with his ill gotten gains.—He wanted to pocket the back pay, but was afraid of the people. He does not condemn it for fear of Butler, Carpenter and Grant—for Morton wants to be the republican candidate for President, hence his trimming between the people and the leaders of the party."—Goshen Dem.

If Billy Williams did what he said, viz Bribed every Republican editor in the District, and then took the five thousand dollars back pay, to get even, shows that the Honorable Representative is approachable from more than one point leading to corruption. To bribe, or to offer a bribe, is an offence that should be punishable as well as stealing. If Williams lied in the first instance, he certainly did not in the second.—Warsaw Union.

These frosty mornings have nipped the corn in some parts.

Oh don't a nice warm stove feel good these cool mornings?

Look out for grand wedding, on the 25th of this month.

The town is crowded with people this week, attending court.

Attorney Schell, of Fort Wayne, gave us a call yesterday.

The elevator on the Eel River railroad at this place, is almost completed.

All those who are indebted to this paper, will please call around and pay up.

The work on the foundation of the Cool building has commenced. It is to be completed by the first of November.

Circuit Court is in session, Judge Tously presiding. A large dockit will no doubt make this a long session.

A telegram received here last Monday, announced the death of the wife of Prest. P. B. Loomis, of the Saginaw road.

The two horse thieves, Smith and McClellan, were sentenced to two years and a half in the Penitentiary, yesterday.

A Sunday School picnic will be held in the grove south of Corunna one week from to-day. A good time is anticipated.

The crossing of the Eel river road was put in across the Saginaw track last Friday. It is a handsome piece of work.

From present indications the crop of hickory nuts and walnuts will be large, giving exercise and employment to good little boys and girls.

Col. W. C. McGonigal of the Angola Republican, came down last Friday to see the crossing put in. None of the editors Press were present.

There was a fair attendance at the picnic last Saturday, and with singing and swinging, playing and eating, the little folks all enjoyed themselves.

The sudden death of Miss Smith, at Waterloo, last week, is so shrouded in mystery that the public are far from being satisfied. Something rotten in Denmark.

We warn our friends in the country to keep a sharp look out for burglars, well organized bands of depredators are roving around, stealing all they can lay their hands on.

Fresh Oysters.—The "Central" grocery have received fresh oysters, the first of the season, direct from the east. They are sweet and luscious, and are a greater luxury than ever.

Our friend Clifford, at Waterloo, has his billiard hall furnished up in good style, and everything convenient and pleasant. Those who enjoy a game in a quiet, orderly place, will find this a good point.

Wanted.—Three or four good carpenters. The highest wages paid to No. 1 hands. None but good hands employed. Apply to the undersigned, Auburn, Ind.

A new passenger tariff arrangement has recently gone into effect on the Lake Shore road, by which persons can purchase tickets from one point to another and return, good for seven days, at about 20 per cent. discount on full rates.

Cowles, of the Lent Hotel, rejoiceth. Fortune has been good to him. A fine boy of nearly a stone's weight, several days ago. The little landlord called for a cigar the first thing, and that not being just the thing, a pipe was furnished.

We are obliged to the officers of the Noble county fair for a complimentary. The fair will be held on the 23 to 26 of September, 1873. Also to C. B. Squires. Esq., Secretary of the Defiance county fair, which is to be held the same week. Brick Pomeroy is to deliver an address at this fair.

Our fellow townsman, A. S. Wells, him with the curly locks and dimple chin, boasts of an eleven pounder of the female persuasion. The little stranger made its appearance last Friday.

Dr. Spooner glories in a ten pound boy, now over a week old, and also H. Wood, a few weeks ago. There arrivals are becoming numerous and we must either enlarge the town, or "shtop the whole tam pisness."

"Sunday Schools and Sunday School workers have long needed a small music book, enough of excellent music to last a year, at little cost. We are glad to see that D. H. Baldwin & Co, of Cincinnati, have just published the very thing so long wanted. It is called "Gems of Praise," and has 34 pages. Music good and mostly new. Price 5 cents, or 6 cents postpaid, and $5 per hundred.

Three of the Ku-Klux concerned in the murder of a colored man named Owen Wilson, near Frankfort, Kentucky, were pursued to Noble county, last Monday, and from thence to this, when one of them was captured. He was taken south on Tuesday, and will doubtless soon have a hearing, and be strung up as he should be, if he is guilty. The other two are being pursued. The officer in charge would not tell us much, but we managed to get the above without his being aware of it.

H. P. Colgrove, of Waterloo, it is reported has decamped, leaving quite a number of debts unpaid, many of them debts of honor. He borrowed money here and there, promising to pay in a few days, knowing at the time that he would be absent when the time come to pay. Several of the citizens are minus sums varying from $150 down to $25. The whole thing seems to be a put-up job, a swindling game.

Those of our subscribers who have been getting their paper at the Courier Office, will hereafter find them at Martin's drug store on Main Street, next to Chas. Klotz' Store.

Personal.—Our popular and genial friend, John Stutzenberger, Esq., now traveling for the large and extensive wholesale house of Koch & Goodhart, of Cleveland, Ohio, gave us a call last Tuesday. The popularity of the house, with the extended acquaintance which John enjoys in this Section, are two essentials in the wholesale business that surely fail of meeting with success. John has the push and enterprise, that suavity of manners that are sure to win.

Dedication.

The dedication of the new Odd Fellows Hall at this place, is to come off on the 15th of October, when it is expected to have the greatest time ever held in Auburn. We want to see a large number of the brethren present from abroad, and we hope our exchanges will make a note of the dedication. Ample arrangements will be made for the accommodation of all.

Vodermark & Sons, the extensive Boot and Shoe merchants of Fort Wayne, have established a branch of their business at this place in the new store room of the Odd Fellows building. Auburn may pride herself upon the acquisition of such a firm as this, as the large and extended reputation which they enjoy through this part of the State, is sufficient guarantee, that they are gentlemen of the best character, with large experience, and in the enjoyment of the confidence of the people at large. We may now flatter ourselves that their branch store here, will be a feature of our town, stocked with the very best goods, and in such endless variety as to defy competition. Having their extensive wholesale department at Fort Wayne, within easy reach, they will have every facility for keeping up a line of goods not excelled in that city. We wish them every success, and hope that the large trade weekly going to Fort Wayne, will be attracted to this point.

A Sad Affair.

The startling intelligence came to us last Monday that Judge E. Randall, of Avilla, died suddenly at his residence on Sabbath last, from an over-dose of Laudanum. We are informed that a Dr. Friac- of that place, was called in to attend the Judge who was sick, and that he gave him a dose of laudanum, which caused his death.

Judge Randall was born may 18th, 1809. He came to this State in 1836 and entered the farm where he lately resided, upon which he remained until the time of his death. Mr. R. was a genial, clever and accommodating gentleman, of a jovial disposition, and with a big heart, always in the right place. A large circle of friends will miss the pleasant old gentleman, and many regrets will follow him to his last resting place.

West Liberty, Iowa,
Sept. 12th, 1873.

Ed. Courier:—Thinking it would be of some interest to the readers of your valuable paper, and being a resident of your county, having gone west on a visit, I thought I would give your many readers a small sketch of the west. After traveling through the State of Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, I attended the State Fair in this State, it being one of the best I ever saw. The stock, in general, being excellent, the short-horned Durham being the best that was exhibited. The crops in this State are good except the apples, which is a failure, owing to the cold weather last winter. it has frozen the most of the trees. As to political matters, the Republican party is about dead. Here, they have organized a new party called the "Grangers," which is taking the lead. Let us stand by our flag and we will succeed by and by.

Yours Truly,
John Harvey.

Fire.

Last Tuesday night about twelve o'clock a fire was discovered in the steam saw mill of T. A. Clark, east of the Court House, and in a few minutes the whole was enveloped in flames, and totally destroyed with contents. There is no knowing how the fire originated. Mr. Clark visited the mill about nine o'clock and left everything as safe as usual, as he thought. There has been evidence, however, that parties have visited the place at times, as bottles have been found on several mornings, indicating that it was resorted to for shelter. The total loss will be nearly $4.000, a sum that but few, if any, in this neighborhood can afford to loose, let-alone a poor man like Mr Clark. He is indefatigable, and takes the loss cooly, and will rebuild on another site immediately.

Would it not be a good time to suggest to our citizens the propriety of securing some means to fight the fiery element. We have mentioned this before, but as every body was busy, they did not have time to think about it. The late fire, we hope will bring it to their attention again. We ought to have an engine of some kind, as in a fire like Tuesday night good service could have been done. It would be well, to organize a hook and ladder company. the out fit of which will cost but little Let an effort be made now to give us some means to assist in the saving of property from fire.

Suicide of the City Clerk of Fort Wayne.

At last has occured one of those unaccountable acts of miserable humanity that seemed to us, but a short time ago, as inevitable, not from a natural disposition to err, but from the crushing out of all that is desirable in life, by those who should have been instrumental in fanning into a new and brighter flame, that beacon light, which guides us to happiness and contentment.

On Sunday morning, ere the dawn had proclaimed the sacredness of the day, a fellow being, with impulses and promptings like our own, in the prime of manhood, but crushed and bleeding with the inhumanity surrounding him, calmly, even gaily, prepares for that act of rashness, which shall pass him to that bourne from which none return. In the deep solitude of the night, with not a friendly hand to stay, or tongue to implore, all alone with his maker, he prefers a violent death rather than a continuance of the pent up hell that is burning out his life by inches.

The horrible details of the suicide of Sam. P. Freeman, the City Clerk of Fort Wayne, was given in the daily papers of last Monday, the sad affair taking place on Sabbath morning between 1 and 2 o'clock. There is no question but that Mr. F. was driven to this, desperate act by his great domestic difficulty.

Our acquaintance with Mr. Freeman commenced in 1868, while he was city editor of the Daily Sentinel. We succeeded him in this position after he became city clerk, and our relations were of the most intimate character. He was one of those genial, rollicking fellows, always full of life and fun, and ever ready to do a good turn for his friends. Jovial and polite, he became very popular, and was three times elected to the city clerkship, the duties of which he discharged with integrity and fidelity, although charges of corruption were made against him.

He married the eldest daughter of Wm. Lytle, and after his father-in-law left the city, he took up his residence with his mother-in-law, and family, and from that moment dates the great domestic difficulty which was the prime cause of the suicide.

About three weeks ago, he came to Auburn, and remained with us a few days, during which time we learned the condition of his family matters. He loved his wife and children with a fervent devotion, and we found him at times almost distracted, and he would tell us with the tears coursing down his cheeks about his wife and little ones, and generally close up by saying it would drive him crazy. While here his wife applied for a divorce, and he returned to the city to make an effort to compromise. The following agreement was finally entered into.

Mr. Freeman was to abstain entirely from the use of intoxicating liquors; to act quietly and respectfully about his home to occupy a separate apartment, and not to visit the room of his wife and children without special invitation; to eat his meals with the family and be treated as a member, of the family, having his washing done, etc. He also pledged himself to provide for his wife and family. The children were to be allowed to see him at reasonable times when he or they desired it.

Mrs. F. on her part, pledged herself not to renew proceedings for divorce so long as Mr. F. kept his part of the compact.

In accordance with the above agreement, things have gone along until last Saturday. Mr. F. having abstained totally, in the meantime, from the use of intoxicating liquors, and as far as known to the public, kept all of his pledges.

Mr. Freeman was served with a notice that proceedings for divorce had been resumed, and that an application would be made in the Circuit Court for an order restraining him from entering the West Berry street house, and ordering him to provide the means for the prosecution of the suit by his wife.

It seems from this statement which we take from the Gazette that the agreement was first broken by his wife.

On Saturday night, a little before 1 o'clock, Mr. Freeman went to his home and proceeded to the door of his wife's room, where he said, "good bye, Lib," and then went directly to his room. He was heard to make some noise about the room as if engaged in moving furniture around, and Mr. Lytle went to his door, asking him to keep quiet, as the other inmates of the house desired to sleep. A few moments afterwards a rattling was heard against the lower shutters of the house and Mrs. Lytle and her son Charles went out of the front door and around the yard to see the cause. They discovered Mr. Freeman's body hanging from the upper window and against the shutters, with a rope around his neck.

A strange part is the action of these two persons when they saw the body hanging against the house. No attempt was made to immediately cut down the body and make an effort at resuscitation. One went to the police station and another to a neighbor, and when the chief of police arrived and the body cut down, life was extinct. It is said that his neck was broken, but there is also a denial to this statement.

While the deceased exculpates his wife, he charges everything upon Mrs. Lytle and her son Charles. He left the following messages:

TO HIS FATHER.

S. C. Freeman—

Tell Mike you want those notes in safe.

Perhaps the Lytles have taken them. I am almost dead. I cannot live much longer. May the curses of God Almighty fall on the family of my wife.

Sam

You take posession of all my personal effects, and pay debts with same, I have not seen my children for one week from to day. This is Saturday, September 14, 1873. Sam.

TO HIS WIFE.

Lizzie—You have thought more of your brother than you have of me. Let him support you. In the hot regions below he will come and having gone there before him, I will have the advantage. I'll have the back seat and him and your father the front, and won't I rejoice, you bet.

Sam.

Lizzie—I love you better than death. You have not been what you should have been to me, but for all that I forgive you. I hope and trust you will see the errors of your ways and be a Christian, and not, like all the rest, a hypocrite. Farewell forever. I'll not see you in heaven, but I expect to see some of your blood-relations in h—l, the place where I am going.

Sam.

TO H'S SISTER.

Dear Sister Frank—After I am dead tell all about that bolt of muslin: also, that $5.00. I am in your debt, but I am tired of life. I cannot live longer. Kiss my babies for me, yourself and babies.

Sam.

TO THE PUBLIC.

I have endeavored to do my duty towards my fellow men, my wife, family and Bill Lytle's family. To commence with, I paid Charles M. Lytles fine when he was arrested * * * $30. Trip to Kansas for C. M. Lytle's * * * * $50.

If the Lytle family have not stolen into my safe, there is over $1,200 in notes against William Lytle.

Kiss my babies, Lizzie. I love you better than death. I am not afraid to meet death. I have faced it too often on the field of carnage to be afraid of a small rope that can whirl me into eternity.

All I have to say to Mrs. Lytle is this: May the grass refuse to grow over your grave, may Bill Lytle's creditors ever harass you, may Heaven refuse you a resting place and hell find you the seat you deserve.

Sam. Freeman.

I am not crazy, but if you (the public) had done for your mother-in law what I have done for her and her pauper children, you would not blame me.

And how will the hearts beat now, that have driven to desparation, as promising a young man, as faithful a friend, as genial a companion, as one could desire to meet. While Mr. Freeman was at this place suffering all the torments of his abandonment, a lady who was visiting here at the same time, was commissioned on her return the next day to visit his wife, and represent the true state of his sufferings. Though somewhat averse to the office, on personal grounds, she promptly filled her delicate mission, and related in sympathetic tone, of the cries she had heard during the night for her and the children, of the tears and groans, and the sorrowings of the unhappy father and husband. When the lady had told all, enough God knows to have wrung an affectionate heart, the only reply she got was, "Is that all?"

But no more shall this want of affection chill the heart or cause the tears to flow. Poor Sam has gone down into his narrow home of clay, violently it is true, but without, we trust the burden of his woe, to sleep the sleep that knows no waking, and we hope that on the last great day, the great giver of all good gifts will show more mercy than that which was meted out to him here below.

MARRIAGES.

By Rev. W. B. Sando, at the Reform parsonage, Sept. 4th. 1873, Mr. PHILIP GRUBB, to Miss MARGRATE J. BLED.

THE DEVIL OUTDONE.

Old Nick came up to the earth one day,
And into old Washington wended his way,
And having some hours to spend for calls,
He thought he would visit our national halls,
On arriving there he crossed the sill
As discussion was hot on the Salary bill.

Now Old Nick, as everybody knows,
Has power to change both himself and clothes,
So, seeing a Senator's vacant chair,
Presto, change! and he was there!
And he said, as his eyes o'er the assembly ran,
"Wouldn't I make a splendid Congressman?"

The bill was read, and the devil sat there,
Tilted back in his easy chair,
With no particular interest in it,
Till there came a pause of about one minute;
And in a voice that was full of dread
The "back action" clause of the bill was read.

Old Nick sat up with interest now,
To see what the honorable (?) body would do.
"For surely," said he, "they haven't sunk so low,
That they can pass that bill clear through;
It surely must be some hideous joke,
Or my imps have overdone their work."

The bill was read and the ayes were called,
And the devil sat there like one appalled;
And the basest thing which he ever saw
Was this wholesale theft under the guise of law.
"To look any further there is no use,
For all mean things this beats the deuce."

"For thousands of years I've wandered 'round
Trying to see if there could be found
In the universe a lower level
Than that which is occupied by the devil!
My search was fruitless by sea and land
Till I met an American Congressman.

"If men like these are to Congress sent I'll run my chances for President."
Old Nick left town that very day,
But he was heard to mutter as he passed away:
"I'll let that 'Forty-second' alone,
For if I don't they'll steal my throne!"

WITHOUT ANY COURTING.

Peter Patterson was ill—at least he thought so, and was depressed; he had headaches, and so hated the dusty street, in which the summer heat burnt and the summer sun shone before the green leaves had draped the streets, and the squares of grass and wisteria vines and plotted geraniums which have come to be so blessedly popular in New York, lent its summer's freshness.

"What shall I do, doctor?" he said to the white-headed old physician. "You say nothing ails me, but I can tell what my feelings are better than you can. I know I shall be down with something soon. I rode in a car with a dozen dirty children, the other day—going to the small-pox hospital, I haven't a doubt—very red and nasty looking, all of 'em; and while I was buying something in a store the other day, a horrible old woman begged of me because her husband was sick with typhoid fever. No doubt I have caught both diseases, and it's the complication that puzzles you. Couldn't relish my coffee this morning; left my milk toast untouched. Hateful life, that of a bachelor at a hotel. Oh, dear me!"

"Why don't you marry, then?" said the doctor.

"They need so much courting," said Mr. Patterson. "You spend six months or so, at least, dangling at a woman's apron strings. You must go to theater and opera, if she is gay, and to church meeting if she is pious. At fifty a man likes his slippers and dressing-gown and easy chair of an evening. If it was just stepping over to the clergyman's and getting married, put a ring on her finger and saying or nodding 'yes,' two three times, why I wouldn't mind it, you know."

"Ah, well, courting is the fun of it all, in my opinion," said the old doctor, "but every one to his taste. And my advice to you is to go into the country."

"To another hotel and more mercenary waiters?" said Mr. Patterson.

"No," said the doctor; "go to a nice private home. I know one—a motherly widow lady who cooks dinner fit for a king. River before the house, woods behind it, orchard to the left, kitchen garden to the right; no fever and ague; no mosquitoes. Heavenly! I am going up there to-morrow, and I'll see if she'll take you."

"Very well," said Mr. Patterson, "I think I'd try it."

"And you must drink plenty of milk, and eat plenty of nice home-made bread," said the doctor.

"Yes, I will," said Patterson, overjoyed at last at hearing something that sounded like a prescription. "And you would advise milk."

"Quart every day," said the doctor.

"And if I should be very ill she'll nurse me?"

Mr. Patterson thought the matter over, and thought better of it every day, and when the little note informing him that the widow would be willing to "take him in and do for him" reached him, he had his trunk and portmanteau already packed, and was ready to start that afternoon. As for the widow, the doctor had prepared her for her boarder's peculiarities thus:

"Nice fellow; solid; plenty of money; thinks himself ill, but isn't; ought to be married; told him so, but he hates the idea of courting; marry him off some day, no doubt: "Will you have me?' 'Yes.' Call in clergyman. Over. Very peculiar old bachelor; but then old bachelors are peculiar generally."

The widow was what Yankees call an amazingly smart woman. She had married at sixteen, and had never failed to have washing over before other people were hanging out theirs. Her bread always rose, her cake was always good, and her butter was always sweet. At forty-five she had married off all her daughters, and was well-to-do, buxom and happy.

Her son and his wife boarded with her, and she added to her plentiful savings by taking a summer boarder or two if they happened to offer.

"Fifty and a bachelor," said Mrs. Muntle, looking in the glass. "Well, it seems a pity, but then when elderly gentlemen marry it is generally some hity-tity girl that leads them a terrible life, and likely it's for the best."

Then she looked at the glass again, for the widow was but a woman after all.

Mr. Patterson came to the widow's, and obeyed the doctor's prescription faithfully. He ate bread and drank milk, robbed the orchards like a schoolboy, and declaimed over the strawberry short-cake after a fashion that would have made his reputation at the bar. Then, too, Mrs. Muntle did not smile at his aches and pains, and insist that he must be perpetually well because he had a fresh complexion and dimples in his cheeks. She had savory herb teas and potions, which she produced when he complained of being miserable, and she had that blessing to hypochondriacs—a homeopathic box and book in the house.

There were remedies in that box for everything; and it was pleasant to find that when there was a crawling sensation in your flesh, or a kind of uneasy feeling in your legs, there were dear little globules to be had just suited to the symptoms; that to find yourself very angry about nothing indicated pulsatilla, and that even for unrequited love there was a medicine.

For two months and more Mr. Patterson boarded with Mrs. Muntle, and happier months he had never lived through. Then he went back to the city for a few weeks, returned in urgent need of more pellets from the medicine chest, and stayed until the last pink chrysanthemum was blooming on its withered branches.

He had grown so fond of his little room, with its white curtains and fresh, grass-bleached linen, of the country good things, and of the cosy nursing of buxom Mrs. Muntle, that he could scarcely bear the thought of parting with them altogether.

After all, why could not he buy a house and try to get Mrs. Muntle to keep it for him? Perhaps she would. He would offer her a high salary, and she would have plenty of servants. Then, indeed, he might have friends dine with him, and be as happy as possible.

If only he could approach his hostess; showing her as he did so that he considered her his equal, and a lady, and all that, as she certainly was—a little countryfied, of course, but a clergyman's daughter and the widow of a country doctor.

After much consideration he finally mustered courage for the effort, and walked into the front parlor, sent the small servant to ask Mrs. Muntle to stop there for a moment if she pleased.

"Gracious!" thought Mrs. Muntle, "What can he want?"

Then she blushed brightly, settled her neck-tie, took off her apron and walked demurely in.

"Be seated ma'm," said Mr. Patterson, "Please to sit here. Allow me to sit near you. I have something to say which may require some consideration."

"Oh, dear, its coming!" said Mrs. Muntle.

"I suppose you know I'm a man of considerable means, ma'm," said the old bachelor, "able to buy a nice house, furnish it well, and live in it comfortably."

"So I've understood, Mr. Patterson," said the widow.

"And of course it is plesanter to live that way than in bachelor's lodgings or at a hotel," said Mr. Patterson.

"I should judge it would be," said Mrs. Muntle cautiously.

"You judge rightly," said Mr. Patterson, "but you know a bachelor must be in the hands of servants if he keeps house. A gentleman don't want that; he wants a lady to superintend things for him—some one of taste and refinement, and all that. Common people don't understand his feelings, and mercenary servants are a poor dependence."

"I know that," said Mrs. Muntle.

"You are almost as much alone as I, aren't you, Mrs. Muntle?" said Mr. Patterson, coaxingly.

"The doctor knew him. He's going to do it, just as he said he would if he ever did," said the lady to herself. Aloud she answered:

"Well, sir, I am pretty free, it is true. All my children are married."

"I know money would be no object to you," said Mr. Patterson. "You have enough. But if I were to tell you that I hated boarding houses, and wanted a home, I think you would have pity on me. I'll buy a beautiful house, and you shall have complete control over everything; only to make my strawberry shortcake for me all my life."

He paused and looked at the lady.

"That is delicately put," he thought. "Nor will you hire out for a housekeeper in that, I fancy."

"I ain't romantic, though," said Mrs. Muntle; "but still, we ain't young, neither of us, and it gets to be just that with the most sentimental after a while."

"Don't refuse me," pleaded Mr. Patterson.

"Well, Mr. Patterson, I won't," said Mrs. Muntle. "I'm my own mistress, and though I've never thought of a second marriage, why I think I'm warranted in making one. And no doubt I shall never repent, for I think you've a fine disposition, and I understand your ways and tastes."

Mr. Patterson listened. He saw what he had done; proposed and been accepted without having any idea what he was about.

He looked at Mrs. Muntle; she was very nice and fresh and comely, and ten years his junior, at least, if she was forty. He could not have done a better thing, and he would be married without any troublesome courting. So he put his arm about Mrs. Muntle's waist and said:

"Thank you, my dear. I consider myself very lucky."

He wrote to his good doctor in about a fortnight's time, to tell him that he had taken both his prescriptions, was a married man, and intended to bring his wife home about Christmas.

A CHILD CARRIED OFF BY AN EAGLE.—The Gazzetta d'Italia of Aug. 10 states that at Donna, a village on the road leading from Ivrea to Aosta, a child 10 years old went to gather plants in the mountains. The servant who had charge of him having left him alone for a few moments, an eagle swooped down and carried off the child. Some soldiers from the neighboring fort of Bardo went in search and found the body of the child fearfully mutilated. The servant was so fearfully affected by the misfortune that she was afraid to return to her master's house, and remained for two days concealed in a crevice of the rocks; when discovered she was nearly dead from hunger.

A $15,000 Suit of Clothes.

Richard G. Duffy, of the firm of McKenna & Duffy, has been to Saratoga this summer, and as a memento of the place he exhibits in his store, at Fourth avenue and Tenth street, a full suit of clothes which was made by his wife while they were there, and which is a novelty in its way. The lining is of white muslin, and the surface is composed of 150 $100 notes, making the value of the suit $15,000. The notes are genuine, of issue of February 17, 1872, "payable six months after the ratification of peace., etc., Confederate States of America."—New York Paper.

True Courage—The Duel of David Coste.

The duelist who trusts to his excellence as a pistol shot or to his skill in swordsmanship to put an enemy out of the world, may be brave enough physically, but moral courage is not always shown in a duel or in the prior events leading to it. The case of Dr. David Coste, the survivor of a hostile meeting which took place near Strasburg a few weeks ago, is in this respect so exceptional as to be worthy of remark.

Early in May, 1872, a student named Caro presided at a banquet given at the opening of the Strasburg University. He was a member of the German society, the Rhenania, and saw fit on this occasion to send a congratulatory telegram to Prince Bismarck in the name of all the students at the banquet. As might have been expected, this did not meet with uniform approbation, and at a meeting of the disaffected students where the student Coste occupied the chair, resolutions condemnatory of Caro's action were passed and were afterward published. The members of the Rhenania, owing to this, became very inimical to Coste, and he was often abused and insulted in public. At a fete last May, as a member of the committee, Dr. Coste ordered the music to cease playing abont 2 o'clock in the morning. This order involved him in several altercations. Otto Mohr, one of the Rhenania students, called him a schafskopf (blockhead), and when asked for an explanation said to Coste, "What would be the use? You would sneak out as usual." This reproach of cowardice was too much, and Coste challenged him. Mohr refused any apology and accepted the challenge.

It was determined by the seconds that three shots with pistols should be exchanged at fifteen paces; but that an effort at reconciliation should be made after each shot. The duel took place on the 15th of May at half-past six in the morning, between Strasburg and Kehl. The pistols were discharged almost simultaneously, and Mohr received his opponent's ball in the abdomen. He died a few minutes afterward.

By the Prussian criminal code, whoever kills an adversary in a duel must on conviction suffer imprisonment in a fortress for two years at least. Coste was brought up for trial before the Assizes at Strasburg on July 21. From his statement to the court, it appeared that an aged father and five brothers and sisters, all younger than Coste himself, depended upon him for their support. It was the consciousness of the privations they would suffer should he fall in a duel which had prevented him from resenting the insults of his persecutor sooner. But at length he felt himself obliged to challenge Mohr; but even then, and up to the day of the duel, the thought of his failing those so utterly dependent on him was very bitter to him. The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty, and the young man was discharged.

When we remember how frequent duels are among the German students, the moral courage of David Coste in enduring insult and contumely so long for the sake of his family will seem more praiseworthy.

Brown's Wooden Wedding.

Brown, a young insurance friend of ours, says the Boston Traveller, had the fifth anniversary of his wooden wedding occur about a week ago, and his friends determined to celebrate his wooden wedding by a surprise party. Brown came in yesterday and told us how they succeeded. They commenced by sending a servant round with a team to take Brown and his wife out to ride at about seven. Then they began to come with presents and materials for supper. There was a little party of five came first, all laden—hands full. They all got nicely inside the garden gate, which shuts with a spring, when Brown's big mastiff, who is always left unchained in his master's absence, came round the corner and surprised them. One woman stepped on her dress, and in her fall so demoralized a fragile black walnut book-case she carried, that it was afterward done up in a bundle and presented as kindling-wood. Another fellow got safely out of the yard, all but part of his pants, while old Smithers, who weighs 220 pounds, plunged wildly, with the eight-gallon pail of ice cream he carried, through Brown's glass hothouse in the corner of the yard, and surprised some $30 worth of exotics. Finally, they fixed things up and got into the house, and, as it was about time for Brown's return, they commenced laying the supper-table. They got down a tea set of rare china that a friend of Brown's in the trade had loaned him a week before, and broke two pieces, so that Brown has since been obliged to mortgage his hen-house and buy the set; and the comments of Mrs. Brown, when she saw the condition of the carpet, were sarcastic in the extreme. Finally, as a crowning touch, they tried to hang out Chinese lanterns, with the word "Welcome" on them, on the porch over the front door. They succeeded in hanging two lanterns, and when they had saved the house from the fiery fiend there wasn't porch enough left to pay for the trouble of trying to hang out any more. Then they sat down and waited for Brown and his wife to come home. We drew the veil over the scene that followed their return. Some scenes are too joyous to be described in cold, cold words.

GOING AHEAD.—Another strain is to be added to the San Francisco medley. A Chinese newspaper is to be started there. It appears that the six Chinese companies in that city have clubbed together and determined upon this enterprise, and a steamer which sailed for China recently took out an order from tehm for one million type—Chinese characters—to be used in stocking the office. Their plan is to publish the paper three times a week, its chief object being to instruct their countrymen in their own language as to their rights and wrongs from the time they land on American soil. The first number is promised in September.

THE number of distilleries in the United States in operation August 1, is stated by the Internal Revenue Department at 208, with a capacity for producing 181,729 gallons of spirits daily. This is a decrease compared with July 1 of 103 in the number of distilleries, and 30,490 gallons in the daily production.

Field and Family.

THE Gardener's Monthly, in speaking of the black knot on plum and cherry trees, says it should be cut out as fast as it appears, not as the black knot, but as a mere sappy abrasure, green and spongy, above the bark. It is no use to cut it out after a month old. This delay is probably the secret of many failures in removing the black knot.

WE do advise painting the shingle roofs of buildings as a matter of economy. We have ample evidence that it pays to do so just as surely as it pays to paint the balance of the exterior of any building.—New York Herald.

FUMIGATING poultry houses with sulphur, thrown on glowing coals in an earthen vessel, and keeping the house closed for several hours, is said to be a perfect remedy for insects of all kinds. The poultry must be removed before the experiment.

THE Stock Journal, after giving a number of experiments in feeding corn to pigs, remarks that these experiments show that there is within a fraction of twenty-four pounds of pork in a bushel of corn; and the effort of every farmer should be to endeavor to get out as much as he can of it. And to do this he must have the right kind of hogs; they must be placed in the right condition, and fed in the right manner, with a view to profit.

AN Ohio correspondent of the Country Gentleman says: I am using a remedy for driving away insects and bugs that works to a charm, and if any of your readers have not tried it, I advise them to waste no time with soot, ashes, etc., but ask their druggist to order for them a pound of carbolic acid, No. 5, which will cost 75 cents. If air slaked lime is to be had, use a teaspoonful of acid to a quart of lime; mix well, and dust over the plant. One application is frequently sufficient. The cabbage flea (Jumping Jack) threatened to destroy my plants of cabbage and rutabagas, but one dose was sufficient to clear the garden of them. If the lime is not slaked, take one teaspoonful of acid to a pint of hot water, and slake the lime with the mixture.

FOWLS can be fattened well in a fortnight if they are cooped up where they can obtain gravel and lime and are fed on scalded corn-meal, given three times a day, while ears of corn are always at hand. For drink, skimmed milk is very desirable, and if warmed a little will be drank with eagerness. Pulverized charcoal, kept either in their boxes or mixed with their feed, will materially assist the fattening process.

SOILING, as now practiced by the best dairy farmers, really means stall-feeding in summer, wholly or in part, according to the condition of the pastures, or the circumstances of the farmer. The old definition of the word "soil," according to Webster, is to feed cattle or horses, in the barn or an inclosure, with fresh grass or green food; as to soil a horse.

THE clothing of the horse in the stable should be neither too hot nor too cold. But if kept too warm he will be more likely to take cold when he goes out to exercise on a cold or chilly day. The stable should be well ventilated with pure air at all times, and all poisonous air and gases, particularly the ammonia which is formed from the urine, should be allowed free egress from the stable, as the animal cannot be expected to keep in good health while compelled to inhale such malaria.

TO BROIL TOMATOES.—Broiled tomatoes make a delicious dish. Select those that are not over-ripe, and cut them in halves crosswise; dip the cut side into beaten egg, and then into wheat flour, and place them upon a gridiron, whose bars have been greased previously. When they have become well browned, turn them over, and cook the skin side until thoroughly done. Then put butter, salt and pepper upon the egg, and serve upon a platter.

Rome.

Side by side we see the Oriental luxury of the cardinals and the rags of a starving populace; here a gilded coach, and there a crowd of shoeless beggars; close to magnificent palaces of marble there are heaps of refuse, emitting horrible effluvia. And yet this city is the capital of Italy. At the fall of evening, in the sacred hour of poetic silence, under the pure heavens, glorified by the last rays of the setting sun, which give an air of mysticism to all around; from the height of the Pincio look on this city, with its eleven Egyptian obelisks, its three hundred cupolas, its groves of columns, its myriads of statues, and you see the seven hills whence have sprung senators, consuls, and tribunes, the political and civil rights of antiquity, now the bases of our rights; contemplate the facade of St. Peter's, the Great Basilica surmounted by the dome foretold by Bramante, and executed by Michael Angelo; the Titanic mausoleum of Adrian, over which are extended the wings of the brazen seraphim; there, to the left, the world of history, the walls on which are engraved a thousand victories, the Via Sacra, where conquerors entered; the Forum, where the people gathered; those arches which twenty centuries have passed without destroying; those refreshing baths, copied so often by modern artists; the Coliseum, that mountain sculptured by Titanic chisels; Quirinal, which contains the finest statues saved from the wreck of Greece; the Capitol, head and cerebrum of the world. At the sight of so many marvels, at the recollection of so much grandeur, at the contemplation such monuments, framed in groves of cypress, like a funereal wreath placed by an invisible Deity; at the soft music of bells which invite to vespers, like the voices of martyrs ascending from the Catacombs; the shadows of evening lingering sadly over the ruins, like the spirits of departed heroes—the heart, swelled by emotions, confesses that Rome is not only the capital of Italy, but the eternal center of the world!—Emilio Castelar.

Brightening Prospects.

[From the Pittsburgh Commercial.]

The business affairs of the country never looked so well as they do at the present opening of the fall season of 1863. There will be, of course, the usual monetary stringency, which seems to be the inevitable result of our incomplete and vicious banking system; but that has been overcome before; and as the country grows stronger financially, it must grow wiser, and be able, ere long, to devise a banking system better able to meet the wants of trade and commerce. Among the indications of a prosperous season we may enumerate the following:

1. The encouraging prospects of the iron trade. The iron manufacturers of England are beginning to realize that they have lost the American market, and henceforth the wants of that market must be supplied by our own manufacturers. And not the American market alone. We have noted, already, heavy shipments of American pig-metal to England; and the New York Times, of Friday, says that "some very large orders from England have been received here during the last ten days."

2. Ship-building has this year undergone a thorough revival, and especially since July 1. The ship-yards of Maine are again busily engaged building wooden vessels, and all along the Delaware is heard the clang of the hammer on the hulls of new iron ships. The United States is destined, we trust, to resume her real place—the front rank—in ocean commerce. And,

3. Our imports are steadily falling off, and our exports are steadily increasing. A very large proportion of the vessels now arriving at New York come in ballast, seeking for cargoes to Europe.

All these are signs of high promise, and all other signs unmistakably point to a period of great prosperity. If, when this prosperity is realized, we can but use it wisely and prudently, and be kept out of wild speculations and reckless ventures, there will be increased cause for thankfulness; and we are sufficiently hopeful to believe that our people have learned enough, from past experience, to know when they are well off, and to abide so contentedly.

The condition and prospects of the grain trade of the world always, at this season of the year, constitute an interesting and important subject of conversation. The latest advices from England state that the present English wheat harvest will be better than was considered possible three or four months ago. Owing to exceptionally fine weather, the harvest has commenced this year two weeks earlier than was anticipated. The result is a check to the diseases and vicissitudes incident to hot weather, and an additional yield. The actual wheat deficiency of Great Britain last year was twenty-five per cent., in place of fifteen per cent., as was anticipated. It is estimated that this year's crop will be a decided improvement on the last, so that the requirements of the ensuing year will be some 16,000,000 bushels less than during the present harvest year. This, however, is not a very material diminution. A review of this year's harvests show that, apart from Russia, the principal grain-growing country of Europe, the probabilities are that on the continent the production will not be much more than sufficient to meet home demands for consumption, leaving comparatively little margin for exportation. Upon the whole, therefore, the breadstuff outlook is decidedly encouraging for the grain-growers and exporters of our own country.

Friends Must Part.

About 11:45 Saturday night two middle-aged men stopped in front of a house on Essex street, and, after shaking hands with an earnestness and solemnity that were very affecting, one of them said: "Good-night, Buggles," to which the other responded, "Good-night, Punky." Then both of them stared at each other with wonderful intensity, and finally grasped hands again. "You feel quite well?" said Punky, with some anxiety. "Never better," kindly volunteered Buggles, at the same time turning around on one leg, and throwing up one arm to snap his fingers, but changing his mind, and hastily clasping Punky around the neck instead. Then he straightened himself up and, looking solemnly at Punky, extended his hand, which that individual hastily grasped, and wrung with a fervor that was simply surprising, while both of them stared at each other in a manner that exhibited an extraordinary interest in the object. "You are a firm friend of mine," said Punky, with the tears gathering in his eyes. "So you are of mine," asserted Buggles, in a broken voice. Then they shook hands again. "Nobody never seemed to understand me as you do," said Punky, trembling with suppressed emotion. "That's just what Iv'e always said of you," maintained Buggles with as much emphasis as his awakened feelings would permit. At this juncture the two were so thoroughly absorbed in contemplating each other's features as not to notice a night capped head peering out of an upper window, and were just preparing to grasp hands once more in increased fervor, when a shrill voice screamed, "Come home drunk again, will you?" and was immediately followed by a bucket of water most unfortunately aimed. The man called Punky immediately bolted over the fence, and around to the back of the house, leaving Mr. Buggles to look around for his hat, which had been knocked off by the force of the shower, and to dispose of himself afterward as he might see proper. —Danbury News.

IF railway travelers would like to know the kind of cattle the railroads intrust their lives to, they should read the testimony taken at the investigation of the Muir (Mich.) disaster. The brakeman who was sent back to flag the approaching freight train, and who told the conductor afterward that he had gone a mile, testifies that he does not know how far a mile is. He thinks it is about eighty or ninety rods. His ideas of longitudinal measure also embraced the notion that a yard contains about eighty feet. It was this brutish creature's refusal to go far enough back that caused the destruction of life.

THE MYSTERY OF HOLLOW ASH.

You want to know about the smash
That happened down to Hollow Ash?
Wall, Boss, if anybody knows,
He wears about my style of clothes.

'Twas Deacon Humper's funeral,
And all was goin' mighty well,
When them there Templars up in town
On an excursion train cum down.

I driv the mourners, and "Jo Fresh"
He went ahead of the procesh;
And as he neared the railroad track,
We seed that train a-comin' back.

Joe turned around and winked at me,
And from his vest he drew a V.
"I'll bet you that that this 'ere hearse
Crosses ahead of that excurse.

The mourners they sot up a yell,
And then was missin' for a spell;
It was amazin' how that crowd
Cavorted upward in a cloud.

We piled them victims on the sward,
About three-quarters of a cord;
On top we put the deacon's meat,
But where Jo went we all was beat.

We searched the ruins of that train,
But all our sarchin' was in vain,
And to this day it does beat me
Where the piece went that held that V.

What Public Men Owe to Newspapers.

Col. Forney complains, in a well-written article in the Philadelphia Press, that public men are, as a class, ungrateful to the newspapers and the journalists to whom they, in many instances, owe their position. Nobody is more competent to speak on this subject than Col. Forney himself. He has made more statesmen out of small material than any other man in America. He has taken a more active part in the personnel of American politics in the last twenty years than almost any other man. Much of his work has been that of a politician rather than that of a journalist; but in either capacity he has always been able to serve his friends well, and he has always served them faithfully. His reward has been very small. If he had let politics alone and devoted himself exclusively to journalism, he might have made a greater name than Greeley's, and a far greater fortune than Bennett's. But he was always fond of helping some friend to an office, and always had a taste for political intrigue with a purpose of this kind. His experience has, no doubt, been that of a hundred others, who have operated in the same way on a small scale. Make a Governor out of an Alderman to-day, and to-morrow he'll tell you that he owes his elevation to his own superior merits. Forney made a President of the United States out of James Buchanan—but before the old public functionary had taken his seat he repudiated his patentee and manufacturer in a most ungrateful manner. Congressmen are made by country newspapers, yet when they go to Washington it wouldn't be safe to tell them so.—St. Louis Republican.

Strength of Timber.

The strength of a piece of timber depends upon the part of the tree from which it was taken. Up to a certain age, the heart of the tree is the best; after that period, it begins to fail gradually. The worst part of the tree is the sap-wood, which is next the bark. It is softer than the other parts of the wood, and is liable to premature decay. The deleterious component of the sap-wood is absorbed, if the tree is allowed to grow for a longer period, and in time the old sap-wood becomes proper timber-fiber similar to the heart-wood. Hence, the goodness of a tree, for timber purposes, depends on the age at which the tree was cut down. When young, the heart-wood is the best; at maturity, with the exception of the sap-wood, the trunk is equally good throughout; and, when the tree is allowed to grow too long, the heart-wood is the first to show symptoms of weakness, and deteriorates gradually.

The best timber is secured by felling the tree at the age of maturity, which depends on its nature, as well as on the soil and climate. The ash, beech, elm and fir are generally considered at their best when of seventy or eighty years' growth, and the oak is seldom at its best in less time than one hundred years, but much depends on surrounding circumstances. As a rule, trees should not be cut before arriving at maturity, because there is then too much sap-wood, and the durability of the timber is much inferior to that of trees felled after they have arrived at their full development.

Edmund Burke's Remedy.

A correspondent writes to the Chicago Tribune: People pay physicians for reminding them of what they themselves know, or ought to know. The simplest remedies are, generally speaking, more efficacious than the most complicated compounds, and the household often contains specifics not to be found at any drug-store. Edmund Burke speaks, in one of his letters, of a very simple, yet efficacious, remedy which he employed whenever troubled with headache, colds, etc. It was to drink or sip hot (not warm) water as fast as he could swallow it. The effect was better, he said, before than after meals, and was seen in a healthful perspiration, which, getting up a circulation, freed the system from such impurities as caused the sickness or pain. Burke was so enthusiastic a believer in hot water as a medicine that he maintained it would cure almost any disease to which flesh is heir.

Destruction in Disguise.—It is a fact that mixtures of bad liquors and acid astringents are often given as medicines. They are potent to destroy! and may be safely warranted to ruin, morally and physically, any human being that sticks to them long enough. More drunkards have been made by these villainous concoctions, labeled medicines, than by the liquors of commerce. Alcoholic poisons, advertised as remedies, are more mischievous than tavern drams. For intermittent and remittent fevers, as well as for all other diseases which these fiery frauds are falsely certified to relieve, Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, the ne plus ultra of vegetable medicines, is a positive cure. But this is not all; the great Temperance Elixir is a sovereign specific for the depraved appetite for stimulants, created by the false tonics and bogus restoratives of Missionaries of Intemperance. Woman's Rights.

One of the undoubted rights of a married woman is to be protected by her husband from the chances of future dependence, or the possible destitution that is likely to result from his early death, before he has had time to make sufficient provision for her future support and that of the children he may leave behind him. One of the most certain means of making this provision is by means of a policy of Life Insurance, as a small annual payment will secure a large amount at his death to the family of the insured. Avoid the Perils of the Season.

Autumn, although the most radiant portion of the American year, has its drawbacks. The heavy evening dews and morning vapors and the great disparity in temperature between the night and day, give rise to many painful disturbances of the bowels, such as colic, cholera morbus, diarrhea and dysentery. The digestive organs are also unfavorably affected by the change of season, and dyspeptics generally suffer most severely during the fall. Derangements of the liver are likewise common, and miasmatic fevers prevail in newly-settled districts and low-lying and marshy localities. These unpleasant contingencies of the season are not, however, unavoidable. By strengthening, toning and regulating the system with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters even the most delicate may escape them. At the expiration of summer all the bodily powers are in a somewhat exhausted state. They require the wholesome stimulation which this genial vegetable invigorant supplies. Under its renovating influence the nervous energy which the wilting heat of July and August had kept in abeyance or partially extinguished, crops out afresh; the flaccid muscles recover their elasticity; the appetite takes a sharper edge; the processes of digestion and assimilation become more rapid and perfect; the spirits rise, and the whole organization acquires its maximum of activity and resistant power. Even persons of comparatively feeble constitutions, when thus fortified against the perils of the season, will have little cause to fear a visitation from any of the disorders to which we have referred. As a protection against miasmatic fevers and all epidemics engendered by malaria Hostetter's Bitters may be justly pronounced not only unrivaled but unapproached. Look well to the label and trade mark, as there are many counterfeits and imitations in the market.

THE VERDICT

Of all good physicians and the people is that good Blood is most essential for the promotion of good health. No person can enjoy anything like good health when the blood is out of order. A diseased state of the blood is a breeder of many ailments, such as Nervous Weakness, Dyspeptic affections of the Liver, Headache, Indigestion, Bilious Complaints, &c. We should, therefore, be careful and see to it that our blood be in a healthy state. This can always be accomplished by the use of that celebrated remedy—Dr. Smith's OLD STYLE BITTERS—as it is a well known fact that this medicine is the best Vegetable Blood Purifier and Invigorator sold on this continent, and acknowledged to be such by our best physicians. Our own observation also compels us to state that it will, in our judgment, give universal satisfaction. For sale by best Druggists.

As a pain killer, Dr. Smith's Golden Liniment is unrivaled. It will cure the Colic in five minutes, the Toothache in three minutes. Address, Union Medicine Co., 6 and 8 North 2d St., St. Louis, Mo.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons,

℞ Has been widely used, during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chills and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery or Debility follows the cure. Indeed, where disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints it is an excellent remedy.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

HEALTH. BEAUTY.
STRONG AND PURE RICH BLOOD—INCREASE OF FLESH AND WEIGHT—CLEAR SKIN AND BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION SECURED TO ALL.

DR. RADWAY'S
SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the Sarsaparillian Resolvent excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

A Dutchman's Fancy.

A German went into the lottery office in Louisville the other day and inquired for ticket No 9. He either wanted 9, 99, or 99,999. But no other number would satisfy him. On inquiry for his reasons for this particular number, the following facts in his life were learned : He came to this country when 9 years of age. After he had been here 9 years he got married. Nine months after the wedding his wife gave him a child The baby, when 9 days old, was christened. He lived with his wife 9 years and during that time had 9 children. Then he had a fuss with her, and she banged him over the head 9 times with the stave of a beer keg, from the effects of which he laid in bed 9 days. He left that wife then, and had been a grass widower just 9 years on the day he had applied for the ticket. He hoped with ticket No. 9 to draw money enough to recuperate his finances, which were reduced to $9, which he offered for the ticket. On being informed that there was no ticket remaining the number of which was composed entirely of 9's he looked dejected, but immediately went out and drank 9 glasses of beer. Then he returned and said he would wait until only 9 tickets were left, and then take them all.

At a recent Methodist meeting in which there was much religious interest, an old man gave expression to his joy by shouting, and continued it until it began to interrupt the services. Brother H.—— said to Brother W——: 'Go stop that old man's noise !' He went to him and spoke a few words, and the shouting man became quiet.

Brother W——, asked Brother H——, 'what did you say to the old man that quieted him so promptly ?'

Brother W——replied .

'I asked him for a dollar for foreign mission !'

Several exchanges say Grant's salary amounts to $68 per day, when it lacks but two cents of being one hundred and thirty seven dollars per day. Fully one third of the President's time is spent in junketing around watering-places; so, in one year he gets over sixteen thousand dollars of unearned money, and twenty-five thousand per year he signed away from a depleted treasury by one stroke of his pen.

One of our Exchanges thus reasons with the man who don't take the papers—except when he takes them from his neighbors : Now I tell you, squire, the day will come when somebody will write a long eulogy, on your life, character, etc. and the printer will put it in type, with a heavy black rule over and under it, and with all your riches this will be done for you as a pauper. Your liberalities wealth and all such will be spoken of, but the printer as he arranges the type will remark : "Poor, mean devil, he never took the paper, and is now swindling the printer out of his funeral notice."

South Bend has a citizen who thrashes his seven-year old boy with a tug-strap so hard that the blows can be heard a quarter of a mile.

David Waterbury, Deputy County Clerk of Tippecanoe county was killed at the gate of the fair grounds, on Friday, by being thrown from his buggy.

Mr McBride writes us from Bicknell, that he has just opened a four foot vein of the finest kind of block coal in the State. He thinks there is coal enough in his mine to supply Knox county one hundred and fifty years.—Vincennes Sun.

Jeffersonville people are lively on sensations, but occasionally the thing is overdone. Wednesday morning a Miss Lena Cooper died in that city after a brief illness, and because her physician did not give his opinion as to the cause of her death a rumor was circulated to the effect that she was probably poisoned. This report culminated in a demand for a coroners investigation, which took place in the afternoon, resulting in a verdict that the young lady died of perpicious intermittant fever.

HOW TO BUY A HORSE.

Advice From "Adirondack Murray

From the advance sheets of the Rev. W. H. Murray's new book on "The Horse," we extract the following

Be sure that the horse you purchase has symmetry, viz, is well proportioned throughout. Never purchase a horse because he has a splendid development of one part of his organization, if he be lacking in any other. Above all, keep well in mind what you are buying for, and buy the horse best adapted to the work you will require of him ; and when such an animal is yours, be content. Never jocky. An occasional exchange may be allowable; but this daily "swapping" of horses advertises a man's incompetency for anything higher. Another caution is this. Never purchase a horse until you have seen him move, and under the same conditions to which he will be exposed in the service you will expect of him. If for a draft, see him draw, back and turn round in both directions ; if for the road, see how he handles himself, not merely on level ground, but going up sharp declivities ; and, above all, descending them. In this way you will ascertain the faults or excellences of both his temper and structure.

In these exercises drive him yourself. The reins in a skillful hand aided by the whip or mouth, can be, made to conceal grave defects, Let him move with a loose rein, so that he may take his natural gait, and artificial ; for, by so doing, you will detect any mistakes of judgment you may have made when looking him over in a state of activity. Many a time unsoundness will appear in motion which no inspection of the eye and finger, however close can ascertain. When you have walked him and jogged him, if he is to serve any other than mere draft purposes, but him to his speed, and keep him at it for a sufficient distance to test his breathing capacity; then pull him up; jump from the wagon and look at his flanks; inspect his nostrils, and put your ear close to the side of his chest, in order to ascertain if the action of the heart is normal. If this exercise has caused him to perspire freely, all the better; for you can then see, when you take him back to the stable, whether he "dries off" quickly, as all horses do in perfect health.

Where Is Smoke Is also Fire.

A Virginia City (Nev.) man of scientific turn, proposes to banish cigars and their companion the pipe. And this is the detailed manner in which he will do it : He is about to erect extensive works near Virginia City which will include large retortes wherein tobacco will be burned and the smoke thus produced will pass through proper pipes to a large bell-shaped receptacle where it will be cooled and purified and so scented that it will have the flavor of the finest Havana cigar. From this receptacle a main pipe will lead up into the city, and from this will be small branch pipes leading to all the principal saloons and houses in the town. In every house where the smoke is taken there will be placed a meter, similar to a gas meter, but much more delicately constructed. Running from these meters will be pipes leading to all the rooms in the house, and connected with these pipes at convenient points, will be long flexible tubes, each tipped with a handsome amber mouthpiece for the comfort and convenience of smokers. When a man desires to take a smoke he has not to go to the trouble of hunting up tobacco and filling his pipe. There is none of this trouble and vexation. He has only to place the amber mouthpiece between his lips, turn a small silver thumbscrew, and the cool delicious. perfumed smoke glides into his mouth. By this ingenious and delightful arrangement the professor hopes to do away with tobacconists. anti-tobacco tracts, and at the same time make an immense fortune.

The New York Herald says of the Democratic party and the anti Republican elements·

The dream is over. The incongrous and incoherent coalition of 1872 against General Grant is abandoned by the Democratic party. The Democracy of Ohio for the West, and their brethren for the East, in taking their new departure for their approaching fall elections, have as quietly ignored the Liberal, or anti Grant Republicans as if no such organization had ever existed. and as if such lately conspicuous engineers and pioneers as Greely and Brown, Sumner, Trumbull Schurz, Curtin, Forney and Fenton had belonged to the Dark Ages. The reaction of the democracy from their strange adventures of last summer, in which they appeared as the followers of an unknown body of deserters from the administration on their Cincinnati platform, has been very quiet, but it is decisive. From the profitless pursuit of those strange gods the old party of Jefferson and Jackson and Buchanan returned to its own altars.

WISHART
PINE TREE !
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it mus hold above all others in the market.

Horace's Specimens.

The other day, while scrambling out of the great hole in the ground near the Sun office which the Tribune were filling up with costly brick and granite as a monument to the founder of that paper, we picked up a piece of copper ore. The bit of green rock recalled to mind an amusing incident in the life of the late Horace Greeley. It occurred many years ago, long before the great war was begun, and before even the Philosopher of Spruce street had dreamed of being the Democratic candidate for President.

The interior third story editorial room on Nassau street, so long occupied by Mr Greeley, had become exceedingly dingy. Its furniture was in the last stages of dilapidation. Various propositions to improve it had been vetoed by the occupant, who feared that any attempt at change would derange the order of his papers and books of reference.

But one Saturday, while the sage was chopping wood at Chappaqua, the burly engineer, Patrick O'Rourke, came up with a host of helpers, and pretty soon had everything topsy-turvey. The carpet was torn up by the roots and the sub-soil shoveled out from under it. The furniture was hustled aside, the walls were scraped and papered, the wood-work painted, a new carpet laid, and by nightfall Patrick, as he surveyed the wholesome change, congratulated himself on the wondrous achievement.

Next day Mr Greeley, coming in fresh from the serene influences of Dr. Chapin's sermon, was struck with dumb wonder at the metamorphosis. Without a word he slumped down into his easy chair and thrust his feet under the desk, apparently in a fine mood to do justice to bleeding Kansas or castigate the rascally free traders. Hardly had he touched his seat, however, when he sprang up as though stung, and pointing under his desk, shrieked in his squeakiest tones:

"What—thief has stolen my specimens; w-h-e-r-e-'s my specimens?"

The people from the outer office rushed in at the row, and pretty soon Mr Greeley was apprised that Patrick O'Rourke was the leader of the vandals who had despoiled his sanctum.

"Send him up here," yelled Horace; "send him up!"

So Patrick was summoned from the vaults of the establishments, where he was engaged, like the good Deacon Smith's wicked partners, in getting up steam on Sunday for Monday's paper.

O'Rourke came in, expecting to be complimented for his thorough work. Slowly wiping the perspiration from his forehead on his bare, brawny arm, he slowly drew up to the editor, his face wreathed in smiling anticipation But the sight of Horace's angry countenance warned poor Patrick that a storm was imminent.

"What is it, Mr Greeley?" he mildly queried.

"Pat, where's my specimens?" screamed Horace pointing to a vacant spot under the desk.

"Specimens! Mr Greeley? Specimens! meekly responded the innocent Patrick.

"Yes; the specimens I kept under here," said Horace

"Well, Mr Greeley," blurted out Patrick, "I don't know anything about yer specimens, but if ye mane that old type box full of rocks ye kept there, why they only littered up the place, and I threw 'em into the street."

"You damned fool!" screamed Horace. "Didn't you know that box of specimens was all I had to show for twenty thousand dollars' worth of copper stocks?" and the good man sank hysterically back in his seat to ponder on his misfortune, while poor Patrick thoroughly humbled, hurried out to recover what he could of the lost treasures. He succeeded in finding some of them, and put them in a cellar for safe keeping.

This was long, long ago, and here now is a solitary fragment of that time turning up under the laborer's mattock and testifying to the generous nature of one who might have been a Crœsus had he been less credulous; who might had he been more worldly-minded, have built in his own lifetime, out of his own hard earned wealth, the stately structure it was the dream of his life to found, but whose erection he was never designed to witness. The dreamer is now dust; the busy life but a recollection. Of that great fortune which he won, there remains to his children but a crumbling fragment, comparatively as inconsiderable as this bit of copper ore.

A Pennsylvania girl went blackberrying five weeks ago, and when heard from the other day was keeping house with her husband in Georgia. She concluded to work all her blackberries into jam.

FILLEY.

So it seems the Postmaster of St. Louis has been exacting presents from his clerks. His name is Filley, and five per cent. upon their monthly salaries seems to have been about his figure. Some paid more; and some were let off without paying anything; but the net profit of these assesments is stated at something like $1,500 a month. This continued during four years—Mr. Filley's term of office—would make a handsome aggregate.

Filley is a great friend of President Grant. When the President was in St. Louis recently Filly gave him a splendid dinner. The expense of this dinner is reported at as high a figure as $600. Mr. Filley has also had to go to Washington on officia business, and this journey likewise is said to have cost him $500 or $600. For these extra expenditures, and especially for the entertainment of his friend, the President, at St. Louis, he desires to be reimbursed. For this reason he levies these little assessments.

In St. Louis an outcry is made against such proceedings. They are certainly contrary to old fashioned ideas, but with the practice and principles of the present day they are in harmony. When President Grant came into office he appointed to the best places in his gift gentlemen who had made him handsome presents; and why should not Filley imitate such an example and take presents from those whom he appoints to places?

A great deal is said against monopolies, and Filley knows that in St. Louis Mr. Orvil L. Grant, brother of the President, is getting $5,000 a year salary and ten per cent. upon an $800,000 contract in connection with the President's appointment of Mr. Thomas Walsh architect to supervise the construction of the Custom House. Now, should such things be confined to the President's family? Perish the thought! Let there be no monopoly in the business of presents, and let Filley make a good thing out of his Post Office. He is the President's friend, and who will say that he ought not, like the President's brother, to derive some pecuniary benefit from such an affectionate relation?

Mr, Ruby's Funeral.

From the Danbury News.

The day Mr. Ruby across the way was to be buried Mrs Moriaty told her daughter Clarinda that she guessed she would attend, as she wasn't feeling very well, and a ride would do her good. She knew there would be several covered carriages furnished at the expense of the family, and she was equally confident that it could be so managed that she would occupy a portion of one of them. She was among the first at the house, and occupied a prominent position.

As the other friends arrived she took occasion to recall reminiscences of the late Ruby that brought tears to their eyes, and when the services were over, as the first carriage drove up for its load, the distress of Mrs Moriaty at the death of Mr Ruby was so marked as to excite the livliest sympathy. Then the second coach came up Mrs M. had got down to the gate by this time, and as the door of the second coach was opened, and a call made for the occupants, it seemed extremely doubtful if she could hold up another instant. She leaned against the post, and stared into the coach, and over its rich upholstering, and said the late Ruby seemed more like a son to her than a neighbor. Whereupon the usher looked appropriately sad, and called up the third and last coach. This had yellow cushions and pink straps, and Mrs Moriaty did not hesitate to protest that in the death of Mr Ruby the community had met a loss it was not possible to recover from, and that she would follow him to his last resting place if she had to do it on her knees, and feel grateful for the opportunity.

Then the third and last coach filled and drove off to its place in the line, and Mrs Moriaty dried her tears, chocked back the sorrow of her heart with one mighty gulp, and strode into her own house, shutting the front door without the aid of the knob. She told Clarinda that it was the scaliest affair she ever went to, and had it not been for the body there would have been no funeral at all.

A Driverless Race Horse.

There was a rather unusual incident at the Steubenville race grounds last Saturday afternoon. It was in the pacing race for a purse of $600, free to all. There were five entries. The winning horse was Copperbottom. He took the first heat, and in the second heat the sulky of Copperbottom came into collision with another, and was instantly overturned. The driver of Copperbottom was, of course, thrown out, and it was expected that Copperbottom would run away. Contrary to expectations, however, the horse never broke once, and came in amid the wildest of cheers ahead in as good style as if its driver had been behind him. The enthusiasm of the crowd was immense. They cheered and cheered the self possessed horse which had declined to get frightened, like most of its kind, when released from a driver's care.

The judges were at first going to give the heat to the horse which came in second, because Copperbottom came in without a driver. The crowd getting wind of the possible ruling against the gallant Copperbottom, gathered around the stand, while from every hand went up cries of "Copperbottom! Copperbottom!"

The judges saw if they should give the race to the second horse that the crowd were just in the mood to pull the stand down about their ears. They then retired, and, after consultation, ruled the heat a dead heat. They would have been obliged to give the heat to Copperbottom, as he never broke once, had it not been for the claim of foul put in by the driver of the sulky with which Copperbottom collided.

As it was, it was one of the rare events of the turf where a horse lost its driuer, but yet has kept its place in the race as if nothing had happened.

THE FIRST THOUSAND DOLLARS.—The first thousand dollars that a young man earns and saves, over and above his expenses in earning it, will ordinarily stamp upon his mind and character two of the most important conditions of success—industry and economy. It is far better for him that he should earn the first thousand dollars than that they should be given to him. If he earns it he knows what it is worth, since it represented to him a very considerable amount of effort. If he saves it while earning a much larger sum, he acquires thereby the habit of economy. Neither of these lessons could be taught by a mere gift. On the whole, it is no disadvantage for a young man to begin life poor. Most persons who have become rich in this country were once poor; in their poverty they gained habits from the stern necessities of their condition, which in the end resulted in riches. Those who were born with silver spoons in their months, and spent their early years in adleness and prodigality, seldom amount to much as men in the practical business of life.

We know of no reason why the President should not travel in the same boat with "the grabbers." He grabbed more than any, and is to greater degree responsible for the existence of the law than any score of Congressmen. He could have killed the bill at any moment, He could have vetoed it after its passage. He didn't do either, yet other men are denounced and he goes scot free so far as the Radical papers are concerned. It seems to us that if those who voted for the bill are to be broken upon the wheel the President ought to share a similar fate for imparting to it approval and validity.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

General McCook, who was assassinated at Yankton, the other day, was the fifth of his family who have met with violent deaths [illegible] M. McCook, the youngest of them, was killed at Bull Run; Brigadier General [illegible] L. McCook, as will be remembered, was foully assassinated while riding in an ambulance in Tennessee, sick and unable to defend himself from the attack. The father, Major Daniel McCook was killed in Ohio while following Morgan; Brigadier General Dan McCook fell in the fight of Kenesaw Mountain; and now Edwin S. McCook, after going through the hazards of war, was brutally murdered while at a public meeting in Yankton. There is not, probably, another family in this country which has been so peculiarly bereaved.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

A DESPICABLE piece of vandalism was lately perpetrated at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., by some unknown miscreants. The vault containing the remains of the late Chancellor Livingston and others of his family was broken open, the coffins destroyed, the bones of the dead scattered about, and the silver handles and plates of the coffins stolen.

WILLIAM BRINSTEAD and Benjamin F. Welsh, members of the Board of Works of Jersey City, charged with corruption in office, have been tried and found guilty....The balloon in which Prof. Wise was to attempt an aerial voyage across the Atlantic has collapsed, and with it the enterprise has suffered a like fate. A New York dispatch of the 12th thus tells why and how the project came to naught: "An immense crowd visited the Capitoline Grounds, Brooklyn, this afternoon, to witness the departure of the big balloon for Europe. The process of inflation commenced at an early hour this morning and continued steadily until ten minutes past 4, when the balloon suddenly swayed to the north, ripped half way around, with a great tearing noise, and fell flat upon the ground. The immense volume of gas which had been pumped into it, nearly 400,000 feet, escaped at the same moment, nearly suffocating those who stood on the inside. Inspector Polk, Mr. Goodsell and Police Commissioner Briggs had but the instant before shifted their positions to the eastward, and thus escaped being buried in the netting and canvas. The crowd made a general rush over the ropes, with the intention of tearing up the canvas into small pieces and carrying them off as mementoes, but a strong force of police on the ground charged and drove them back. Mr. Stiner, who had contracted to fill the balloon, said that it would be all folly to attempt another inflation, as the bag was not made of the proper material. So the enterprise is abandoned for the present."

KENYON, COX & Co., heavy Wall street operators, have suspended....Vice-President Wilson is almost entirely restored to health.... Hon. John P. Hale is on his legs again....A counterfeit of the new fifty-cent note is in circulation, and is said to have made its appearance two days after the genuine was issued....Prof. Wise publishes in the New York papers a card defending his theory of an easterly air current, and announcing his readiness to start for Europe at any time in a gas-tight silk balloon. It is announced that the Graphic managers will immediately have constructed a silk balloon, in which Prof. Donaldson will attempt the Atlantic voyage. ....It is said sufficient evidence has been found to secure the indictment and conviction of the ring that has been plundering Brooklyn.

THE Eclectic Life Insurance Company, of New York, has collapsed....The earnings of the Erie railroad from Jan. 1 to Aug. 31, 1872, were $12,167,249; same time in 1873, $11,635,961; decrease, $531.288.

THE New York merchants and shippers have organized a Cheap Transportation Association,...Charles Bradlaugh, the English agitator, arrived at New York last week.

THE press and people of Wisconsin are justly indignant at the increase of railway freights on all the principal lines in the State. It is alleged to be the positive orders of the Eastern officers of the railroads for their mutual profit and the oppression of the people, and threats are freely made that it will be made hot for the railways in the next Legislature by insisting on a pro rata freight tariff, advance of railway tax, and otherwise....Gen. Edwin S. McCook, Secretary of Dakota Territory, famous in the history of the late war as a member of the fighting McCook family, was assassinated at Yankton on the 11th inst., by P. P. Wintermute, a banker. It appears that they had had an altercation a few hours previous, in which McCook gave Wintermute a well-merited thrashing. Smarting under the chastisement, he went off and armed himself, and, subsequently meeting McCook in the St. Charles Hotel, where a railroad meeting was in session, deliberately shot him down in cold blood. The murderer fired four shots at his victim, only one taking effect, which proved fatal. There was much excitement, and threats of lynching Wintermute were freely made.

EDWARD BEANE, the freight conductor on the Chicago and Alton railroad, whose negligence caused the late disaster on that road, has been indicted for murder by the Cook County Grand Jury....The Chicago Board of Public Works expended last year $4,186,486. ....The advance of freight rates by the Minnesota railways has produced a feeling in some sections which, if it continues to spread throughout the State, will result in no good to the capital invested in railroads....Congressman Charles B. Farwell, of Chicago, has been sued by Hugh Maher for the recovery of 80 acres of land, valued at $1,000 an acre, which, it is alleged, was conveyed to Farwell by Maher to liquidate a gambling debt thirteen years ago....Samuel P. Freeman, City Clerk of Fort Wayne, Ind., commited suicide last week, by hanging himself to a bed-post. Domestic troubles, caused by too much mother-in-law, led him to commit the rash deed.

IOWA'S hog crop this year will amount to about 1,500,000 head....The skeleton of an immense mastodon has been exhumed near New Paris, O.

THE notorious "Lord" Gordon-Gordon was recently arrested some 400 miles west of Fort Garry, and is now confined in jail on a charge of larceny....A serious accident occurred on the Detroit and Milwaukee road, fifteen miles from Grand Haven, on the 15th inst., by which two persons were killed outright, two more are expected to die, the life of another is in doubt, and seven others are wounded more or less severely. The accident was caused by a bullock stepping upon the track thirty feet in front of the locomotive, which deliberately stood there until thrown down under the locomotive truck wheels, and suddenly throwing the tender, express, mail, and two coaches off the track. Six hundred people were on the train, and it is miraculous that so few were killed....Great damage has been done to the corn, tobacco and buckwheat crops by the early frost throughout the Northwest.... [illegible] bodies have been washed ashore from the foundered propeller Ironsides, and two persons are still missing. All the rest of those on board were saved. The steamer sank in 120 feet of water at a place four miles west by south of The Piers at Grand Haven, Mich. The cause of the accident was correctly given in the first dispatches. The steamer sprung a heavy leak at 7 o'clock, which gained so rapidly on the pumps that at 9 o'clock it put out the fires. When all hope of saving the vessel was gone, the crew and passengers took to the boats, and the loss of life occurred through the capsizing of two of them....Capt. Dennis Chapman, a member of the Chicago Board of Trade, committed suicide by blowing his brains out, last week. Financial troubles had crazed him.

THE two hundredth anniversary of the establishment by the great French explorer, La Salle, of Fort St. Louis upon Starved Rock, near Ottawa, Ill., was appropriately celebrated on the 16th inst. Hon. N. P. Armstrong related to an immense audience the legend of Starved Rock, as he had it when a boy from a celebrated Chief, Shick-Shack, then 104 years old, and who was an actor in all the bloody struggles between the Miami and Kickapoo and Illini or Pottawottamie Indians, beginning on the Wabash, continuing through Northern Illinois, including the starvation and massacre of the entire tribe of Illini Indians except seven at Starved Rock; the rupture between the two victorious tribes of Indians at Harding; their four years of war through Central Illinois to Kaskaskia, and thence to the Wabash, where the bloody duel was fought between the 600 savages, 300 on either side, and the vanquishment of the Miamis.... The Yellowstone expedition has completed its mission, and will shortly start on its homeward march. It has been a complete success, having accomplished every object for which it was inaugurated. An area of 20,000 square miles of unknown country has been explored, the Indians thoroughly thrashed, and the survey of the Northern Pacific railway completed....Twenty-four hours' imprisonment is the sentence pronounced upon the Manitoba prisoners concerned in kidnapping Lord Gordon. The temper of the Court and people seems to have become much mollified. Gov. Austin, of Minnesota, who was present, was invited to a seat on the bench beside the Judges. The trifling sentence was received with cheers by the audience, and, after the formalities of trial had been observed, the Americans and their friends spent the evening sociably with Judge Betourney.... Chicago was visited, on the 17th inst., by a destructive conflagration. A spark from a passing locomotive set fire to a hay shed, which was soon fanned into a flame. A high wind was prevailing at the time, and the fire spread with incredible rapidity, causing a wild panic. The flames were not subdued until ten acres of buildings had been consumed. The number of houses burned was fifty-three, nearly all of which were frame shanties of little value. Total loss about $250,000, one-third of which is covered by insurance....The lost propeller Ironsides is said to have long been in an unseaworthy condition, and that she had been leaking badly for several days before the accident......Chicago underwriters estimate the loss by the recent storm on Lake Michigan at half a million dollars.

The South.

THE steamer James Howard recently caught fire on the Mississippi, near Commerce, Mo., and was scuttled to save her from burning. The Howard was the largest steamboat ever built for the Western or Southern waters, being 3,300 tons burden. She cost $160,000, and was only three years old....A number of cattle thieves have lately been hung in Vermilion county, La., by the Vigilants....The yellow fever is raging in Memphis....Lord, the missing New York Herald correspondent, who disappeared from Shelbyville some weeks since, has been seen near Midway, Ky., and beyond there, walking through the country, splendidly dressed, with diamond studs and heavy gold watch and chain exposed to view.

THE sunken Mississippi steamer James Howard has been raised, and will be repaired. ....A dispatch from Shreveport, La., dated Sept. 16, says: "Of the six men in our telegraph office, five have taken the fever, and two have already died. The interments average thirty or forty daily in a population of perhaps not over 4,000. The physicians and nurses are worked down. The people of the country should know these terrible facts, and send aid to the suffering city."....S. H. Tucker, one of the oldest bankers of Little Rock, Ark., has suspended.

THERE has been great destruction of property along the Rio Grande, caused by the overflow. The cotton crop is destroyed, telegraph poles and railroad tracks washed away, the mails stopped, and all communication with the interior suspended.

A RAILROAD collision recently occurred near Columbia, S. C., by which two persons were killed, one mortally wounded, and two others slightly injured....The number of deaths from fever in Shreveport is fearful to contemplate. The mortality has scarcely a precedent in history. In some instances whole families were swept out of existence in the space of a few days. The Times of Sept. 18 says: Our stores are all closed, and our dwellings turned into hospitals. In fact, Shreveport is one great hospital, one great charnel-house, and the Times merely a death-record. The number of interments since the 1st of September sums up 226. The number of sick is variously estimated at from 500 to 800.

Washington.

HENRY D. COOKE, Governor of the District of Columbia, has resigned, and President Grant has appointed Alex. R. Shepherd to succeed him....It is rumored that a heavy military force is to be sent out to punish the Sioux and other formidable Indian tribes. The officials at the various Indian agencies have been directed by the Washington authorities to allow the sale of no arms or ammunition to Indians....Since July 1 the postal-carrier service has been established in twenty-two cities....One of the measures to be brought to the attention of Congress, as soon as possible, will be a bill for the adoption of measures for the prevention of the danger and the consequent losses of ships in the American lumber-trade on account of carrying deck loads in the winter months. The Canadian Parliament some time ago issued a law on the same subject.

EX-PRESIDENT Johnson is in Washington for the purpose of taking part in the controversy now going on respecting the trial and execution of Mrs. Surrat....The postal cards are arriving from the Morgan Envelope Company in a satisfactory manner, and it is said there will be no more trouble....The charges against Postmaster Filley, of St. Louis, will be thoroughly investigated, and if it is found that he has been assessing his employes his official head will go off.

THE condition of the United States Treasury is pronounced by Treasury officials to be excellent. It is predicted that, by the 1st of November, when the quarterly interest on Government bonds falls due, there will be a balance in the Treasury of quite $100,000,000 in coin, and even after deducting that interest, amounting to about $15,000,000, there will be as large a coin balance in the Treasury as has been shown any time during the year.

THE Department of Agriculture reports the increase in the area of cotton planted over that of last year at a little more than ten per cent. The status of the crop is indicated by the following averages in September: Virginia 98, North Carolina 95, South Carolina 86, Georgia 90, Florida 85, Alabama 85, Mississippi 82, Louisiana 80, Texas 92, Arkansas 93, Tennessee 92, Missouri 96. In September, 1872, the average was: Virginia 97, North Carolina 101, South Carolina 93, Georgia 96, Florida 9[illegible], Alabama 8[illegible], Mississippi 9[illegible], Louisiana 80, Texas 94, Arkansas 75, Tennessee 92.

The cholera is increasing in France, Italy, Russia and Germany....Six persons were killed and thirty-two wounded by a recent railroad accident between Madrid and Vittoria, Spain....The news from Spain gives rather an encouraging view of Castelar's Government. It is believed he will be able to place a large army in the field against the Carlists, and that he will at once enter upon an active and aggressive campaign....There has been a serious political riot at Tralee, Ireland....Railway accidents are becoming alarmingly frequent in England. Three occurred in one day recently. ....Amendments have been made in the Japan criminal law by which many offenses punishable by death may be atoned for by imprisonment for life....The drought in several provinces of China is great, and threatens famine and pestilence of the worst kind....Che-ki-[illegible], a curious barbarous custom, has been revived at Shanghai on account of the expected famine. Several men came before the authorities and asked permission to pray to God that the calamity be averted. If the prayer is not answered within a certain time, they will suffer themselves to be buried alive. The applications were rejected....A serious riot in the Presidency of Madras, India, was suppressed by the troops—not, however, before they had killed eight of the rioters.

THE recent railway disaster in Spain was far more serious than at first announced. Seventeen passengers were killed and seventy wounded. Scarcely a person on the train escaped injury.....A slave ship was lately captured in the Indian ocean upon which there had been horrible suffering. Out of 300 slaves taken on board, 250 had died of small-pox, and the remaining 50 were prostrated with the disease....Verdun has been evacuated by the German troops, and there is great rejoicing throughout France.....Subscriptions in Havana for the relief of the sufferers by the recent conflagration amount to $200,000.

THE farmers of Tennessee, in State convention at Nashville, have voted to eschew politics....The Prohibitionists of New York have nominated a full ticket for State offices.

General.

"WHO burned Columbia?" is a question on the answer to which many million dollars' worth of cotton claims depend. The testimony hitherto has been of a puzzling, conflicting nature, Gen. Wade Hampton swearing positively that it was done by Northern troops, and the Union soldiers and officers who were witnesses before the Cotton-Claims Commission averring as positively that the cotton was burning when they reached Columbia. Gen. Sherman has just made public some additional evidence in the case. It is the testimony of an irregular detachment of the Seventeenth Corps, who entered Columbia three-quarters of an hour before the regular entry of Federal troops. They allege that they saw the Southern soldiers setting fire to the bales of cotton in the streets, and the testimony, says Gen. Sherman, is conclusive enough to warrant him in reiterating his former statement, that the destruction of the cotton was the work of the Southern army.

ON the recent voyage to New York of the steamship City of Brooklyn, a woman who was a steerage passenger, insane from sickness, threw her little boy, 4 years of age, overboard, and then with her babe in her arms jumped into the sea. She was rescued, but the children were drowned.

FROM a report just issued, it appears that the American Bible Society consists of 2,125 life directors and 42,000 life members. The receipts of the last fiscal year were $737,831, of which $18,789 remain unexpended. During the fifty-seven years of its existence it has published 29,982,212 volumes, in thirty-five dialects and languages.

THE Transportation Committee of the United States Senate visited Montreal last week, to have a talk with the leading Canadians concerning the improvement of water routes. They were well received and hospitably entertained.

TERRIBLE DISASTER.

Loss of the Propeller Ironsides off Grand Haven, Mich.—Upward of Twenty Lives Lost.

[Grand Haven (Sept. 15) Dispatch to Chicago Tribune.]

The steamer Ironsides, of the Engleman line, one of the largest steamers on the lakes, foundered and sunk when seven miles off this port, at noon to-day. Her signal of distress was hoisted at 9 o'clock this morning, but so terrible was the heavy sea and high wind that no assistance could possibly reach her. She labored in the troughs of the sea from 7:30 in the morning till the time she sunk. The passengers and crew—of whom there were nineteen of the former and thirty of the latter—manned the lifeboats and left the steamer about 11 a. m., the last boat leaving her at 11:50 a. m. When the last boat had got about a quarter of a mile from her, she went down. There were five boats filled with the crew and passengers. One of the boats, having five men and four women on board, capsized, and only one man reached the shore. Four boats have reached the shore up to 11 p. m. The boat with Capt. Sweetman, his wife, and five passengers has not yet been heard from; it is feared they are among the lost. Thirty-two persons are known to have been saved. Fourteen bodies have been recovered.

The Ironsides was in plain sight of the harbor until she went to the bottom. Senator Ferry was one of the first to discover her signal of distress, about 9 o'clock, but it was too late, even had there been a boat here which could side the terrible sea, to carry relief. The propeller Lake Breeze bravely undertook the task, but was herself disabled before getting half a mile out of the harbor. The following is the statement of the Ironsides' clerk, Mr. E. T. Watkins:

"We left Milwaukee at 9:10 last night with nineteen passengers and a crew of thirty men, and were due in Grand Haven between 5 and 6 this morning. The cargo consisted of 12,000 bushels of wheat, [illegible]00 barrels of flour, 125 barrels of pork, and some miscellaneous articles. This was a very light cargo, since the boat could carry 1,100 tons. A moderate gale was blowing from the southwest, which constantly increased until it became a terrific gale before daylight. I did not get up until 9 o'clock, when the boat was rolling fearfully. I immediately went below and found the men working at the pumps. The water had already put out the fires, and the engines were useless. I then went to the office and got the passenger register, money, and manifest, and went on the hurricane deck, where I found Capt. Sweetman getting the foresail on. He was thoroughly self-possessed, and the men obeyed orders promptly. We then made about three miles toward the shore. The signal of distress had been raised at 9:30. About 10 o'clock the passengers all put on life-preservers, for it was evident the boat must go down. At 11:20 the Captain ordered the boats to be manned. In the first boat all the lady passengers, except one, were placed; in the second boat were ten or twelve of the passengers and crew. I took charge of the third boat, which carried seven passengers, including one lady, and two of the crew besides myself, all of whom were saved. After we pushed off, I saw two other boats leave the wreck, in one of which I supposed the Captain to be. My boat was nearly half a mile from the Ironsides when she sank, stern foremost, about five miles from the shore. It was ten minutes past 12 when she disappeared. She was estimated to be worth about $115,000; was thoroughly overhauled last winter, and was considered one of the staunchest boats on the lake."

STATEMENT OF A PASSENGER.

Mr. F. N. Ripley, of Lowell, Mass., a very intelligent young man, who was one of the saved, gives the following additional particulars: "The sea became so rough a little after midnight that I could not sleep, though accustomed to the water. After daylight the boat rolled so desperately that every movable thing was smashing about the vessel, and it was impossible to cross the cabin. It was between 7 and 8 o'clock when we came in sight of the harbor, and it was so rough that it seemed unwise to attempt an entrance. We could see the light-houses and the vessels on the beach, and wondered that no one came to our relief.

"It was a sad sight. The passengers stood in silence with their life-preservers on, knowing that in a few moments they would all be at the mercy of the breakers. But all were calm and self-possessed. Capt. Sweetman behaved with the utmost coolness and courage, and the crew obeyed every order readily. We were all washed out of the boat in which I was placed, when within thirty rods of the shore, but were rescued by those on the beach in a most gallant way. I was picked up unconscious, but am all right now. The Captain said it was the roughest sea he had ever seen on the lakes."

Those familiar with the shore say that the Ironsides went down in not less than forty fathoms of water.

The Patent Office.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Patents for the year 1872 has just been issued from the Government Printing Office. It gives a complete alphabetical list of patents for the year —13,590 in number—with name, residence and invention, alphabetical lists of inventions, designs, re-issues, extensions, disclaimers and trade marks. In addition to this technical information there is a considerable amount of statistical, official and general matter, which conveys some idea of the vast field of scientific and mechanical progress covered by the ingenuity of the people of the United States. The report gives the following exhibit of the business of the office for the year ending Dec. 31, 1872:

Application for patents	18,246
Patents issued, including reissues and designs	13,590
Applications for extension of patents	285
Patents extended	240
Caveats filed	3,090
Patents expired	3,481
Patents allowed, but not issued for want of final fee	2,392

The following were the nationalities of the patentees:

United States	13,009
Great Britain	445
France	51
Other Governments	85
Total	13,590

The following shows the number of patents by States and Territories and army and navy:

	No.		No.
Alabama	45	Nebraska	22
Arkansas	13	Nevada	22
California	265	New Hampshire	122
Colorado	12	New Jersey	682
Connecticut	[illegible]	New Mexico	2
Dakota	2	New York	3,079
Delaware	42	North Carolina	36
District of Columbia	148	Ohio	985
Florida	8	Oregon	23
Georgia	59	Pennsylvania	1,575
Idaho	1	Rhode Island	179
Illinois	863	South Carolina	29
Indiana	385	Tennessee	105
Iowa	235	Texas	73
Kansas	73	Utah	3
Kentucky	[illegible]	Vermont	91
Louisiana	[illegible]	Virginia	106
Maine	170	Washington	3
Maryland	242	West Virginia	57
Massachusetts	1,485	Wisconsin	201
Michigan	[illegible]	Wyoming	1
Minnesota	78	United States army	7
Mississippi	75	United States navy	8
Missouri	251

The financial exhibit of the office is not only flattering to its prosperity and magnitude, but shows that it is one of the few, very few, self-supporting branches of the Government.

For the year ending Dec. 31, 1872, the receipts and expenditures were as follows:

Receipts	$699,726.39
Expenditures	665,595.00

The state of business at different times from 1837, the date of the present organization of the Bureau, to 1872, may be seen by the following comparative exhibit:

Pure Iron.

Absolutely pure iron is said to have been produced by a Russian chemist by means of the galvanic battery. During the process a large quantity of hydrogen was disengaged from the ordinary iron used. The pure iron is a silver-white metal, very malleable and ductile, and so soft as to be readily cut with a pair of scissors. It is very different from iron which has hitherto been supposed to be pure. It oxidizes very rapidly, and water is decomposed by it by the rapid absorption of oxygen.

COMBINE.

Let Farmers Use Combination Against Combination, and Lock Up Their Products.

[Extracts from the Speech of S. M. Smith, at Carrollton, Ill.]

* * * Now I have brought this just where I wanted it. Find what will be a fair, reasonable price for your products, and hold them at that. But they [the monopolists] turn around in this bugbear style, and say we are in debt. Let us get out of debt. Anything short of freezing and starvation, for a couple of years, that we may own ourselves hereafter, is preferable to going on in the way we are. Do not buy anything that you can do without. Cannot we do without some of the luxuries we have? Cannot we do without tea, sugar, coffee, tobacco, or whisky, if necessary? I will agree to do all that for a couple of years, if you will turn in and help me, and let the saving accumulate. If it is the surplus that reduces the price of our products, let us make a surplus of theirs. Will not that make it equal again? That is the true remedy to begin with, and until we come to that point we are simply slaves. So long as we allow other people to fix a price upon our labor, just so long are we slaves, having the semblance, and nothing else, of freemen.

So I say there is a necessity for organization, for combination to meet combination. We can gain by concerted action just what these women did with their butter. See how easily we can meet combination with combination provided we all agree; but how are you going to agree in anything unless you come together, united in a common bond with a common purpose? If we have union of action in this matter, the victory is ours. It is won in a moment.

ACTION OF THE PORK PACKERS.

There are my friends the pork packers from all the principal cities in this Union, who last year met and combined to fix the price of pork. You know that as well as I. St. Louis, Milwaukee, Chicago, Louisville, and Cincinnati came together, just as they are going to convene next week at Chicago, and fixed the price of our pork for the coming year, just as coolly as the master sold the slave or the products of his labor. Last year they fixed the price upon your pork at $4 a hundred, live weight, and they would buy all there was in the West at that. Of course they got it, and if they had fixed the price at $2 they would have had it. ["I only got $3.25."] Probably the high price for freight made the difference in your case.

What right had they to do this? Certain people denounce me because I use strong language. Col. Coleman called these pork men scoundrels, and I believe it is a good word; for the man who robs me is a scoundrel. They combined to rob us. The scoundrels came together and fixed their price, and the pork began coming in. The men who were in debt, and whose notes for these reapers and mowers had matured, sold first, and when they were through, the stream stopped. It costs as much to run a packing-house half time as it does whole, and as the pork did not come in, they put the price up 40 cents a hundred, and that started the stream again, and the next set of men, whose notes for reapers and corn-planters had matured, sent in another lot. When that was worked up, the pork-packers put up the price another 40 cents, and another lot came along.

WHAT FIXES THE PRICE OF PORK AND CORN.

I admit that there are very many rich farmers in our country; but the rich ones are the exception, and the poor ones are the rule; that is the difference. But did your rich men, who did not owe a dollar in the world, and who have your farms stocked and paid for, stop to think who fixed the price on your pork? Why the men who owed the first notes for reapers, and sold the first lot of hogs, fixed the price of yours. The price of your poduce, be it what it may, is determined by the figure at which those who must sell dispose of theirs. Those who must sell fix the price for those who need not. Is it not, then, worth while to have an union of all interested, to come together and be brothers in fact as in name? We can protect each other; and, while we protect our poor neighbor, and assist him over a tight place, we are protecting ourselves. because, if he must sell at 20 cents, that fixes the price upon our corn. This is inevitable; for suppose you have a deficit of a million bushels of wheat in this State, and have to send out of Illinois to buy it, the price at which you can lay it down where it is wanted for consumption fixes the price of all there is in the State for home consumption. If there is a surplus of a million, in just the same way the price at which you buy corn and pork of those who must sell fixes the price for those who need not sell. Then it is your interest to come together in these Farmers' Clubs and Granges, organizations and combinations for a common purpose, which is the mutual self-protection of the whole people. I do not believe there is anything impossible in this world if we only say we will. I never found the words "I can't" in any book I ever saw.

COME UP AND JOIN THE ORGANIZATION.

I know some of you are standing aloof, that there are thousands and tens of thousands in this and other States who are hanging back, saying, "I do not see that it is any use to pay a dollar to get into this organization, and attend these club meetings, because it will not amount to anything. I will not get my money back." So long as you say that, this reform of ours will drag. Remember the fable of the bundle of rods, for that tells the whole story. The father handed to his quarreling sons a bundle of rods, and said: "Pull one out, and see how easily you can break it, but put them all together and your united strength cannot break them." So our numerical strength makes us irresistible if you will use the power you have. Combination will beat combination. When those villains and scoundrels combined at $4 for your pork, how easily you could have met them. Did you ever stop to think, my friends, that not a single locomotive nor car can run over these prairies of ours without the oil manufactured from the hog, and with which they grease their wheels. Shut down on your pork for one season, and you dry up every locomotive in the State. They cannot run a day without you, nor can people do without pork as an article of food, without lard, or your other products. The wheels of the world will not go, unless you grease them with the products of your toil. Then why will you give it away, and sell for $4 a hundred what cost you $5 or $6? It is for want of this combination, just because you are scattered all over these broad prairies and do not see anything beyond the little patch of real estate that you call your own, and beyond which you never cast a thought. There you are tugging away for very life, year after year, to see how much more you can produce, in order to fatten the cormorants who are wringing the very life out of you and taking three-quarters of the profits of our labor. And you keep tugging on in that way without a thought as to whether there is any possibility of bettering your condition.

AND VICTORY IS YOURS.

But when you come together and enter into a combination of this sort by your State, county, township, or precinct associations, one auxiliary to the others all the way up, and when the machinery is perfect, I say you have a combination that is irresistible, for the reason that you hold in your hands the breadstuffs which feed the world; and when you lock up your corn-cribs and granaries, and refuse to open them, you bring the world to your feet at once, because it cannot exist one day without you. You see the proof of it, on a small scale, in what happened about the butter. The thing is feasible right there. One of these railroad lords, who lives in comfort and ease, cannot eat a meal without some of that golden luxury that your wife and mine manipulate for him, for it is a positive necessity. I have seen my wife work over that refractory cream that would not come, and put in a little cold water, and a little hot water, until I could have pitched the whole thing into the hog-pen and let it go. I have looked by the hour and wondered at her patience, and admired that industry which would stick to that cream and produce by her manipulations that golden luxury fit for a king; and then I have had to take it to town, and go into a store with my hat under my arm, and say, "What will you please give me for this butter?" Who does not know that this is all wrong with that woman, after having stopped to give this subject a moment's thought?

IS IT WRONG FOR FARMERS' WIVES TO WEAR SILK DRESSES?

But this reminds me of another thing. It is only a month since a railroad king in the city of Chicago told a gentleman he had found out what was the matter with the farmers. The railroads were carrying corn as low as they could, but the trouble was that we had got extravagant, and some of us were actually dressing our wives and daughters in silk. That was what was the matter—we had actually been guilty of the crime of dressing our wives and daughters in silk! Can you imagine with what a sneer he said it? Can you imagine with what contempt he looked down upon us poor clods of earth who had worked and toiled through the hot sun of summer and the cold of winter, who had worn rags and patches, who had suffered privations and hardships until we were prematurely aged, older than we ought to have been at a hundred, while our wives had labored on through the burning summer days, with work never ceasing when the sun went down, so that everything might be ready for the morrow? And these scoundrels sneer at us because we give our wives a silk dress. Think of that! That is the way they speak of us. They look down upon us after they have robbed us by their extortions, and by taxing us three-quarters of the price of our products to take the other quarter to market; and well they may look down on us, when I come to think of it. It strikes me the first great law is this: if we would have others respect us, we must have some self-respect. Now, in God's name, from this day on, let us stand right up in the pride of our manhood and assert our God-given right to fix a price upon our own labor, and that henceforth and forever no banker, railroad king, or manufacturer, of whatever material, shall ever do it for us. The moment we come to that we get right out of the hovel of which I spoke.

TRY THE EXPERIMENT OF ORGANIZATION.

You and I, my friends, know it is true, notwithstanding those politicians—men who would destroy the influence of those of us who are going about the country talking about these things. They fear we have a little influence, and they want to destroy it, because they think we are stirring you up to break the chains with which they have bound you down through the ages. It is a relic of barbarism that has come down to us from the feudal ages, when we were hewers of wood and drawers of water, and when, as Hammond, of South Carolina, called us, we were the mudsills of society. We have furnished half the money to build these roads, and then they have taxed us three-quarters of our products to carry what was left to market. I know you will bear plain talk from me, for I am one of you; there is not a single thing connected with farming that I do not know. I know how meanly I have felt when I have gone to ask men what they would give my wife for butter, and when I have sold for 20 cents corn that cost me 30. This is not all. I know how hard it is to earn money on a farm, and pay for that farm. It is impossible; you cannot do it. What is the consequence? Why, you toil on till your head blossoms for the grave, and then the man who holds the mortgages takes the farm. That is what we are coming to speedily, unless we change it soon. Come up, then, and join these organizations. Do not stand back, as I saw men doing at your meeting this morning, who, when invited to come up and pay their dollar, went down stairs. It will be the best dollar you ever spent in your lives, if you get up a club or grange in every precinct in your county, and attend those gatherings as faithfully as you do your religious meetings. Make that the home where you come together with your wives and daughters, and consult about these things. Bring them there, and be what you never have been before—social beings. Abandon that isolation in which you have been so long that the milk of human kindness has all soured or dried up. Come together socially, and talk over these matters which concern us all alike, and let us concoct a scheme to meet those who are robbing us. Let us meet them with counter-schemes, and fix the price upon our products, and have it every time. The moment we make this organization general all over the United States, and bring the farmers all together in one common bond, the victory is won, and we have no more to do. This is all feasible. "Go thou and do likewise," like the ladies with their butter. Just try the experiment. Shut right down on them. "If you want my butter, you can have it for a quarter; if not, let it alone." I tell you in a week they would come after it, and this is what I want them to come to. I have been running after them long enough. I want them to hitch up their teams and come and say, "Mr. Smith, I want a bushel of potatoes; what do you ask?" I want that, instead of my shouldering them into town, and their saying, "I will give you 18 cents for them." My old back has been bent double many a day carrying potatoes and flour to the wagon, and then up some three or four pairs of stairs, and then selling 6,000 pounds for $18. Is that sufficient pay for such service?

Lightning Not Such a Terror, After All.

The following extracts from a compilation of statistics, made by some benevolent writer on the staff of the Hartford Courant, will give new courage to all those who carefully bestow themselves in cellars or feather-beds on the approach of a thunder-storm: "Taking the figures of the last census report for our facts, we find that, during the year 1870, there were, in the whole country, 202 deaths from lightning-stroke. Let womankind take notice that, out of these, 148 deaths were males, and only 54 of females. The total number of deaths from all causes was nearly 500,000. There 2,437 deaths from other causes to one death from lightning, and there were 190,888 persons living to every one killed by this cause. It is somewhat singular that the lightning was decidedly more destructive with both males and females between the ages of ten and thirty years than with any others; between ten and fifteen years is the most fatal time, but even then the number is very small. While only 202 persons died from lightning-stroke in 1870, there were 397 deaths from sunstroke, or nearly twice as many. It is also noticeable that there were 1,345 deaths by suicide, while there were only 202 deaths by lightning; in other words, an individual is six times as likely to kill himself as lightning is to kill him."

How to Manage an Unmanageable Horse.

A beautiful and high-spirited horse would never allow a shoe to be put on his feet, or any person to handle his feet. In an attempt to shoe such a horse recently, he resisted all efforts, kicked aside everything but an anvil, and came near killing himself against that, and finally was brought back to his stable unshod. This defect was just on the eve of consigning him to the plough, where he might work barefoot, when an officer in our service, lately returned from Mexico, took a cord about the size of a common bedcord, put it in the the mouth of the horse like a bit, and tied it tightly on the animal's head, passing his left ear under the string, not painfully tight, but tight enough to keep the ear down and the cord in its place. This done, he patted the horse gently on the side of the head, and commanded him to follow; and instantly the horse obeyed, perfectly subdued and as gentle and obedient as a well-trained dog; suffering his feet to be lifted with entire impunity, acting in all respects like an old stager. The gentleman who thus furnished this exceedingly simple means of subduing a very dangerous propensity, intimated that it is practiced in Mexico and South America in the management of wild horses.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

How Charles O'Conor Insulted a Reporter and Apologized for It.

It is a generally accepted maxim that prosperity makes a man who has risen from adversity overbearing, tyrannical, and sometimes insulting, or, in other words, that he forgets his humble origin in his desire to be looked up to as a great man. Yet there are many illustrations that give the contradiction to this theory. One occurred a few days ago in which Charles O'Conor, the great civil lawyer, figured as the chief actor, and as it shows the bright side of his character, I will give you the facts. One of the leading dailies, desiring the opinion of this eminent jurist on some point, dispatched an old and experienced reporter, who served with distinction as an army officer, to see Mr. O'Conor. Sending in his card, Mr. O'Conor came out, and petulantly opened thus before the reporter had time to say "Good morning:"

"Do you come to take down what I say and what I refuse to say?"

"Certainly, sir, to take what you do say if you have no objections, bu. —"

Before he had finished the sentence the great lawyer wheeled about and hissed, as he slammed the door upon himself:

"Then, sir, that is your answer."

Mr. O'Conor disappeared in his private office, and the reporter, who had never received so gross an insult before in his eventful life, hesitated a moment whether to send in and withdraw his card, but finally left with the impression that Charles O'Conor lacked one great requisite of a gentleman—civility. Later in the day another gentleman from the same journal called upon Mr. O'Conor and was well received. To him Mr. O'Conor expressed his regrets at his rudeness, and requested him to present an apology to his brother reporter, remarking that he could not forget the fact that when his (Mr. C.'s) father published a paper, the position of a journalist was not as honorable as it is now. Charles O'Conor apologizing to a newspaper reporter! you exclaim. Yes, even this great jurist, seeing his error, was not too proud to admit it and seek to soften the feeling that was created toward him by his hasty action. There are many who think that O'Conor is in his dotage, and is no longer the lawyer of great intellect and commanding influence; but they are evidently deceived in this hastily-formed opinion, as his opinions and counsel are sought often by brother lawyers whenever intricate questions of law arise.—New York Letter.

The Public "Eye."

It is remarkable what an important part of the various organs of the human body play in political rhetoric. The "finger of scorn" is recklessly pointed; the "loyal heart" beats worse than a Zouave drum corps; and the "avenging hand" is always ready to shake up things generally. But perhaps the largest business in caucus and editorial thunder and lightning is done with the "eye." Already, in this terrible canine period, when humanity struggles against heat, and drizzle, and wretched, nasty mugginess, to exist, the merciless campaigners have commenced operations, and announce that the "thoughtful eye" of the country "is fixed on us." Sometimes this uncomfortable public orb is "scornful," sometimes "indignant," sometimes "rejoicing," but its favorite position seems to be "fixed." Out in Ohio they are having a hullaballoo, and they claim this obtrusive "eye" is fixed on them. We can't explain this diversity of glare, except on the theory that this awful "eye" is a revolver, and yet that destroys the notion of its being "fixed." It is equally astonishing how soon after the squabble has ended this "thoughtful eye" shuts up and behaves itself, and don't come staring round till another political fracas, which acts as the great "eye"-opener, and we have the old fuss and fury over again.

India Rubber.

A genuine article of india rubber is becoming more and more rare in the manufactures which go by that name. One criterion which is named for good rubber is that of its floating on water, its specific gravity being 0.985. The addition of any mineral adulteration of course renders it heavier than water, and it sinks; but recently cork has been introduced as an adulteration, and as it injures the quality without increasing the weight, specific gravity becomes an insufficient test of quality. In some specimens examined at the chemical works in Stolberg, forty or fifty per cent. of mineral constituents were found. In the light of these facts, a good substitute for rubber in the arts is a desideratum. One such, lately brought to notice, is a gum produced from the milkweed plant, or other varieties of the esceplia family, and flax and other seeds, by macerating and fermenting the substances, and then by evaporation reducing the resulting liquid to a thick gummy mass. The gum thus obtained may be cheaply produced, and is said to have many of the valuable qualities of rubber—is insoluble in water, may be vulcanized, etc.

The King of Beasts.

Fortunately for African hunters, the ion is a calculating fellow, and does not spring upon his prey till he has measured the ground, and has reached the distance of ten or twelve paces, where he lies crouching upon the ground, gathering himself for the effort. The hunters make it a rule never to fire upon the lion till he lies down at this short distance, so that they can aim directly at the head with the most perfect certainty. If a person has the misfortune to meet a lion, his only hope is to stand perfectly still, even though the animal crouches to make a spring—that spring will not be hazarded if the man has only nerve enough to remain motionless as a statue, and look steadily at the lion. The animal hesitates, rises slowly, retreats some steps, looking earnestly about him, lies down, again retreats, till having thus by degrees got quite out of what he seems to feel as the magic circle of man's influence, he takes flight in the utmost haste.

Ventriloquism Easily Acquired.

A writer in the Chicago Advance says that "the ventriloquist's art is as easy to learn as falling off a log. He maintains that there is no difficulty in acquiring the power. In the first place, he says, speak any word or sentence in your own natural tone; then open the mouth and fix your jaws fast, as though trying to hinder any one from opening them further or shutting them; draw the tongue back in a ball; speak the same words, and the sound, instead of being formed in the mouth, will be formed in the pharynx. Great attention must be paid to holding the jaws rigid. The sound will then be found to imitate a voice from the other side of the door when it is closed, or under a floor, or through a wall. To imitate a sound behind a door partly open, the voice must not be altered from the original note or pitch, but be made in another part of the mouth. This is done by closing the lips tight and drawing one corner of the mouth downward or toward the ear. Then let the lips open at that corner only, the other part to remain closed. Next, breathe, as it were, the words out of the orifice formed. Do not speak the words distinctly, but expel the breath in short puffs at each word, and as loud as possible. By so doing, you produce the illusion in the minds of your listeners that they hear the same voice which they heard when the door was closed, but more distinctly and hearer on account of the door being open. The lips must always be used when the ventriloquist wishes it to appear that the sound comes through an obstacle, but from some one close at hand.

The Spittoon Party.

The publication of a private letter from Sir John A. Macdonald, which was purloined from the postoffice, has occasioned much excitement in Canade. The Montreal Witness relates a sort of precedent, in the famous "Spittoon Disclosures" of the Ontario Legislature, as follows: "During the debates which preceded the downfall of the Sandfield-Macdonald Cabinet, after the Ministry had been left in the minority on one or two votes, thus giving Mr. Blake the practical control of the House, a note was sent him by Mr. Wood, who, upon receiving it, got up and told the House he had resigned his position in the Cabinet. The note was seen to pass by some member of the Conservative party, who saw Mr. Wood tear it in two and throw it into the spittoon or on the floor, and, waiting until he had left his place, went there and found it, pasted it together, and read it to the House, founding on it a charge of collusion for the overthrow of the Ministry between Mr. Blake and Mr. Wood. The note was engraved on wood and published in the Mail, and formed the text for innumerable articles in the whole Conservative press. The honor of picking up the note and pasting it together was first ascribed to T. R. Ferguson, who gave it to the House; but Mr. M. C. Cameron relieved him from the rather questionable honor without giving the real name, whereupon the Reform journals gave Mr. Cameron the credit for the action, and for being too modest to own it, and dubbed the party the 'Spittoon party,' as he was the leader."

Terrible Tragedy in Kentucky.

A horrible story comes to us from Kentucky. Two brothers, Jasper and Clay Wadkins, residing at Burksville, have been at enmity for nearly two years, and time, instead of softening their passion, seems only to have intensified it. Ten days ago the brothers met, and after some heated words Jasper shot Clay, inflicting a wound which confined him to his bed. A few days afterward Jasper, accompanied by his young wife, a bride of a week, went to his mother's house, where Clay was lying, and entered into a short conversation with the wounded man, his wife meantime stealthily drawing a revolver and advancing to the bedside. When she was within two feet of the bed she suddenly presented the revolver and sent a bullet through Clay's heart, killing him instantly. The shocking deed has no parallel in the history of crime. The girl is but 17 years of age, had no personal cause of ill-will toward her victim, and that she could be induced to espouse her husband's cause to such an extreme almost transcends belief. The guilty couple are now in jail, and we must await the trial before learning her motives and the origin of the quarrel which ended so tragically.—Exchange.

Dainty Piutes.

The Piutes have been to Mono Lake, having a pow-wow and one of their native dances. The water of the lake is very peculiar. Barbers have brought it here for shampooing, saying it was much better than anything they could prepare. If persons going in the lake for a bath stay in the water a few minutes, they have such a pricking and itching sensation of the skin that they have to go to a spring of fresh water and wash their bodies for relief. At this season of the year the water is thick with small worm, about half an inch long, that changes to a species of fly, and a light breeze of wind will drive windrows of them on the shore. The Indians rub off the outer shell or skin, winnow them, and gather bushels of the bodies for winter food. Another of their customs is scraping the ground clean under a pine tree, and making a fire under the tree, the smoke causing worms about the size and as long as a finger to fall from the tree, which they gather for winter food. They have no idea of cultivation, and only depend upon what Nature has provided, except what they get from the whites for work done. When they have money they will buy refuse beef, but no pork. When the butcher kills, they help him, and take the head, legs, and entrails to their camp.—Nevada Letter.

THE New York papers announced, all through the early summer, that the number of Americans going to Europe was immense—larger than ever before—50,000 at the least—and all caused by the high prices at the watering places, which, they assured us, were well nigh deserted. It turns out, now, that the number reached only 18,533, which is just 495 more than last year, and that the watering places were not deserted, after all.

The Saratoga correspondent of the Boston Journal gives this overdrawn and highly-colored picture of the Hon. John Morrissey: On the piazza of the Congress can be seen any day a large-sized and heavy-molded man, all alone. He seldom speaks to any one. His voice is peculiar. He speaks as if he had a chronic cold. He wears a white flannel coat. His hair is black and crisp; his nose deformed as if broken in some affray. This man is Morrissey. A few years ago he was a prize-fighter. Then he kept a low groggery in Troy. He came to New York in desperation to mend his fortunes. New York was ruled by roughs. Armed ruffians went from ward to ward, smashing up ballot-boxes and often the heads of the men in charge. In one ward John A. Kennedy, just deceased, resolved to put an end to this outrage. Morrissey was sought and engaged to strike back for a consideration. He was such a desperate-looking fellow that Mrs. Kennedy was afraid of him, and advised her husband to have nothing to do with him. He organized a band of roughs and took possession of the polls. A harder-looking set was never seen. At noon a wagon-load of desperadoes drove up. Inspector Carpenter was on duty. "Can I go in, Cap.?" asked the leader. "Yes, walk in." Morrissey and his fifty associates said, "Good morning." "I guess you don't need me here," said the leader, and drove off. Morrissey won. With his wages he bought a clean shirt and a decent suit of clothes. He had cash enough left to open a small drinking-saloon. He is now a millionaire. He helps all who wish to fight the tiger. He don't drink—he don't play. He may swear, but no one hears him. No one goes to bed so late without leaving Morrissey up. No one gets up so early but they find him quietly walking around as if he had no employment and no interest in Saratoga. He is the chum of the eminent men of Church and State. He is hand in glove with the heavy men of Wall street. He has been to Congress, and can put "Hon." to his name. He is the king-pin of Saratoga. Men of parts allow him to slap them on the back. He holds the Commodore's horse when he returns from a ride. Prominent persons are "proud" to know him. Half New York has had its legs under his mahogany. When he was in Congress, he refused to be introduced to anybody. His uniform answer was, "I am here at my desk; if any one wishes to see me, let him come here."

Egostic Talkers.

Almost every circle is blessed with the egotist, who exercises a kind of dictatorship over it. Are you mistaken as to a matter of fact? He cannot suffer you to proceed until you are corrected. Have you a word on the end of your tongue? He at once comes to your relief. Do you talk bad grammar? He quotes rules and gives examples like a pedagogue. Does he discover that there is a link wanting in the chain of your argument? He bids you stay till he has supplied it. Do you drop a word to which he has devoted much research? He asks you whether you know its primitive signification, and straightway inflicts upon the circle a long philological disquisition. When you relate an incident which you suppose new and affecting, your friend listens without emotion. When you have done, he observes that he heard it long ago, and adds a very material circumstance which you omitted. He is never taken by surprise, and it is impossible to give him any information. And yet he never takes the lead in conversation, nor advances an original thought. It is his business to come after, and pick up the words that others let slip in a running talk, or to check their impetuosity, that he may point out to them their missteps. Had he lived in the days of Solomon, he would have flattered the royal sage with an intimation that some of his proverbs were but plagiarisms; or had he been a contemporary of Solomon's father, would have felt himself bound to give the slayer of Goliath a few lessons on the sling, and hinted to the sweet singer of Israel his private opinion that the shepherd bard did not perfectly understand the use of the harp.

A Woman of Nerve.

As Mrs. Carter, whose summer residence is near Sing Sing, was approaching the depot to the train from Albany, last week, she put her arm out of the car window to wave her handkerchief to her children, who were awaiting her arrival, and at that moment the cars passed close to an iron post, and this struck Mrs. Carter's arm with such violence that the sound of the concussion was plainly audible to those sitting near. She, however, did not utter even the slightest exclamation of pain, but with the aid of her other hand, quietly drew her injured arm into her lap, and, with tightly-compressed lips, only looked the pain she was undergoing. "I am afraid my arm is broken; but please don't mention it," she said, in answer to sympathetic glances. An examination showed that her arm was fractured in two places, but, on the train's arrival at the depot, she walked quietly to her carriage, hiding her agony lest it should cause pain to those dear to her.—Poughkeepsie Eagle.

Wandering a Benefit.

A writer in the Hearth and Home writes as follows: "If I had a boy that wanted to run off, I would strap a knapsack on his back and send him off. The chances are that sore muscles and poor beds, good appetite and bad dinners, would fetch him back again. But that we all have the vagabond instinct, let this summer loafing by the sea and on the mountains bear witness. The more conventional our city life becomes, the stronger is the passionate impulse to break the chains of social restraint and do as we please for a while. It is the counterpoise that preserves the equilibrium of life. But what if the boy sent out with his knapsack had hardihood enough to bear the inconveniences of his life? He would get more good from straying than from school. Have I not tried it? And if I had a boy to educate I should send him on a pilgrimage, that he might serve apprenticeship to the world as did Wilhelm Meister. He might contract bad habits in his wanderings. So he might contract bad habits and more easily at college. But I would not, therefore, keep him at home. Liberty is a good tonic."

Fresh Danberries.

—Columbia hailed, Saturday. Some of the stones were 2¼ inches in circumference. Good for the Government.

—It is a painful sight to see an old man, seventy years of age, trying to sap the stamp from a second-hand postal card.

—A Brookfield man who came to Danbury for a fortnight's visit and was obliged to leave at the end of the first week, told his host that he would take the balance in money.

—An elderly gentleman named Pinkney, living in Redding Ridge, we believe, while going to the depot in Danbury, last evening, stepped on a peach pit in front of the post-office, and sat down on the pavement with shocking violence. Several people ran to his aid, and one of them asked him if he had hurt his spine. "Heaven only knows," feebly gasped the sufferer; "Look in my hat and see."

—An eighty-four-year-old Danburian who lives in the suburbs was sitting on his back stoop, last Friday, taking an after-dinner smoke, when he detected a movement at the edge of the onion bed, and saw signs that led him to believe a woodchuck was partaking of a hasty lunch of onion tops. Calling in a whisper for his gun, and taking his grandchild, who was playing on the stoop, between his knees, to keep her still, he drew bead on the spot, and poured a handful of slugs into it. Then he told his daughter to go out there and bring in the animal—and on going there she found a large pie-plant leaf (the waving of which had created the "signs"), about a peck of very sick looking onions, and an angleworm in the agonies of death.

—Somebody who was coming down Main street after the rain, Thursday evening, swinging an umbrella and smoking a pipe, attracted the attention of isolated members of the fire department, and enthusiastic outsiders, who in turn attracted his attention to the fact that his umbrella was on fire, and the fire gaining volume at every swing of the material feeding it. By this time a boy with astonishidg presence of mind had attached the street hose, and immediately bombarded the man with the cooling element. Then the man threw the umbrella and went for the boy; and the boy, frightened by the prospect of danger, lost his presence of mind, and turned the hose square in the man's face. The force was so great as to knock the man completely from his feet, and to drive him into a hatchway. When he threw the umbrella it struck an old lady named Byxbee, and he disappeared down the hatchway just in time to avoid an awful kick sent after him by the indignant Mr. Byxbee, and which deprived that gentleman of his balance, and sent him also into the hatchway, and on top of the drenched object of his attack. They were both helped out by the people who congregated, and, with the exception of a few scratches, were not injured. The umbrella was ruined, and Mrs. Byxbee lost a breast pin. The finder of the breast pin will oblige by leaving it at this office.

The Decline of Protestantism.

The Berlin correspondent of the Cologne Gazette says that the number of Protestant theological students in Germany has considerably diminished of late. Ten years ago there were 1,100 such students in the six eastern provinces of Prussia, whereas during the past half-year there were only 680, and a similar diminution is shown by the records of all the German universities, except that of Leipzig. In Wurtemberg and Baden, especially, it is found difficult to obtain a sufficient number of candidates to fill the vacancies among the Protestant clergy. In the last number of the Neue Evangelische Kirchenzeitung, Dr. Messmer, the editor, attributes this decrease in the study of theology to the "anti-ecclesiastical spirit of the time;" to the "lukewarmness with which religion is viewed, even in the families of the clergy; to the "contempt with which pious youths at the German colleges are treated by their fellow-students;" to the "humiliations which the clergy have to suffer in public life," and to the divisions which have sprung up in the church itself. "It is very seldom," says Dr. Messmer, "that the son of a family of nobles or merchants now elects to study theology, and preaching seems to have lost all its influence."

The Trial of Mrs. Surratt.

The New York Tribune, of the 10th inst., publishes a letter from Judge J. Holt, who was Judge-Advocate-General in the Surratt trial, in which he replies to statements made by a recent correspondent in that paper. Judge Holt denies the statement that Mrs. Surratt was manacled during her trial, and refers to the letter of Gen. J. F. Hartranft, who was Marshal of the Court, and in whose custody Mrs. Surratt was, in which Hartranft states that she was not manacled while in his charge, and no thought of manacling her was ever entertained by any one in authority; and, further, Hartranft received a letter from the daughter of Mrs. Surratt, who was with her mother during her trial, thanking him for his kind treatment to her mother and herself. Judge Holt also denies the correspondent's assertion that Reverdy Johnson was driven from the defense of Mrs. Surratt, and states that Mr. Johnson appeared in the trial, avowing it to be his purpose to discuss only the legal questions as to the jurisdiction of the commission to try the prisoners, and having done this he voluntarily withdrew.

An Old Pensioner Dead.

A North Carolina paper records the death of Nancy Harris, a colored woman, at the age of 110 years, at her home in Swift Creek township, that State, on the 19th ult., and says: "Her funeral, which took place from St. John's (Baptist) Church on Sunday, was largely attended by both white and colored people. For eighty-two years she had been a member of the Baptist Church, and through a long life of consistent piety had won the confidence and esteem of the white people of the neighborhood. Up to her death she drew regularly a pension from the United States Government, her husband having been a soldier in the Revolutionary war."

Combats on the Ocean.

Among the extraordinary spectacles sometimes witnessed by those who "go down to the sea in ships," none are more impressive than a combat for the supremacy between the monsters of the deep. The battles of the swordfish and whale, are described as Homeric in grandeur.

The swordfish go in schools like whales, and the attacks are regular sea fights. When the two troops meet, as soon as the swordfish have betrayed their presence by a few bounds in the air, the whales draw together and close up their ranks. The swordfish always endeavors to take the whale in the flank, either because its cruel instinct has revealed to it the defect in the carcass, for there exists near the brachial fins of the whale a spot where wounds are mortal—or because the flank presents a wider surface to its blows.

The swordfish recoils to secure a greater impetus. If the movement escapes the keen eye of his adversary, the whale is lost, for it receives the blow of the enemy, and dies almost instantly. But if the whale perceives the swordfish at the instant of the rush, by a spontaneous bound it springs clear of the water its entire length, and falls on its flank with a crash that resounds for many leagues, and whitens the sea with boiling foam. The gigantic animal has only its tail for defense. It tries to strike its enemy and finish him at a single blow. But if the active swordfish avoid the fatal tail, the battle becomes more terrible. The aggressor springs from the water in his turn, falls upon the whale and attempts, not to pierce, but to saw it with the teeth that garnish its weapon. The sea is stained with blood; the fury of the whale is boundless. The swordfish harasses him, strikes him on every side, kills and flies to other victories.

Often the swordfish has not time to avoid the tail of the whale, and contents itself with presenting its sharp saw to the flank of the gigantic animal which is about to crush it. It then dies like Maccabæsus, smothered beneath the weight of the elephant of the ocean. Finally the whale gives a few last bounds into the air, dragging its assassin in its flight, and perishes as it kills the monster of which it was the victim.

The Meanest Man.

It turns out, after all, that the meanest man is not the man we referred to the other day, who split up his first wife's tombstone. Burrows is even meaner than he. Burrows was an inveterate tobacco-chewer, but as his wife detested the practice and made home tempestuous and stormy for him when he indulged in the habit there, he always chewed when away during the day, and declared to his wife that he had stopped permanently. But one evening, upon entering the front door and drawing out his handkerchief, he accidentally pulled out his paper of tobacco, and without noticing it, left it lying on the floor. When Burrows sat down to his tea, his wife walked in with the tobacco in her hand, and looking Burrows firmly in the eye, said: "Do you know who that belongs to?" With great presence of mind Burrows turned scowling to his eldest boy and said, with a severe voice: "Immortal Mars! Is it possible that you have begun to chew tobacco, you young reprobate? Where'd you get that nasty stuff? What d' you mean by such conduct, you young villain? Haven't I told you often enough to let tobacco alone? Commere to me, or I'll tear the jacket off of you." And as he spoke the stern father made a grab at the boy and dragged him out in the entry, where he chastised him with a cane. Then Burrows threw the tobacco over the fence, where he went on and got it in the morning and enjoyed it during the day. "Merciful Moses!" he exclaimed when he told us about it, "what would I have done if my children had all been girls? It makes an old father's heart glad when he feels that he has a boy he can depend on in such emergencies."—Max Adeler.

The Oldest Ship Afloat—Built 109 Years ago, and Still Sound.

A Philadelphia paper reports that the bark True Love, which has just arrived at that port from Greenland, with a cargo of cryolite, is the oldest vessel known. She is quite primitive or peculiar in structure, having been built in the year 1764, and is consequently 109 years old. In shape the bark is very much like the one in which William Penn arrived at the time he made the treaty with the Indians. The sides batter inward to the top of the gunwale, and this makes the vessel much broader at the water-line than on deck. This bark was built in Philadelphia, but it cannot be ascertained with any degree of certainty at what particular point. The Custom-House register does not contain the record, because the vessel was built twelve years before the beginning of the American revolution. It is most likely that the bark was built in Kensington, as it appears from history that the first ship-yards on the Delaware were established in that locality, not far from the Penn treaty-ground. The bark was built for parties residing in Hull, England, and still hails from that place, and for forty-seven years was engaged in the whaling business in the northern seas, and appeared to be at home among the icebergs of the Artic region. It is understood that the vessel never required any considerable repairs. The original timbers appear to be as sound as the day they were erected on the stocks in old Kensngton. The bark registers 296 tons, but will carry much more.

MR. LITT, residing near Stanislaus, Cal., while sinking a well, and after passing through hard-pan and several strata of sand, at forty-five feet reached a bed of gravel, and with it an abundance of good water. Imbedded in the top of the gravel was the skeleton of a mastodon. Several of the bones, in a good state of preservation, were brought to the surface. In one of the bones was discovered a flint arrow-head, such as is in common use by the present Indians of this continent. The arrow-head was so completely imbedded in the bone that there can be little doubt that it was shot into the monster animal near the time of its death. This would seem to indicate that these monster animals do not antedate the present Indian race inhabiting our continent.

We are gratified to be able to state, on the authority of the officers of the bridge, that within the past few days an agreement has been signed by the contractors pledging themselves, under forfeitures, to complete the spans of the bridge by the 1st January next, and also to finish both roadways—the lower for railroad traffic and the upper for vehicles and foot passengers—by from thirty to sixty days after the 1st of January. Thus it will be seen that the bridge will be completed, beyond peradventure, by the 1st of March next at the latest."

FINDING FAULT.

The Angola Times of last week contained this editorial paragraph:

Much dissatisfaction is expressed by interested parties with regard to the manner in which Judge Tousley dispatched the business brought before him during his last sitting here. We should presume that the Judge's duties were as binding, and should have been conducted as honerably the last day of his services as the first. But perhaps a little bit of sourness toward the people of this "neck of the woods" for their action in a certain convention about a year ago, had some thing to do with it.

The Times should have been more specific if there really exists a well founded cause for this imputation.—Judge Tousley may not sustain the very kindest relations toward certain ruling spirits in Steuben, but we are loth to believe that he would allow disappointed hopes to interfere with the discharge of his judicial duties.—Ligonier Banner.

We think the Times is mistaken. Judge Tousley, although a political opponent, possesses too much good sense, and has a higher appreciation of honor, than to truckle to such a spirit as the above would intimate. We have conversed with a number of the prominent members of the bar in this and adjoining counties, and the impression is general that the Judge has always been guided by principles of justice and equity, in the decision of all cases coming under his jurisdiction. The best lawyers of the district speak in complimentary terms of his rulings and his honest and fairness in his action as Judge. It seems a little peculiar that having served for almost six years to the satisfaction of his political friends, he is discovered to be "influenced" at his last term of Court in that county. Politically we have no love for the Judge. but personally we think he stands head and shoulders above those who would delight to impair his fair name as a judicial officer.

CIRCUIT PROSECUTOR.

As an election has been called for the election of a prosecutor of the 35th Judicial District, it will be neccessary to select a candidate, and as the office is one that should not be made a political one, it has been suggested to leave the nomination to the selection of the Bar of the District. This we think is right and proper, and if carried out in good faith will be more satisfactory to the people than to place a political candidate in the field. We have heard the names of several gentlemen mentioned, among whom are Mr. Kinsley of Noble, Mr. Peterson and Morlan, of DeKalb, and D. E. Palmer and Wm. B. McConnell of this county. If the Bar of the District will agree to hold a convention at Waterloo and select a candidate, we are confident that Steuben county will cheerfully support the candidate whoever he may be.—Steuben Republican.

We think the above a good suggestion, and feel that it will recieve the support of all concerned. The bar is more judiciously fitted to make this nomination than any other class, and if a good nomination is made without the usual wire working so inseparable with politics we are confident no other district nominees will be presented. We suggest Monday Sept. 29, at 2 O'clock P. M.

It is reported that William Allen, now running for Governor on the Democratic ticket in Ohio, is the identical chap that hailed Noah in the ark, and asked him "where he was going with his dug-out," remarking at the sametime that he "didn't believe that it was going to be much of a shower, anyhow."—Indianian.

It has been proven that E. F. Noyes, the Republican candidate for Governor in that State stole over $15,000 of the people's money while Probate Judge at Cincinnati. Look on that picture and then on this. A few of the men of Noah's time wouldn't be a bad thing just now, considering the amount of stealing and peculation going on.

We do not know why 'tis so, but the Radical papers of this section of Indiana are all accusing the Grangers of working in the interest of the Democracy. We understand the organiza- [illegible] to be non-political. The charge, [illegible] me, comes from the fact that [illegible] s are opposed to monopo- [illegible] lary grabs, &c.—Co-

JAY COOKE & CO.

The circumstances attending the stoppage of this conspicuous banking house are fully reported.

The credit of the House has been deeply impaired by the implication of Henry D. Cook, one of the members, with the immense frauds of the Washington ring. That was enough to break down anything; but along with this the chief cause of Jay Cooke's failure is the attempt to build the Northern Pacific Railroad. That enormous and ill-considered undertaking was sufficient to exhaust the stroggest resources. Its downfall, we fear, will involve thousands of widows, orphans, and confiding people of limited means in lasting poverty and embarrassment.

It is long since we had such a financial storm as now rages. But when it clears off the air will be more wholesome. There will be less reckless speculation; fewer railroads will be built on credit alone; and let us hope that Credit-Mobiliers, plundering rings, official corruption, bribe giving and present taking will be things of the past only.

SCHUYLER COME AGAIN.

Pomeroy's Democrat, which is sometimes severe on blundering officials of both parties, contains the following on sniveling, hypocritical Colfax, which we deem to the point:

There is anothor chance for anuanias Schuyler Colfax to explain, and there is little doubt he has an explanation ready and was waiting an opportunity to launch it forth

Here we are.

Some time since a firm of Indiana wagon makers had some trouble, which resulted just as such things will in a law suit, before a South Bend court. South Bend is where Colfax lives. A jury was impanneled and several witnesses examined. Finally a leading member of the firm was called to the stand. He gave a history of the firm and its operations, occasionally striking a balance sheet of each years' profit and loss. On the cross examination this guileless man became somewhat confused and mixed his statements as disastrously as Matt Carpenter and Grant do their drinks During his squirming he failed to give the testimony as he had arranged it, and coming down to fact, astonished the court with a statement that the partners had at a certain time paid the Hon. Schuyler Colfax one thousand dollars for securing them a wagon contract from the Government!

The judge was shocked.

The counsel in a rage.

The jury dumbfounded.

Not because Colfax had received such money for such purpose but because a loyal citizen of South Bend had so far forgotten his duty to that Christian statesman and pure gentleman, Colfax, as to tell of it. As soon as the judge recovered from his surprise he put a stop to the statement of the witness, and the lawyers of both sides were instantly on their feet, sawing the air with their hands and seeking to choke down the witness. He was finally securely muzzled, however, and then the trial proceeded, with due care that no more truth should escape so carelessly.

The campaign in Ohio is conducted with earnestness and energy on both sides, but the signs are decidedly encouraging for the Democratic ticket. It is to be regretted that the Allen county faction, which set out so bravely to fight Independently of both parties, has dwindled into a mere echo of the opposition and directs its warfare at the Democratic candidates. Mr. Allen is personally engaged in the contest, and such a test of reason as he presents to the voters of Ohio has not regaled them for many a long day. Senator Thurman has warmed up to the work, and goes for the Repuulican credit mobilier and salary grabbers in a way they despise. He spoke at Batavia on Thursday, making a caustic review of Senator Morton's scandalous and false charges against the Democratic party, as well as well as of his low and shameless attempt to misrepresent its position. He exposed Morton's double dealing in the salary grab, and left the arch demagogue in a badly damaged condition.

The Republican majority of Maine foots up about 10,000. This is a considerable falling off from the usual majority, but the vote was not all out and evidently, the relative party strength is about the same as usual.

Senator Morton in his Athens, Ohio, speech said: "It is the greatest injustice to say that members of the Forty-second Congress, who voted for back pay have been guilty of stealing, or of intended fraud upon the Treasury." He further continues to aver that this the best and purest government on the earth, and then he takes his buchu without a murmur.

Jeffersonian honesty and capacity are what the farmers of Hennepin county, Minnesota, think officeholders ought to have. It is not wonderful therefore, that they condemn the salary grab, and declare that "this condemnation would not be complete did we fail to include the President of the United States, by whose signature it became a law."

Chicago has again been visited by a fire which bid fair at one time to rival the famous conflagaation two years ago. The flames were started by a spark from a passing locomotive, and succeeded in consuming fifty three houses, involving a loss of less than three hundred thousand dollars. There was a high wind blowing from the prairie, and but for prompt action the loss would have been far greater.

The Oregon Grantites are not by any means unanimous in their support of Hipple Mitchell. At a recent meeting of the Washington County Convention the following resolution was passed by 18 to 6:

"That the Republicans of Washington county, knowing that it is idle to ask such a man to resign the position he wrongfully holds, hereby wash their hands of such as John M. Hipple, and hold him as an alien and an enemy."

It is not likely, as the Convention suggested, that such a man will resign, but it is as well for honest men of every party to wash their hands of having supported him.

Fort Wayne is becoming notorious for its rapidly increasing number of suicides. Another young man committed suicide by hanging himself to a tree. His name was Charles Zeihmer, and was led to the act because he was out of a job.

We see and hear that the corn stalk this year is bearing an unusual crop of smut. This is the forerunner of dry murrain in cattle. Let our farmers be careful in turning stock into cornfields this fall or they will have more hides than beef to sell before spring. We warn them in time.

Last Monday our Jewish friends celebrated as the first of the new year, which, according to their computation, is the 5634th Next Wednesday, October 1st, is their day of Atonement. We don't know what day of the year they celebrate as ground-hog day. If it was not for one thing we would like to be a Jew, for about every other day is a holiday. The feet are a tittle larger than we would like to carry around when we were not celebrating.

Snobbery is gaining ground in Indianapolis. A tract of land called Woodruff Place, is to be sold out in lots to those only wealthy enough to build a $50.000 residence. No others need apply. Thus gradually are we drifting to centralization and aristocracy. And the farmer that can scarcely make his $300 a year clear, pays for it. It was not so in childhood's sunny hour.

The Columbia City Post says:

A boy while driving cows through a small marsh in the northern part of the county last Wednesday, found a large rattlesnake. He found it with his third toe. A quart of whiskey out-generaled the poison and saved his life. His father says he isn't going to have his bitters fooled away again, snake or no snake.

The following is a simple remedy for a felon: Burn coperas on a shovel until it is soft and can be make fine. Then mix a small quantity of it with enough of the yolk of an egg to make a plaster. Only mix enough of it at once for one plaster, as it soon becomes hard. Put a new one on whenever it gets stiff, and the felon will come to an end. This is said to be a sure remedy but we don't know much about it. One thing, however, is quite certain, and that is if you want good, fashionable ready made clothing, hats and caps, you will find a large assortment, and raro bargains, at Lauferty's.

Railroad Decision.

A closely litigated and important case was tried last Saturday before Judge Best in the absence of Judge Tously. The judge elect decided that there was no liability over against the Rail Road company and first contractor, on failure of the sub. contractor to pay the laborer. The decision was clear and explicit, and by the bar considered a true exposition of the law. E. D. Hartman and W. H. Dills argued pro and con in the case.

Don t swear at the postmaster because he charges you postage on your county paper since July 1st. He is compelled to do this under an odious law of the Radical Congress passed last winter for the purpose of breaking down the country press by compelling all subscribers to pay as much postage on home papers as they do on the big weeklies from New York or Boston. Congress alone is responsible and not the postmaster or the publisher.

Have you read the new story of "The Mystery of Metropolisville," written by the author of the "Hoosier School Master." We have just read it and pronounce it even better than the School Master which has been read by nearly every family in the State. Buy a copy at Davenport & Cos.' and you will have something to please and interest you for a month.

One of our subscribers in Milan, Michigan. complains that he does not get his paper regularly. He says he has not received it for three weeks. We have mailed the paper regularly with printed address on the wrapper. He says, "If this country cannot afford honest postmasters, it had better stop. This country did once afford a few honest men, but the salary grabbers are getting the upper hand."

The grand Jury have had quite a long session during this term. A number of witnesses were subpenoed in the case of Miss Smith, whose sudden death in Waterloo a few days ago, caused so much mystery. We do not know the result, but if the impression on the streets indicate any thing, the probability is that a prominent professional gentleman of Waterloo, will be placed on the defensive in our courts.

We heard a fine looking lady from the country, last week. say: "Why, do you take the paper?" The lady with her answered: "Why la! yes;" to which the first lady replied; "Why how funny, we don't take none of 'em." We'll bet the husband of that woman is a good for nothing chap, or if he makes money he does it by starving his family.

Remember the Fair.

Week after next the fair at Waterloo commences at the grounds of the Agricultural Association, and will continue four days. The officers of the association have labored with commendable zeal to insure the success of the fair, and we have no doubt we shall have the best fair this season that has ever been held in the county. Such, at least, should be the case. We venture the assertion that every farmer who attends the fair receives a direct benefit from doing so. He finds some kind of seed or stock, or learns some method of cultivation unknown to him before, and oftentimes the information is of incalculable value to him. The benefits of the Association are by no means confined to the farmer. The merchant and mechanic come in for a full share. Every citizen of the county is interested, and if the exposition is a success, every citizen of the county will be benefitted thereby. Come out! Bring your produce, your stock and your products, evidences of your industry and skill. Help build up and improve your county. Show a little genuine enterprise and life, and you will reap your reward.

Odd Fellows Dedication.

We give below the committees appointed on the occasion of the Odd Fellows Dedication October 15th 1873. It is expected that the work will not be confined exclusively to the persons named, but that every member will do his utmost. Let all put the best foot foremost, and not stand idly by and see others perform the work that they have an equal interest in. The following are the committee:

We take the following items from the Steuben Republican of last week, edited by W. C. McGonigal, Esq:

AUBURN—Those that knew Auburn seventeen, or even five years ago, would not now recognize the town. The Ft. W. J. & S. Railroad first broke the ice, and the Eel River & B. & O. Road have given life and energy to the citizens. Already several fine brick buildings have been erected among which a large three story Hotel, built and nearly completed for Mr. Swineford, on the site of the "old Weaver House;" a Stave Factory employing about thirty hands, is in successful operation, and a building for a Spoke and Hub Factory is nearly completed, which will give employment to a large number of laborers. The Passenger Depot and Grain House, on the Eel River Railroad, will be ready as soon as the trains are ready to run on the road. New dwelling houses are being erected in different parts of the town, and everything denotes a steady and substantial improvement. Auburn will now take the front seat with the wide-awake towns of the State.

While at Auburn last week we called on Bro. Mays, of the Courier, and had the pleasure of riding around town with him. Mays publishes a live paper, and we are glad to see that the people of Auburn appreciate it, and are giving it a substantial support.

Eel River Railroad.

Last week we were present and witnessed the laying of the crossing of the Eel River with the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. at Auburn Junction. The crossing is solid and made of steel rails and wrought iron bed plates, and is so constructed that it cannot get out of place. The construction of the Eel River Road has been watched by the people of Auburn and vicinity with anxiety for the last twenty years, and they have expended their money freely. and they now have the proud satisfaction that it will be completed to Butler within the next thirty days. This road will use the Lake Shore track from Butler to Toledo. We saw Maj. S. W. Sprott at the crossing, and although just recovering from a severe illness he could not forego the pleasure of witnessing the ceremony. Maj. Sprott has been one of the hardest and most liberal workers for the road, and he seems willing to say, "I can depart in peace having seen the completion of my most ardent hopes." We will publish the Time Table and connections of the road as soon as trains run to Butler.

We have been known in Fort Wayne many years to be the most successful clothing house ever opened in the city. It is not only our liberal advertising that has made us popular but our fair and honorable dealings, with those who have stood by us since we have been in the business. In selling them nicely made clothing at reasonable prices they have advertised us. With the 20 years experience we have had since boyhood, we profess to know the wants of every one and what class of goods are wanted. Therefore we can say that we can fit a boy of the small size up to the largest man in the grade of goods, from the finest to the lowest grades. We caution those who are not acquainted in this place to enquire for us before you drop in some other place where they have been trying to imitate our well established place. It is to your own interest as well as to ours to come direct to us at the popular Red Front, No. 5 Keystone Block.

Good common suits for men from $6 to $10, Cassimere suits from $9 to $20, fine cloth suits from $12 to $25. Cloaks from $3 to $25, with or without saques, men's working pants from $1.50 to $2.50, children, boys and youths suits from $3 up. We also keep a large line of hats, caps, shirs, underwear, gloves and many articles too numerous to mention, at exceeding low prices.

J. C. BARTLETT, Sec'y.

Higgins Bros. & Squires, contractors on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad whose work on the line, is between here and Albion, and also immediately west of Hicksville, Ohio, are making more headway according to the extent of their contract, than any other contractor on the line. Some difficulty occurred a few weeks ago, of which we made mention, but it was caused by a sub-contractor. and neither of the above parties were concerned in the matter. This has been adjusted, and they are now pushing forward the work to a speedy completion. They have had some heavy and difficult work to do, but with their large experience and relentless energy, they have walked over the grade like master workmen. About as fine a grade as can be seen the whole length of the line is within the limits of their contracts, and without speaking disparagingly of other experienced contractors, they will certainly come out No. 1 in the speedy and excellent completion of their contract.

MARRIAGES.

LITTLE,—ORR.—On Tuesday evening, Sept. 23d, 1873, at the residence of the bride's father, in Corunna, by the Rev. J. Emery Fisher, HENRY LITTLE, Esq., and Miss SYLVA ORR.

The Little affair was enjoyed by a few select friends of the parties, and was a most pleasant and happy occasion. It gives us pleasure to record the good fortune of our friend Hank, who has been so long connected with the COURIER, for he has secured a prize, for a wife, a beautiful and accomplished young lady, and as good as she is pretty. A four-horse mule team could not keep us from wishing the pair, as smooth and as pleasurable excursion through life, as is possible to fall to the lot of man. Lots of cake.

To THE ELECTORS

OF

DEKALB COUNTY, INDIANA.

In pursuance of an order to me directed from the clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, as follows, to-wit:

STATE OF INDIANA, }
DeKalb County. }

To the Sheriff of DeKalb County:

You are commanded to give due and lawful notice that an election will be held by the qualified voters of said county at the usual places of holding elections in the various Townships and Precincts in said county, on the second Tuesday of October, 1873, for the purpose of electing one Prosecuting Attorney for the 35th Judicial Circuit, of the State of Indiana, composed of the counties of Steuben, DeKalb and Noble.

Said election to be held pursuant to and in accordance with Section Eighty-two, of an act of the Legislature of Indiana, approved March 6th, 1873, for the election of Judges and Prosecuting Attorneys in certain cases.

Witness my hand and the Seal of said court, at Auburn, this 23d day of Sept.
Seal. 1873

J. E. LANNING, Clerk,
DeKalb Circuit Court

I certify that the above and foregoing is a correct copy of a notice of the election to be held in DeKalb County, Indiana, on the second Tuesday of October, 1873, delivered to me by the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, under the seal thereof.

W. L. MEESE,
Sheriff DeKalb County, Ind.

THE OLD COUPLE.

It stands in a sunny meadow,
The house so mossy and brown,
With its cumbrous old stone chimneys,
And the gray roof sloping down.

The trees fold their green arms around it,
The trees a century old;
And the winds go chanting through them,
And the sunbeams drop their gold.

The cowslips spring in the marshes,
And the roses bloom on the hill;
And beside the brook on the pastures,
The herds go feeding at will.

The children have gone and left them,
They sit in the sun alone!
And the old wife's tears are falling
As she harks to the well-known tone

That won her heart in her girlhood,
That has soothed her in many a care,
And praises her now for the brightness
Her old face used to wear.

She thinks again of her bridal—
How, dressed in her robe of white,
She stood by her gay young lover
In the morning's rosy light.

Oh, the morning is rosy as ever,
But the rose from her cheek is fled;
And the sunshine still is golden,
But it falls on a silvered head.

And the girlhood dreams, once vanished,
Come back in her winter time,
Till her feeble pulses tremble,
With the thrill of spring-time's prime.

And looking forth from the window,
She thinks how the trees have grown
Since, clad in her bridal whiteness,
She crossed the old door-stone.

Though dimmed her eye's bright azure,
And dimmed her hair's young gold,
The love in her girlhood plighted
Has never grown dim nor old.

They sat in peace in the sunshine
Till the day was almost done,
And then, at its close, an angel
Stole over the threshold stone.

He folded their hands together—
He touched their eyelids with balm—
And their last breath floated upward
Like the close of a solemn psalm.

Like a bridal pair they traversed
The unseen, mystical road
That leads to the beautiful city
"Whose builder and maker is God."

Perhaps in that miracle country
They will give her lost youth back,
And the flowers of a vanished spring-time
Will bloom in the spirit's track.

One draught from the living waters
Shall call back his manhood's prime,
And eternal years shall measure
The love that outlived time.

But the shapes that they left behind them,
The wrinkles and silver hair,
Made holy to us by the kisses
The angel had printed there,

We will hide away 'neath the willows,
When the day is low in the west,
Where the sunbeams cannot find them,
Nor the winds disturb their rest.

And we'll suffer no tell-tale tombstone,
With its age and date, to rise
O'er the two who are old no longer
In the Father's House in the skies.

CECILE.

Algiers is the Paris of Africa, or rather, not a portion of Africa, but a part of France, that had been created by the armies in times of peace as it had been conquered in a war by the French armies. Algiers is Paris, of course, but in becoming French it has not lost all its oriental peculiarities, and in this it is as much more attractive than Paris as romance is to real life.

When I was ordered to remain in Algiers with my regiment coming from Marseilles, I came with most delightful anticipations. I was a young lieutenant then, and my success with the fair sex in various garrison towns where I had been gave me most brilliant ideas in regard to the adventures that would befall me in Algiers. Houris, with eyes like stars, enveloped in cashmere, covered with dimonds, living in palaces with fountains of rose-water, and bowers of orange flowers, rose before me. Indeed, the officers talked so much and so eagerly about the charms of the Eastern women, their passion and their devotion, that I felt ready to risk my life to obtain a sight of one of the lovely creatures who haunted my dreams.

Now this was to be the romance of my life. The reality was already all arranged and settled in Europe—and to tell the truth, though my imagination was in Algiers, my heart was in France with the girl to whom I had been betrothed since my infancy. Like all Frenchmen, I knew that I could marry only the young lady who would be thought by my parents to be suited to me in station and fortune; I knew that only such a wife could suit me, and had not the slightest idea that my Eastern romance would interfere with any of my engagements, not even with my love.

For I loved my betrothed, though I had not seen her since she was a child. The daughter of an old friend of my father's, she had been brought up by her mother in the strictest seclusion, and in my wandering, soldier's life, I had not seen her for six years. But this was my last year's probation; at the close of the autumn I was to return to Marseilles; Cecile was to come with her mother beneath my father's roof, and we were to be married.

The passion I intended to feel for one of the Oriental houris had nothing to do with the holy love for my future wife —for the future mother of my children. She was incased in the holiest temple of my heart—the very altar fire of my life; the Oriental episodes were but as the lightning flashes of the summer storm, brief, brilliant, and evanescent.

It so happened that at one of the cafes I made the acquaintance of an intelligent, rich old Jew merchant, who, from the first, appeared to take extraordinary interest in me. He amused me with details of Oriental life and manners; told me the legends of the country; and, in fact, seemed to be a living page from the "Arabian Nights."

In return, I told him all the circumstances of my life, all my military adventures, and even, in a moment of extraordinary confidence, went so far as to tell him all about Cecile and our future marriage. This was done rather to give him an idea of our European customs than with any idea of confiding in him. I scarcely felt the indelicacy of talking about Cecile, because he was so utterly a stranger to her.

I had been some weeks in Algiers, watching anxiously for an adventure, when one day a note was put into my hand. It was highly perfumed, and tied, instead of being sealed, with a gold thread. It was written in a most elegant hand, and was in the purest French, and it bade me repair at nine o'clock to one of the mosques, where a most important revelation would be made to me. Here was an adventure at last. In the excitement of the moment I rushed to the Jew.

"What am I to do? What does this mean?"

"It means that you are a handsome dog, and that some of our lovely women have fallen in love with you."

"What am I to do?"

"Go to the redezvous, of course?"

"Will there be danger? Must I go armed?"

"It would be more prudent."

At nine o'clock, as the clock struck, some one touched me on the shoulder.

"You are exact—that is well," and as I turned I beheld an old woman, dressed in the costume of the country, standing near me.

"Are you Lieut. Raoul Duchene?" said she, speaking in French, and with only a slight accent.

"Yes."

"You are lately from Marseilles?"

"Yes."

"You remember Cecile?"

"Cecile," I cried—"Cecile Velaze?"

"'Tis she who has written to you."

"Cecile, my betrothed; she is in Bordeaux, with her mother."

"She was, but she is now here a slave in Algiers."

"But the letter is not in her writing."

"Not as you knew her writing formerly."

"True, a slave—Cecile a slave? How did she know that I was here?"

"She saw you from behind the grating of her window."

"Take me to her inclosure."

"Not until you have given me your word that you will save her."

"At the risk of my life; but how, in Heaven's name, did she get here?"

"She will tell you all to-morrow, when you meet."

"Let me see her to-night."

"Impossible."

"To-morrow, then. I shall not rest till then."

"To-morrow; but remember, silence —an indiscretion might ruin all!"

I was obliged to be satisfied, but my excitement was so great that I could not restrain it. I confided all to my friend the Jew.

"Be very prudent," said the Jew, "and remember that the French Government allows the natives the exercise of their religion and the freedom of their own special trades. To interfere between a merchant and his slave would be dangerous."

I listened, of course, to no arguments, and at 9 o'clock the next night was at the place the Arab woman had indicated. Cecile, my Cecile, the pure and gentle young girl in the power of a Mahomedan, it was horrible.

"Follow me," said the old woman, and we entered a low gate, and, after various windings, found ourselves in a white marble hall most brilliantly illuminated.

"Here is the danger. Once we can get through here into Cecile's apartment we are safe."

We crossed the hall without impediment. We entered the apartment, which seemed dim to me after the hall; but bright, indeed, all appeared when, from an inner room, a lady advanced.

She wore the costume of the country, and the heavy silver vails with which the women are concealed in Algiers fell over her.

In another instant she raised her vail, and I beheld the loveliest creature I had ever seen in my life—her large, brilliant, yet melting eyes, fixed on me.

I threw myself at her feet.

"Do I then see you again?"

"Raoul," she replied, in a low, soft voice, "have you not forgotten me? Do you not love me still?"

"Love you still! Never have you been out of my thoughts; but how are you here? Here and a slave! How did you leave your happy home? How did you come in this man's power?"

"Listen to me, Raoul, and you will see how naturally I fell into the toils three years ago. A young Arab was sent to Bordeaux to complete his education. He fell in love with me. A marriage between us was, of course, impossible, even had I not been betrothed to you. Hassan understood this, and seemed to have abandoned all the feelings of love he had entertained for me. A month since he announced to us his departure for his native country, and, as a last proof of his friendship, asked my mother to honor him with a visit on board the vessel that was to take him from us—a condescension he called it. My mother consented. We went, accompanied only by Hassan, who came to fetch us. It was easy to separate us, both curious as we were to see the various parts of the ship. When at last I tried to rejoin my mother, she was gone. What became of her I cannot tell you. All I know is that the vessel sailed, while I fell in a swoon at the feet of Hassan. When I recovered, he told me that he had determined that I should be his; he had sacrificed everything to obtain me. So I am here, and Providence has sent you to my assistance."

"This very night we will fly!"

"That cannot be. I should be missed, traced, and again captured. No, Raoul, you must take me hence to a French vessel ready to sail that very night."

"But I cannot go with you. I dare not leave Algiers without leave of absence."

"I can reach Marseilles in safety. There I can await you. Only get me beyond the power of these people."

"I swore to free her—to obey her; she was so beautiful, so tender, so sad, that I would have dared anything for her deliverance. Each night, introduced by the Arab woman, I came to her. She was more lovely even than I had ever dreamed. She had grown into a different being from the one I had cherished in my heart; often, in our short interviews, did I refer to our early days, but the remembrance seemed too sad for her to hear the names of those we loved, her family—mine; all brought tears to her eyes.

There was an ineffable joy to me in these interviews, stolen and dangerous as they were, and but of a few minutes' duration: still I burned to free her from the power of this Hassan, even at the pain of not seeing her. I would have tried the French authorities, but what had I to prove the truth of my story or the identity of Cecile? Then the French authorities are chary of interference with the native customs; in fact, as Cecile said, the only safety lay in our secret flight. Hassan was away. Once Cecile had been in his power, he had made no effort to force her love; he trusted to time, to absence from all other ties, and to his devotion, to ultimately obtain her love.

At the thought of this my heart beat with rage and terror. I resolved to delay no longer. Vessels were sailing every day to France, but I wanted not a vessel full of passengers, but some small merchant vessel, where none would know even of Cecile's presence.

At last it was found, and all was arranged. A European dress was procured and conveyed to Cecile. In these one night, without any interruption, she passed out of Hassan's palace the way I entered it.

We were in the street; I dared bring no conveyance. We had to walk with rapid steps down to the quay. On we rushed, when suddenly a man darts from one of the dark porticos, and stands before us.

It was my friend, the Jew.

"You are pursued," said he; "her flight is discovered. Trust her to me; here is my house. I can shield her. No one will suspect me. You can save her only thus, and only thus save yourself the disgrace which, as an officer, will fall on you."

"Disgrace!" cried Cecile, starting from me; "take me, lead me anywhere. Raoul, fly."

"With me she is safe; come to-morrow; she will be ready."

"But she will miss the vessel; it sails to-night."

"There will be another, then; but I hear footseps; fly."

The Jew and Cecile disappeared into one of the houses, and I, bewildered and deeply mortified, went to my quarters.

The next day there was a great rumor in the town—the French authorities had been appealed to—a most daring robbery had been committed; one of the favorite slaves of the dethroned Dey had escaped from his palace with jewels of enormous value. She was a European, too—some dancing girl he had had picked up from the French Theater in Algiers; she had sailed for France, it was supposed, but where and how, and who had been her accomplice, it was impossible to discover.

I heard this with indifference; and, as soon as I deemed it safe, proceeded, racked with anxiety, to the Jew's house.

I reached it, and on the threshold stood the Arab woman.

"Cecile," said I.

She presented me with a note without speaking a word.

I tore it open.

"I am safe; you will not betray me, for if you do I will swear that you are my accomplice. I have long been waiting this opportunity, and I thank you for helping me and the Dey's jewels off together. I am merely the Dey's slave —a Parisian with only her beauty and her wits. Now I am rich, and will pray for you, my gallant and credulous cavalier. You should not have confided your secrets and your love to the Jew. He is with me, and we will not forget you.

"CARMEN."

I stood as if turned to stone. I could not collect my thoughts. Cecile an imposter? No, not Cecile at all; and I the dupe and accomplice of this bold, bad woman.

My first impulse was to denounce her at all risks—to tell the truth. But the fear of ridicule or the dread of disgrace at last restrained me, and made me consent to endure the terrible complicity.

Carmen was never found, nor were the jewels traced. Probably she had sailed from France for America, and so evaded the police.

As for Cecile, six months later I found her by her mother, pure, fresh, and innocent; and not until we had been married two years did I relate to her my adventure in Algiers.

Managing a Husband—The Danbury Mode.

A hot-tempered Danbury woman who finds considerable trouble in persuading her husband to furnish kindlings, and then is obliged to do it herself, read in a religious paper, Monday, of how a wife induced a wicked husband to become one of the most affectionate and hopeful of men by being invariably calm and loving with him. The story made a deep impression upon her, and when she started the fire that noon, she put a pair of rubbers among the wood. Then she tied a handkerchief across her nose, and went on with her work. When the husband reached the gate he paused, fetched a sniff that made a hole in the atmosphere, and then went around to the back of the house, and fetched another sniff that had an equally damaging effect on the atmosphere. He stared into the next yard and up at his own house, and felt in his pockets, and was about to go around to the front again, when his wife thrust her head out of the window and said, "Why don't you come in the house, you old fool? Come in and get your dinner, and let me read an article to you from the Christian Secretary, you old rip. Come in and see how nice it is to get dinner with nothing to burn but rubbers, you whited sepulcher. Come in here, I tell you, before I lose my temper, and say what I oughtn't to." At this invitation he went in, going upon the stoop and to the door very slowly, but on opening the door, disappeared inside with marvelous suddenness. The neighbors say he was cutting wood all that afternoon, and thinking of the religious press.—Danbury News.

Strong as Steel.

Small habits have been compared with the spider webs which kept the princess of a fairy story imprisoned. She was shut up in a strong castle, from which she must escape or die. The door of the castle was taken away, one day, and she joyfully hastened down to the gate that she might pass and be free. But stop; in the gate a spider web was hanging from top to bottom. She swept it away in a moment, and was going on; when, behold another spider web was before her. It was very easy to sweep that away, and she did it. But there was a third, and when that was removed, a fourth; and so on, again and again; and at last the poor princess sat down and wept bitterly, and felt that though there was only a spider's web between her and liberty, she would never be free. Thus with our pernicious habits; each single act of a habit, what is easier to overcome? But it is the constant succession of them, one after another, which overcomes us.

Farm and Household Hints.

A FARMER can do more work with a good thinking apparatus than with the best span of horses ever hitched to a wagon.

A WISCONSIN farmer, who keeps a large flock of sheep, raises twelve bushels of wheat to the acre more than his neighbors.

KEEP cattle and sheep in the yards until the grass has grown sufficiently to afford some nourishment as well as a reasonable "fill" for the animal. Watching a spire of grass to see it grow, and cropping it when the sixteenth of an inch above the surface, makes a constant but not a satisfactory and much less a delectable employment for a cow or sheep; and yet on no inconsiderable number of farms the animals are permitted to wear the flesh from their bones during the early spring days in doing this hard and reprehensible business.

A FARMER should never to go to town without carrying something to sell—butter, eggs, potatoes, poultry, or even a load of wood. By so doing his income is quite sure to exceed his outgoes. There is no more miserable and poverty-stricken way than to keep sending to stores and shops, and having things charged, with the expectation of paying for them when special crops come off, for these crops seldom or never turn out as well as was expected.

CHAFING IN INFANTS.—I will give you a recipe for the benefit of suffering babes from being chafed and sore, which you can publish if you think proper. We had a fleshy baby in the family that got very sore in the wrinkles of his neck, arms, and legs. We tried everything we could think of without relief, until a lady friend told us to take the outside bark of sassafras, shave off the weather-beaten part, grate or pulverize the balance fine, and dust it on the parts affected. We did so, and it cured it in a very short time. This suggestion may prove of use to some one.—Exchange.

TO CLEAN SWEETMEAT JARS OR BOTTLES.—This can be done without scraping them by pouring in the jars hot water and a teaspoonful or two of pearlash. The contents which remain sticking to the sides and bottom of the jar will be disengaged by the pearlash and float loose in the water. Wash bottles the same way, or kettles or any other vessels which you wish to purify or clear from grease. Strong lye poured off clear hickory ashes will answer nearly as well for the same purpose, and for kegs, buckets, and other large cooking utensils lye from good ashes may always be used.

IF a farmer's productions are of really good quality, as they should be, they will be sought in preference to what others have. There is the greatest difference in the world between choice and middling; between assorted, well-kept potatoes and haphazard lots; between grain that is ripe, clean and plump and shrunken foul grain, and so on through the whole list, and when a character is established there will be always men anxious and willing to pay extra prices.

WESTERN farmers are proposing to use their old implements or hire from their neighbors, or if they must buy, to pay cash, and to make wholesale purchases, whereby they will save at least 20 per cent. It is well enough to consider that a good deal can be saved in another direction. When a reaper or mower stands in the field or by the side of the fence for a year after it is used, or a plow stands in the furrow all winter, there is a loss of at least 20 per cent., which if saved is just as good as 40 per cent. earned.—New York Tribune.

THE Journal of the Farm offers a few good suggestions upon kitchens. It recommends that the housewife, instead of wearing out her muscle and her temper scrubbing floors, should resort to the simple expedient of painting. All that is necessary is two quarts of oil, three pounds of ochre, and one pint of japan, which will paint a floor twelve by eighteen feet. The time taken to clean a painted floor, and the labor saved, are equal to ten times the cost. The writer also suggests another convenience, viz.: a good-sized sink, five or six feet long by two and a half wide, at the back; at the top of this sink should be a shelf for lamps, vases, etc.; under it a place for ironware, and at the ends two pumps—one for hard and the other for soft water.

How to Keep Winter Apples.

The way that most farmers save their winter apples is to hole them up, like potatoes, or pile them up in a cave or cellar. By this method you not only lose much valuable time, but lose very many apples; and what you do keep over winter are in bad condition. Apples may be kept in barrels that are quite open; but the best and cheapest way is to keep them in crates or boxes made in the following manner: The ends or head pieces should be ten or twelve inches wide by fifteen or eighteen long. They can be sawed or split. Nail your boards on the bottom and sides, leaving places for ventilation. Have your boards all the same length—about three feet. "When you gather your apples from the trees put them in these boxes (be careful not to bruise them) and lay the boxes on each other in your apple house. Two men will handle these boxes with ease. You can look your apples over in these boxes at any time with but little labor. When you are ready to ship, just nail a board over the top and you are ready. In this way you get your apples to market in good condition and handle them but once. Keep your house as cold as possible at all times without freezing."

THE highest mountain on the North American continent is Mount St. Elias, in Alaska, whose elevation is 17,900 feet. Next to it comes the volcano of Popocatapetl, in Mexico, 17,884 feet, and Orizaba, also in Mexico, 17,373 feet. If the newly discovered peak of the Holy cross, in the Yellowstone region, found by the Hayden exploring party, be really 17,000 feet high, as they estimate, it will be the fourth peak in elevation on the continent of North America, and the highest mountain in the United States, excluding Alaska. Heretofore the highest peak in this country was supposed to be Big Horn mountain, which is elevated 15,000 feet.

Something About Advertising.

It is time all business men should understand that, with here and there a special exception, the newspaper is par excellence the only medium for advertising that is worth their serious attention. The newspaper is a thing of life, a visible fact, sure of its circulation, certain to be read. It constantly renews its youth; daily or weekly it appears afresh, containing many old faces, making themselves constantly more and more familiar, but holding also fresh facts, the latest news, the last wonder; even in its gossip, it gives the matter of its time and tells us what is alive and moving, up to the very date it bears, while its advertising columns show what is being done in commercial circles and lay before its readers a concise summary of those new ideas through which money is made by their fellows. As compared with all other advertising methods its charges are reasonable, and its promises modest, and while the business man is supporting it, he is, moreover, gaining from it in more ways than he may see at first sight.

How is it on the other hand with the "Hotel Albums," "Strangers Guides," and such like volumes introduced to the merchant by the supple young solicitor, as "the greatest mejum of the age," or "the grandest advertising scheme ever projected?" It is true that the merchant is promised "a circulation of from five to ten thousand and a copy gratis to every hotel." But is the promise kept? are one thousand copies printed?—five hundred?—one hundred? The advertiser has no means of knowing. It is too often the case that such schemes are advertising traps which the merchant blindly enters. In the newspaper every facility is offered him in ascertaining the strength and probable value of his investment, while, at the same time, the newspaper must send its issue to its various subscribers, who pay for it and are bound to read it. But supposing the volumes referred to are to be found in all the hotels; who reads them? You see hundreds of people in hotel parlors with their newspaper, but how many look over the old, dilapidated, margin-scribbled "Guide to Strangers?" The moment such a work is published it becomes old. The matter and the pictures are already obsolete before the last advertiser pays in. Have these the influence of the family newspaper, chiefest of household gods? Probably not. The "Hotel Album," if its publisher's promises are kept, is sent to divers hotels. Suppose for a moment that strangers read them, of what advantage is it as compared with the paper which strikes the very heart-center of those from whom the merchant expects his trade. And, last of all, the "Album" gives him but one insertion. One insertion for perhaps a hundred dollars. The same amount would make the merchant's name a household word in the community from which he draws his best custom—custom that he can look after among people he knows something about.

The question then arises, "Why do merchants waste money in this kind of advertising?" Perhaps the merchants could best tell us if they would.—Newspaper Reporter.

Desperate Fight of Maniacs.

An old lady, eighty years of age, residing in Providence, R. I., visited the insane asylum at Taunton, Mass., in company with her daughter, on Wednesday last, to see her son, who has for some time been an inmate on account of insanity, from the effects of a wound received during the war. The Providence Journal says that on arriving the mother was shown into the reception-room, where were several more lady visitors, and one or two patients, and the son was brought into the same room, when the attendant went out and locked the door. There happened to be in the room at the time a lady who had gone there expecting to secure the release of her husband, but for some reason he could not be discharged on that day. This was a great disappointment to the wife, but the effect upon the husband, when she told him, was terrible. He raged about the room in fury, smashed up a marble-topped table, and had partially demolished a clock, when the son of the old lady, who had been quiet up to that time, became excited and attacked the infuriated husband. A rough and tumble fight ensued, which must have been frightful to witness, and the feelings of those women, shut up in a room with two infuriated insane persons and unable to escape, can be imagined. After a little fighting the husband, with a piece of the furniture he had been demolishing, or with his finger-nails, cut or scratched the forehead of the son, making a frightful gash, from which the blood flowed copiously, and then catching him by the throat he choked him till his face turned purple. The old lady, seeing her son's danger, went to the rescue, and after a severe struggle succeeded in making the husband let go his hold. Fortunately the attendant came in and a stop was put to the proceedings, though it required five men to secure the disappointed and infuriated husband and put him beyond the power of doing harm.

A Fountain of Blood.

Great excitement prevails in the Chinese city of Shanghae, consequent upon the supposed discovery of a miraculous fountain of blood, which spouts out from the wall upon the persons of all who come near it. The scene of the miracle is in a bath-house attached to a tea-shop near the north gate, and the first who discovered it was a coolie, who immediately gave the alarm, whereupon three more coolies rushed in and were soon covered with blood. The rumored miracle drew anxious crowds of curious and unwashed to the Tipaou, who, after due examination, called on the Chehsien for assistance. A detachment of three officials was at once sent off to guard the door of the miraculous bath and keep intruders aloof. A Chinese gentleman states that it really is a blood fountain, which means innumerable things to those who can read these miracles aright, and that most careful examinations have been made of the wall on all sides but the inner, which is considered too sacred for investigation.

NINETY-THREE.

What's that you said to me, deary?
I'm ninety-three years old to-day?
Is it so? Ah, well; to be sure,
How fast time travels away!
It seems but as a day's passing
Since I was down by the mill
Gathering lilies for Polly—
Sweet Polly, who lived on the hill.

For Polly was going to wed me;
She'd promised when harvest was done,
When I'd gathered my corn and potatoes—
My house was long since begun—
She would leave her home on the hillside,
Her father and mother, for me;
And you may be sure no couple
Were ever so happy as we.

And so when the frosts of October
Had set all the maples ablaze,
When the harvest-moon lighted the evenings,
And smoky and soft were the days,
When my house was all papered and painted,
My potatoes and corn in the bin,
Sweet Polly came unto my cottage—
Her presence made sunlight within.

There was joy in my house, and the children
That gathered about my knee,
With their innocent frolics and pastimes,
Their voices of pleasure and glee,
Grew to bless us and cheer us when, toilworn,
We faltered from age by the way;
To strengthen and shield us when waiting
In patience the close of the day.

For fifty long years did we travel
Together, my Polly and I,
And when the death-angel called to her,
She lay down in calmness to die:
For she said we have been to each other
All of sweetness that one life could ask;
And you will soon follow me, Dermot,
When you shall have finished your task.

And now I am waiting my summons—
The Master will call me home;
And I shall unite with my Polly
Again where no parting will come.
The night seemeth long in the ending,
But I know that the morning is near,
That the day will soon break in its glory,
And the sunlight of Heaven appear.

Pleasant and bright was life's morning,
Its noontide with happiness crowned,
And in the calm light of its evening
Some joy with its sorrow was found;
But now I am in the dark night-time,
When life brings no pleasure to me,
And I wait for the time that shall loosen
This burden of years NINETY-THREE.

"PUNCH" thinks some people are never contented. After having all their limbs broken, their heads smashed, and their brains knocked out, they will actually go to law and try to get further damages.

A LUMBERMAN up the Alleghany river, proposing to go to Philadelphia, had a trunk made of half-inch boiler iron, and inscribed upon it the following touching lines to the baggage-masters: "Throw and be d—d!"

"WELL, Pat, which is the way to Burlington?" "How did you know my name was Pat?" "Oh, I guessed it." "Thin, be the howly pokers, as ye are so good at guessing, ye'd better guess the way to Burlington."

TWENTY-EIGHT years ago a Buffalo man said to his wife: "Miranda, I'm going down to Tim's after a bed-cord." That was the last seen of him until Monday, when he entered the house with a bed-cord, and said he'd fix that bed now.

THE other day, in Mansfield, O., a gentleman who owned a fine cow thought to break her of a bad habit of jumping into his garden. He loaded up his old shot-gun with pepper and salt, and proceeded to give her a dose, as a preventive of cholera and a corrective of jumping fences. He was somewhat surprised to see the cow keel over, draw a few short breaths, and depart to the happy cow-land. He had forgotten to remove the ramrod after loading.

A WELL-KNOWN artist had, according to custom, thrown open his studio to his friends and patrons for a private view of his pictures, intended for the Royal Academy. One represented a merry party dancing, the host's face beaming with pleasure as he raised a glass of champagne to his lips. "I don't know," said the artist to a friend, "what on earth to call this picture—how to account for the happy expression on the face of the host." "Well, if I were you," replied the visitor, "I should simply call it, 'Death of a Mother-in-Law!'"

The Treasures of the Sultan.

The treasures of the Sultan of Turkey outshine those of the Shah. Their value is $27,500,000, and they lie in a rather plain kiosk immediately adjoining the Turkish transept and surmounted by a crescent and a star. The domed ceilings painted in arabesques, and pendant from it are five large golden walls. Here may be read the history of the Sublime Porte from the days of the conqueror of Byzantium, Mahmoud II., to the present Padishah, Abd-ul-Aziz. The golden throne of Nadr-Shah is here, which was renowned in the East before the peacock throne of the Great Mogul at Delhi was dreamed of. It is marvelous in its workmanship, large enough for a coach, and weighs four and a half hundred weight. It is enameled in celadon, green and crimson, and its patterns of arabesquerie are in rubies, emeralds and pearls. Above it hang the turban and armor of Sultan Murad, heavy with gold and gleaming with jewels. Near it are the horse caparisons of Selim III., with the heavy Mameluke stirrups and Arab bit of solid gold, incrusted with diamonds. Scabbards, where nothing but diamonds can be seen; cinctures of diamonds; bowls of China porcelain, their patterns marked out in gold and reset with rubies; clocks incased in diamonds and glistening with crescent moons and stars; hookahs with golden bowls; and chiboques whose amber mouth-pieces are encircled with rings of diamonds, gleam and glisten everywhere.

THERE is as much difference between self-conceit and self-respect as there is between selfish men and men who sell fish.

Resignation of Japanese Officials.

A letter from Yokohama in the Allgemeine Zeitung says that the Japanese officials of the Ministry of Finance have resigned, finding it impossible to restore the ways and means of Japan to a satisfactory condition. The State debt now amounts to $104,000,000, and is increasing every year, as the Government is unable to raise more taxes, and has entered upon a number of undertakings which considerably augment its expenditure. Hitherto the real state of affairs has been kept secret, but the letter by which the Ministers notified their resignation has found its way into the press, and it is feared that the Ministers will consequently be ordered to perform the hari-kari. The letter in question recommends that all the public works now in progress should at once be stopped, that the issue of paper money should cease, and that all the expenses of the Government should be reduced to a minimum. It also observes that the alleged progress of the country is a mere sham, which must ultimately lead to universal ruin. The correspondent adds, however, that the directors of the Finance Department seem to have been of a very different opinion a few weeks previously, as they then estimated the revenue at $70,000,000 and the expenditure at $60,000,000, and held out the prospect of a surplus of $2,000,000, even if the projected reforms were carried out. As yet only eighteen (German ?) miles of railway have been built; the reforms in the army and in national education have, of course, cost considerable sums, but the Government will not introduce other European institutions until education becomes more general. The Mikado's palace, which was burnt down the other day, is to be rebuilt with the money arising from private subscriptions collected all over the country.

Teach Your Children to Swim.

The New York Tribune says, pertinent to the Wawasset disaster: "Teach your children to swim. One would be actually astonished to find, upon inquiry among his personal friends, how few of them have this—not accomplishment any more than ciphering is an accomplishment—simple acquisition, to be gained by a few hours' devotion. Besides the advantage a swimmer has when he finds himself, perforce in the water, another great gain is the courage the consciousness of the ability to swim gives one, when an accident is imminent. As an example, to show how even those whose pleasure or whose duties call them constantly upon the water neglect to gain the knowledge of swimming, only a short time since, on a yachting trip, one of the party ascertained that neither the owner, the skipper, nor the mate of the yacht knew how to swim, while out of ten passengers four could not swim a stroke. A well-known captain informed us that one-third of the officers and sailors of the English navy are also ignorant upon the subject."

The Chicago Exposition

Of skilled industry, to open September 25, attracts universal attention, promises to be the best exhibition ever seen in the West, and will doubtless be visited by thousands anxious to see the new Chicago. They will find the great millinery store of D. B. Fisk & Co., corner of Wabash avenue and Washington street, for size, perfect arrangement, beauty and splendor; and its exposition of millinery goods, feathers and flowers, velvets and ribbons, silks and laces, for extent, variety, richness and completeness, surpassing anything of the kind in Chicago or the world. Harper's Bazar, of New York, the organ of fashion and art, regarded it as so noteworthy as a temple of business and art, and so typical of the sudden resurrection of a great city and the marvelous development of trade in the West, that it gave its readers a whole page of engraving and letter-press descriptive of the building and its contents, as the best illustration of the wonderful rebuilding of Chicago and the irrepressible energy, activity and enterprise of her business men. None who visit the Chicago Exposition should fail to see the new millinery house of D. B. Fisk & Co.

Try It.—A Tonic and Alterative medicine, the invigorating and regulating properties of which actually lengthen life, and add to the capacity for its enjoyment, is within the reach of every member of the community. No invalid who has had recourse to Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters will hesitate to concede to it these invaluable qualities. It is a stomachic and a corrective of unrivaled efficacy, yet being free from alcohol, it is not an excitant. Its anti-bilious operation is more direct, speedy, and certain than that of any of the dangerous mineral salivants, and as an aperient, it gently removes any obstructions that may have accumulated in the lower intestine, without producing either irritation or pain. In fact, its wonderful remedial effects are unaccompanied by any drawback. Of all medicines, it is the most harmless and salubrious. As an appetizer, it is far ahead of any of the alcoholic nostrums that momentarily stimulate the palate; while as a means of renovating a weak and torpid stomach, it stands alone among modern remedies. 8

A short time ago the Queen of the Belgians and the Princess Louise drove out from Spa to visit the cascade at Coo. Near the village of La Glaize they were caught in a heavy thunderstorm and sought shelter at an inn, where the landlady, seeing the two ladies, refused to admit "any such persons," and so they had to put up at a neighboring farm-house for the night.

The surest way to get insurance cheap and strong is to get it of a low premium strong stock company. Men used to buy it of high premium mutual companies and wait for dividends. Most of them are waiting now. Agents are wanted everywhere for the National Life Insurance Company, of the United States of America. E. A. Rollins, President; Jay Cooke, Chairman of the Finance Committee. Chartered by Congress. Capital, one million. Rates only three-quarters usual charges. For agency or insurance write to Branch office, Philadelphia.—[Com.

The Duchess of Leeds, formerly one of the belles of Baltimore, is now a widow, and immensely rich. True, she is only ninety, but that should not deter some of our enterprising bachelors from going over and popping to the old lady, with an ultimate view of bringing some portion of the assets to her own, her native land.

If your furnisher has not kept the Elmwood and Warwick collars, tell him to get you some when he buys his fall stock of goods. You will find them better than any you have ever worn.—[Com.

Matrimony.

All young men and most young women are interested in this subject, as it is a condition in life to which all look forward, and hope to obtain, but if a young man is wise he will not take upon himself the responsibilities of married life until he is in a condition to provide to a certain extent for his wife and children when he is called away from them. In all cases this can be done by means of a policy of Life Insurance, a moderate annual payment giving the family of the insured comparatively a large amount at his death. One of the safest and best of these Companies is the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia. Policies may be obtained or Agencies secured by application to the Home Office, or to J. W. Iredell, Jr., Supt. of Western Agencies, 78 W. Third street, Cincinnati, Ohio.—[Com.

The Best Legacy

Of Phelps, Dodge & Palmer, jobbers of boots and shoes, 48 and 50 Wabash avenue, to their customers, is their glove-fitting boot, which, combined with their large stock, low prices and uniformly fair dealing, has made them popular throughout the entire West. They manufacture largely, buy for cash, and challenge competition. The enterprise, business character, extensive sales and signal success of the house is a true Chicago Exposition, illustrating the marked energy, activity and prosperity of her business men.

No use of taking the huge, offensive, griping, drastic pills, put up in cheap wood or pasteboard boxes, when Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Tasteless, Coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules—scarcely larger than mustard seeds—possessing as much power as any large pills, and neatly put up in little vials that preserve their virtues unimpaired for any length of time, in any climate, can be had for 25 cents of all Druggists. 657

For Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Depression of Spirits, and General Debility, in their various forms, Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya, made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic. As a stimulant tonic for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal. If taken during the season it prevents fever and ague and other intermittent fevers.—[Com.

The Best are the Cheapest.—The Fearless Cook, Brilliant Base Burner, and Acorn cooking and heating stoves are the best stoves sold, are better made, closer fitting, and do more service with less fuel. Rathbone, Sard & Co.—the leading stove house in the West—sell cords of them. Samples of all kinds will be at the Chicago Exposition, and are for sale by dealers throughout the Northwest.

Make it a point when in Chicago to visit the extensive furniture house of Colby & Wirts, 292 and 294 State street. Their stock is worth examining, and no one should buy without first getting their prices. They sell goods of their own manufacture and ship to all parts of the country without extra charge for packing. Remember the number.—[Com.

Disease Recoils

From the system that has been invigorated and regulated by a course of that most beneficent of all vegetable elixirs, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters Such, at least, is the inference we are compelled to draw from the testimony of thousands of persons residing in unhealthy districts, who attribute their escape from the epidemic and other complaints which prevail there in the spring and autumn solely to the use of this great protective and preventive medicine. Many Western and Southern farmers and planters, as invariably as they sow and plant in the spring and reap and gather in the fall, administer it at those seasons to their families and employes, and take it themselves from twice to three times a day. The demand for it in the fever and ague districts bordering on the Mississippi, Ohio and Arkansas rivers is immense; and wherever the natural conditions are such as to generate intermittent or remittent fevers, it is held in the highest esteem both as an antidote to the atmospheric virus which provokes them, and as a swift and certain remedy for those distressing forms of disease. It is almost unnecessary to say that this renowned tonic and renovator is now generally accepted as a standard specific for indigestion, biliousness, nervous distemper, rheumatism, physical weakness and mental despondency, not only by the public at large, but by all unprejudiced medical men. The vast popularity of the Bitters has of course led to many counterfeits and imitations, against which the community are requested to be on their guard.

LIFE IS SWEET TO ME.

Yes, life is sweet to all, yet, how many neglect to keep the vital human machinery in a healthful and vigorous operation and protect it against the attacks of disease. The whole system often gets out of "gear," the Liver inactive, and torpid bile accumulates, the blood becomes poisoned from the effects of indigestion and the person so affected is most miserable. It is very important for the safety and welfare of our lives that the whole human machinery be kept in a healthful condition, and the fact is there is no way in which this can be so fully accomplished as by the use of that great alterative and tonic known as Dr. Smith's OLD STYLE BITTERS. It will rid you of all torpid and stagnant bile, cleanse the liver and blood, purify the system and keep it in a healthy and vigorous condition, making life more sweet to those who trust its mighty power. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,
For Diseases of the
THROAT AND LUNGS,
SUCH AS
Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed the Cherry Pectoral has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

Good for Man.—Inflammation of all kinds, Diphtheria, Wounds, Bruises, Burns, Sprains, Rheumatism, Sore Throat, Swelling of the Glands, Inflammation of the Eyes, Broken Breast, Frost Bites, Chilblains, Piles, Bee Stings, and all Sores.

Good for Beast.—Fresh Wounds, Galls, Poll Evil, Sprains, Bruises, Cracked Heels, Ring Bone, Wind Galls, Spavins, Sweeney, Founder, Lameness, Sand Cracks, Scratches, or Grease, Mange, Horse Distemper.

This truly wonderful Liniment was discovered by HOMER ANDERSON, A.M., late Professor of Chemistry and Mathematics in the Clinton Liberal Institute, of Oneida County, N.Y. In experimenting for the purpose of making Prussic Acid, by uniting the independent gaseous bodies of which it is composed, a residuum was left, which, on being applied to bruises and inflamed parts, by the students of the Institute, was found to possess the remarkable property of cooling down and carrying off the inflammation and soreness at once, and restoring the parts to soundness and health in a few hours without pain or irritation.

It is not a heating Liniment, but acts by its peculiar specific or chemical qualities in dissolving and scattering the soreness and inflammation of the injured part. By a free application, the red surface soon becomes cool, moist and natural, and is restored to natural health without suppuration or destruction.

As a Liniment for Horse Flesh, for the cure of all the ailments named above, we challenge the world to find its equal.

Price 25 & 50 cents per bottle.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Sugar-Coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules—the "Little Giant" Cathartic, or Multum in Parvo Physic, scarcely larger than mustard seed, yet representing as much cathartic power as its large repulsive pills, being most searching and thorough, yet gently and kindly operating.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using them. For Jaundice, Headache, Impure Blood, Constipation, Pain in Shoulders, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations, Bad taste in Mouth, Bilious attacks, Internal Fever, Rush of Blood to Head, Bloated Stomach, High Colored Urine, Gloomy Forebodings, take Dr. Pierce's Pellets.

One or two, taken daily for a time, will cure Pimples, Blotches, Eruptions, Boils, Scrofulous Sores and Virulent Affections of Skin, Throat and Bones. No cheap wood or paste board boxes, but kept fresh and reliable in vials. 25 cents, by druggists or mail. Manufactured at the World's Dispensary, Nos. 80, 84 and 86 West Seneca St., BUFFALO, N.Y.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

GOSSIP OF THE GRANGES.

The Grange organization is spreading rapidly in Virginia.

Granges are about to be organized throughout New York State.

Tennessee reports an increase of eighteen Granges on the 23d ultimo.

A Grange of Patrons of Husbandry has been organized in Boston.

Seventeen new Granges have been organized in Ohio since our last report.

Georgia has now 111 Granges, showing an increase of twenty-five in two weeks.

There were 105 Granges organized in Missouri between the 9th anp 23d of August.

The Granges propose to bury old political differences, with the farmers as principal morners.

Official returns state the number of Granges to be 5,229 and increasing at the rate of twenty-five per day.

The Patrons of Husbandry have organized a Woolen Factory Association at Dakota, Iowa, with $30,000 capital.

A special effort is being made to establish Granges in all the grain ports on the Atlantic Coast where they do not now exist.

There was a rousing gathering of farmers at Hickman's Mills, Me., on the 23d of August, to participate in a basket picnic.

The Grangers of Granville, Ga, went to the residence of Captain Shuetter, a sick member, and did his threshing for him.

The Pella Blade tells of a man who says that "one can't become a Granger unless he has at least done one fair day's work in his life."

The Franklin county (Vt,) Grangers have purchased corn by the car load, at a discount of twelve cents a bushel from prevailing prices.

The women of Wetzel county, W. Va., have formed a Grange to prevent their husbands from visiting the grass widows in that section.

An old lady from the country, with six unmarried daughters, went into Augusta, Ga., the other day, hunting the Patrons of Husbandry. She meant business.

The Patrons of Husbandry are said to have borrowed much of their ritual from the Masonic and other secret orders. They missed it there. "Borrowing dulls the edge of Husbandry."

A H Stephens says he is looking forward to the new movement of the Patrons of Husbandry with much interest and anxiety, and expects incalculable good will result to the people from the movement.

An immense meeting of Grangers and veterans of the Mexican war was held at Sweet Springs, near Brownsville, Mo., on the 27th ultimo. Nearly 15,000 people were present, many of whom came from a great distance.

Charles Robinson, the first free State Governor of Kansas, has published a speech fully approving the farmers movement, and demanding in their behalf the most thorough and radical measures of reform.

The gathering of the Grangers at Davenport, Iowa, two or three days ago, was very large. "Without a doubt," says the Gazette, "it was the grandest gathering of farmers, farmers' wives, daughters and sons ever known in Iowa."

Preceding every election, the Republican party cry out Retrenchment and Civil Service Reform, and immediately the leaders have secured another lease of office they renew their speculations. Defalcations in the Republican party have become so common that every body expects a new batch of them every day. Harper, in Illinois, takes more than a hundred thousand dollars, but he is no worse than the high-toned thieves at Washington who set the example. Creswell and Robeson are as bad, or worse, than the meanest letter abstracter in the land, and when one is condemned, all alike deserve it.

The Mishawaka Enterprise says that a singular case of spontaneous ignition took place in the rear of Huntsinger & Co.'s drug store, Thursday morning. A small quantity of settlings from a barrel of boiled linseed oil was thrown out the back door and about an hour afterwards it was discovered that the refuse oil had ignited.

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it mus hold above all others in the market.

THE ABSORBING TOPIC.

PROGRESS OF THE LIQUOR CASES.

THE ARGUMENT OF THE HON. ALBERT G. PORTER—NEW AND UNEXPECTED POINTS IN FAVOR OF THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE LAW—THE CASE TAKEN UNDER ADVISEMENT BY THE COURT.

The Hon Albert G. Porter in behalf of the State presented the closing argument yesterday, and it is presented herewith in full:

May it please the court: To maintain public order is declared in the first clause of the preamble to the constitution to be one of the three great ends for which it was ordained. The first section of that instrument declares that all free governments are instituted for the peace, safety and well-being of the people. To maintain public order and to conserve the peace, safety, and well-being of the people is therfore a high duty with which each department of the State government, within the sphere of its appropriate functions stands charged. That the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors is the greatest of the obstacles to the maintainance of public order; that more than anything else it interferes with the peace, safety and well-being of the society, all candid men confess. That it chiefly peoples our prisons; that a large part of the burdens imposed upon society in maintaining efficient police regulations in the state, the counties, the townships, and the cities, are directly owing to it; that it is the chief foe of the household, upon the virtue and intelligence of which alone can a free State repose—that it makes home the abode of poverty and ignorance and brutality. and often a seed plot of crime—these things are as well known as that the sun rises in the morning and sets in the evening. Whatever enactment, therefore, comes from the legislative department before the judiciary meant to strengthen the foundation of public order and to promote the peace, safety and well being of the people, by restraining or suppressing this overshadowing evil ought to be met by the judiciary charged with the upholding of public order, with earnest welcome, and not overthrown unless liable to constitutional objections that can not be overcome. From the beginning of the State, statutes meant to suppress this course of public disorder have been on our statute books. The business of retailing spiritous liquors has been from the first one of State regulation, and efforts by legislation have been repeatedly exerted to suppress or restrain it. This Court has held that a law which might prohibit retailing altogether, is not liable to objection as being repugnant to the constitution. The constitution of 1816, containing a provision precisely like that in the present one, concerning the vesting of the legislative power in the General Assembly. Its language was, "The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a General Assembly, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives." Const. 1819, art. 3, sec. 1.

So early as 1818 the Legislature enacted a law that no person should sell liquors in a less quantity than a quart at a time, without a license from the County Board, which could not be granted until he had produced the certificate of twelve respectable householders that he was of good moral character, and that it would be for the convenience of travelers for him to be licensed. He was forbidden to sell liquors in any quantity on Sunday or to any minor, apprentice or servant without the consent of his parent or master; or to any person in a state of intoxication. He was likewise required to give a bond that he would not permit any gambling or disorderly conduct about his house, or other breach of the law. Laws of 1818, p. 296. In 1821 the as to require that the certificate on which the license might be obtained to be signed by 12 respectable freeholders.

In 1832 the law was again changed by allowing the county boards to issue licenses, on the applicant producing the certificate of twenty-four freeholders of his town or township to his good moral character; but if the town or township did not contain twenty-four free-holders who were inhabitants, (as perhaps many did not at that early day) the number might be computed from freeholders in the immediate vicinity; but license should not be granted to any person residing within any town or township where a majority of the free holders remonstrated. Rec. R. S., 1838, p. 582, sec. 5. This continued to be the law until 1843. And this law was sustained by this Court in Woods vs Pratt, 5 Blackf, 377, in an opinion delivered by Judge Sullivan. The statement of the case by the honored Judge shows that a majority of the freeholders of a township had filed with the Board of Commissioners a general remonstrance against the licensing of any person to retail liquors in the township. In relation to the case and the effect of this particular remonstrance the Court said:

"The law is that no license [to retail spirituous or strong liquors] shall be granted to any person residing within any township where a majority of the freeholders in such a town or township shall remonstrate against the same. The object of the law is to protect the public morals, and preserve the peace and quiet of society. Being designed for the public good, it should be so constructed as to promote it.

"If the construction contended for by the defendant should prevail, it would impose upon the majority the necessity of watching, and opposing by a separate remonstrance, each individual application. That would be burdensome. The statute does not require such a construction to effect the design of the legislature. The evil which the statute puts in power of the majority of the freeholders to remove, can as well be suppressed by a general remonstrance against all applications as by a remonstrance in each particular case. * * * It clearly expressed to the Board of Commissioners the wish of a majority of the freeholders of Brookville that shops for the retail of liquor should not be licensed among them.

It will be observed that the law of 1832 gave to the county boards (first) authority to license the retailing of spirituous liquors; but (secondly) not at their discretion, but on the certificates a fixed number of freeholders, which (thirdly) might exceed the whole number of freeholders in the township; and (fourthly) if a majority of the freeholders of the township remonstrated, no license should be issued. There was, in that event, total prohibition. The law now in question before this court bears a close resemblance to that of 1832, though it is not so severe in its provisions It forbids the selling of liquors to be drank upon the premises until a permit shall first have been obtained. To obtain this permit the applicant must obtain a number of signers to his application, being voters of the township or ward, equal to a majority of the voters who cast their ballots for Congressmen at the preceding Congressional election. The board is required to examine the application, and if it is satisfied that it is in the required form and signed as prescribed by the law, to issue the permit. The is called in question as being in conflict with three clauses in the Constitution;

1. That which ordains that the legislative authority of the State shall be vested in the General Assembly. Const., art. 4, sec. 1.

2. That which provides that a law shall be passed the taking effect of which shall be made to depend upon any authority except as provided in the constitution. Art. set. 25.

3. That which provides that in all the cases enumerated in the section preceding it, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the State. Art, 4, sec. 23.

Under a previous constitution, as I have shown, containing a similar provision respecting the repository of legislative powers, laws had for more than a generation been upheld, which confided to the people a power similar to, and indeed, greater than has been confided to them in the act under discussion, in respect to preventing persons from selling intoxicating liquors without a license. Is seems never to have occurred to the judicial mind in those earlier days that to make, not the enactment, but the application of a law dependent upon the event of the approval of the majority or a less number, of the persons to be affected by it, clothed that part of the people with a legislative power. Laws were passed upon many subjects, the application of which to particular cases were made to depend upon an antecedent petition or expression of a part or a majority of the persons to be affected by them. To cite a few among many instances, the Board of Commissioners were empowered and required to direct the laying out of highways, but only on the petition of a specified of freeholders. The trustees of a congressional township might lease the school lands for three but by a vote of a majority of the voters of the township, but not otherwise, they might lease them for ten years They might sell the school land of the township, but only when a majority exceeding fifteen of the voters had, by a vote, instructed them to make the sale. R. S. 1843, p. 261. The inhabitants of a school district might, at a meeting, direct the building, hireing or purchase of a school house, fix the sum to be expended for it, determine the amount of work to be done by each able bodied man toward building the school house, and the amount at which any such person might commute his tax. R. S. 1843 p 319 This class of laws was universally esteemed valid and upheld by the courts. Powers, also, which were essentially legislative, the taxing power (which this court has held to be so) among others, were delegated to counties and townships and cities, and the constitutionality of this delegation of powers remained unquestioned. When the provision that the legislative authority of the State was imported from the old into the new Constitution. It was imported into it with a full knowledge of the construction which that provision had received in a long course of legislative practice and of judicial decisions. The rule is a familiar one that where a constitutional provision is borrowed from a sister State, reference will be had to the judicial decisions of such State, made before it was borrowed, for its interpretion. How much more ought respect to the course of judicial decision and legislative practice, under a provision of an older constitution, to be respected when it is transferred into a new, after the construction given to it has become established, and, I almost say, woven into the texture of the popular mind. How fixed that construction becomes, is shown by the fact that the practice which had grown up under it has been repeated in almost numberless legislative enactments under the present constitution. Thus, to give a few among many instances under general laws passed by the legislature, persons desiring the incorporation of towns, after having caused a census to be taken of the inhabitants within the proposed limits of such towns, shall present an application to the board of Commissioners signed by themselves and not less than a third of the qualified voters. If at a vote taken a majority of the voters vote "yes," then the Board is required to make an order that the town has been incorporated. 1 G. & H., 619-621. And this law has been recognized as valid by this court. 38 Ind., 41.

So under a general law for consolidating incorporated towns with cities, the common council of a city and

THE PRESIDENT AND TRUSTEES

Of a town may agree upon terms of union, and on a day for an election to obtain an expression of the voters, and if a majority of the qualified voters of both town and city shall vote for the consolidation, it shall then take place. 1 G. & H., 241. So under a general law, an incorporated town may become a city, if a majority of the qualified voters express themselves in favor of it by a ballot. 1 G. & H., 217, s. 6. So under a general law, a county seat may be changed when two thirds of the legal voters of the county have petitioned the Board of Commissioners for such change. And the mode prescribed for determining the whole number of voters in the county by adding twenty per cent of the number of persons who voted at the next preceding general election. 1 G. & H. 196. And this law has been sustained by this Court. So a new country may be organised, or the boundaries of two or more counties may be changed, on a petition of a majority of the legal voters within the limits to be affected. And the mode prescribed for ascertaining such majority is (as under the present temperance law) by reference to the vote at the next preceding Congressional election. (1 G. & H.. 191-163.)

So the Board of County Commissioners may purchase grounds for agricultural and horticultural fairs, but only on the petition of a majority of the voters of the county. (Acts 1873. p. 118.) So, in respect to the sale of Congressional township lands, the same provision is made by law that existed under the former Constitution—that they can only be sold by the trustee under the direction of a majority of the voters of the township. (1 G. & H., 548.)

So grounds for Agricultural and Horticultural Fairs may be bought—how! County Commissioners may buy on petition of a majority of voters of the county. So as to sale of county and township lands there is the same provision now as under the old Constitution—that they can only be sold by the trustee under the direction of a vote of a majority of the electors of a township.

To be allowed to do these several things are matters of frequent and pressing importance. The Legislature withholds the power—thus forbidding the thing to be done—forbidding towns to be incorporated or to be consolidated with cities, or to become cities; forbidding the changing of county seats or the organization of new counties, or the changing of the boundaries of counties, or the purchasing of grounds for "Agricultural and Horticultural Fairs, or the sale of Congressional township lands, unless a majority of the people to be immediately affected vote or petition for these several things. Now this kind of legislation ran along, side by side, under the former Constitution, with the legislation which prohibited the licensing of retailers of liquors except by approval of a specified number or a majority of the people, and the latter legislation was upheld by this Court as being evidently of the same character. And the new constitution was adopted with the knowledge of all this class of legislation. Why now should that legislation which relates to the restraining of the traffic in spiritous liquors be overthrown and the rest be upheld? Surely not upon the ground that "the Legislative power of the State is vested in the General Assembly."

Is the temperance law then repugnant to that provision of the constitution that no law shall be passed, the taking affect of which shall be made to depend upon any authority, except as provided for in this constitution?

What does the constitution mean by

THE TAKING EFFECT OF A LAW?

Does it mean the application of the law? If it confers an authority, has the law not taken effect until authority has begun to be exercised under it? If it be law prohibiting an act, has the law not taken effect till some one has done the thing prohibited and exposed himself to its penalties? If it be a law for the enforcement of a duty, has it not taken effect until there has been a refusal to perform such duty and the coercive sanctions of the law have been invoked to enforce the performance? Or rather, has it not taken effect whenever, if it be a law prohibiting an act, the penalty might be enforced if the act were done, though the act prohibited might never be done? If it confer an authority, has it not taken effect so soon as an authority might have been exercised under it, although none in fact ever should be? If it is for the enforcement of a duty, has it not taken effect whenever, if the duty be refused, its enforcement might have been required, though no occasion should ever arise for its enforcement? If a law were so provide that upon getting a majority of votes a man should be elected to an office, has the law not taken effect until he has been elected? How could he be elected under a law which had not taken affect? If a law were enacted that a man might do a thing upon the happening of a certain contingency and it were said in the law that it should take effect from its passage, could it notwithstanding, never take effect until the contingency had happened? And if the man should die before the contingency happened, would it never have taken effect as a law at all? Is the declaration in an act nugatory which states that it shall take effect and be in force from its passage, and can it not be in force until under it a force has been exerted?

Let us now recur to the law which is in question before this court. What provision of it did not take effect from its passage? It prohibited the sale of liquor on any man's premises until a permit was obtained. This prohibition was absolute so soon as the bill was passed, and remained till the permit should be obtained. It proscribed the method of obtaining the permit and the terms upon which it could be obtained. Were not the method and the terms complete so soon as the law was passed? Because the applicant might not be able to comply with the terms, by obtaining the requisite number of signers upon his petition, had the law not taken effect? The evil sought to be remedied by the framers of the constitution, by the adoption of the

PROVISION UNDER CONSIDERATION,

Was a practice which had grown up of submitting to the people, to be determined by their votes, whether bills which had gone through all the forms of legislation should take effect as laws. The practice was as if the legislature had said to the people in respect to their temperance law "We propose to settle this question respecting the licensing persons to retail intoxicating liquors by a law prohibiting such retailing until a license has been obtained upon an application, approved by a majority of the voters? Is that the kind of a law you want? If it is you will vote 'aye'; if it is not you will vote 'no.'"

But in the case of the present law, no question has been presented to the people, or to any part of the people, whether it should be a law or not. The legislature fixed what the law should be arbitrarily, without respect to any petition or vote of theirs.

It provided, however, in the application of the law that a license should or should be granted to an applicant according, as a certain number of persons might sign or decline to sign his application. What has this circumstance to do with the taking effect of the law? It might as well be argued that when a law is passed providing for

A POPULAR ELECTION,

The law cannot take effect until one of the candidates has been chosen by a majority of the electors.

It is said, however, that the enactment in question is a local law, and not of uniform operation throughout the State.

The uniformity demanded by the objection would overthrow the most important laws we have, and involve society almost into chaos. If it be said that every law is unconstitutional in the administration of which it might happen that a practice or an act might be forbidden at one place and be tolerated as innocent at another; then the act, for example, for the organization and government of cities is plainly repugnant to the constitution. The constitution is silent respecting municipal corporations. There is no clause in that instrument conferring upon them legislative powers, or saying that the Legislature may confer any such powers upon them Yet the courts have held that it was competent for the Legislature to invest them with the powers which they now exert. Under those powers they can (among many other substantive things) "prevent and regulate the use of firearms, fireworks, or other practice tending to endanger persons or property." Fort Wayne might under this act forbid, under penalties, the use of any fireworks, while Indianapolis might tolerate them. The act empowers the Councils to suppress gaming, gaming houses, or houses of ill fame. Fort Wayne might tolerate gaming houses and houses of ill fame, and Indianapolis might forbid them under penalties. The act also empowers the Councils to regulate the use of coaches, hacks and other vehicles for the transportation of passengers. Fort Wayne might prescribe one tariff of rates for the transportation of passengers, and Indianapolis another one. Does the circumstance that there might be this diversity of practice among the several cities of the State show the act to be repugnant to the Constitution?

There is uniformity of provision respecting the powers and capacties of cities in the act in question, but there is an infinite diversity of practice and of results under it.

SO IN THE CASE OF COUNTY SEATS,

the law is uniform respecting the manner of changing them; but a county seat may be changed by a vote of five hundred electors in one county, while in another five thousand might be insufficient to effect a change, because they do not compose a majority of the voters. Is the law for that reason unconstitutional? Illustrations of this kind under our statutes might be multiplied without number. Should a law not be of uniform operation which required the candidates for office in the several counties of the State to have a majority of the electors, because in Brown county a thousand might elect a Representative, while in Marion twenty thousand might fall short of doing it?

So under the temperance law, licenses may issue to applicants to sell in townships or wards in which they desire to carry on business, upon their obtaining a number of signers, not less than a majority of the voters in such township or ward who voted for Congressman at the preceding Congressional election. An applicant might in one township, it is true, be required to obtain more signers than an applicant in another, on account of difference in population, but there is perfect uniformity of provision, and there is perfect uniformity in regard to the number of signers to be obtained as between all the applicants in any one of such townships or wards respectively. Suppose that this law had required that in a populous township an applicant should obtain a hundred signers, and in a township sparsely settled, where there might not be more than one hundred voters, another applicant for a like privilege should be required to get a like number, would there not be a like outcry here against the hardship of such a case and the want of uniformity?

UNIFORMITY OF PROVISION

Is what the constitution contemplated, not of uniformity of practice and result. The latter is practically unattainable. Its attainment, if practicable, would be the surest evidence of the decline of the State. Differentiation, say the political philosophers, is the law of progress. It is what distinguishes the civilizations of the East.

Nor is the law under consideration a "special" one in the sense of the constitution. Its provisions apply equally and uniformly to all parts of the State. That a special result shall follow from it in one place that does not in another

THURSDAY, OCT. 2, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

The arguments on the motion of Mr. Evarts to dimiss the Credit Mobilier suits on the ground of unconstitutionality have been concluded at Hartford, and the case taken under advisement by the Court. This closes the Credit Mobilier case for the present. The decision will probably be given as soon as reached, but that time is uncertain.

Ned O'Baldwin, pugilist, better known as the "Irish Giant," is again in trouble. He has just been sentenced, at Philadelphia, to two years in the Penitentiary for aggravated assault.

It is stated that $10,000,000 of city bonds of the Cincinnati Southern railroad have been negotiated in New York to a German house.

Thomas Brown Parker, one of the wealthiest citizens of Philadelphia, last week attempted to murder his wife, and then committed suicide. Jealousy was the cause.

The West.

The Yellowstone expedition has completed its mission, and will shortly start on its homeward march. It has been a complete success, having accomplished every object for which it was inaugurated. An area of 20,000 square miles of unknown country has been explored, the Indians thoroughly thrashed, and the survey of the Northern Pacific railway completed....Twenty-four hours' imprisonment is the sentence pronounced upon the Manitoba prisoners concerned in kidnapping Lord Gordon. The temper of the Court and people seems to have become much mollified. Gov. Austin, of Minnesota, who was present, was invited to a seat on the bench beside the Judges. The trifling sentence was received with cheers by the audience, and, after the formalities of trial had been observed, the Americans and their friends spent the evening sociably with Judge Betourney....Chicago was visited, on the 17th inst., by a destructive conflagration. A spark from a passing locomotive set fire to a hay shed, which was soon fanned into a flame. A high wind was prevailing at the time, and the fire spread with incredible rapidity, causing a wild panic. The flames were not subdued until ten acres of buildings had been consumed. The number of houses burned was fifty-three, nearly all of which were frame shanties of little value. Total loss about $250,000, one-third of which is covered by insurance.....The lost propeller Ironsides is said to have long been in an unseaworthy condition, and that she had been leaking badly for several days before the accident.....Chicago underwriters estimate the loss by the recent storm on Lake Michigan at half a million dollars.

The Pacific Mail steamer Costa Rica was lately wrecked on the California coast. The passengers and crew were saved....A San Francisco telegram says: Measures have been taken, in military circles, to secure a commutation of the sentence of the Modoc prisoners Slow Luck and Boncha. The death-warrants of the other prisoners have not been received yet at Fort Klamath....The most remarkable discoveries have been made by the Wheeler exploring expedition in the Far West. The topographical and geological results of surveying Eastern Arizona are described as perfectly wonderful. A country, it is said, has been discovered with magnificent parks, streams and woods far exceeding any in Colorado.

A. C. & O. F. Badger, bankers of Chicago, have suspended.....The Railroad Committee of the Illinois Board of Equalization are said to have determined to assess the railroad property of the State at $150,000,000.

The Orchard City Savings Bank, of Burlington, Iowa, has suspended....A fire and explosion in the Yellow Jacket mine, Gold Hill, Nevada, on the 20th of September, caused the death of six miners, and the wounding of many more....Burlington, Iowa, was visited by a disastrous conflagration on the 20th of September. The fire broke out in the heart of the city and swept over two squares and a half before it could be checked. The loss is estimated at about $200,000. The heaviest losers were Gilbert, Hedge & Co., lumber dealers, who lose about $120,000....The Terre Haute (Ind.) Iron and Nail Works have been destroyed by fire. Loss, $175,000; insurance, $73,000. ....The three grand arches of the great bridge at St. Louis, it is announced, will be completed by the middle of December. The two center sections of one of the arches have just been completed, thus demonstrating the feasibility of the original plan, and its success is regarded as one of the greatest triumphs of engineering skill the world has ever seen.

A singular and terrible shooting affray occurred at Independence, Mo., last week. James J. Chiles, a noted desperado, met Deputy Marshal James Peacock on the street, and slapped him in the face. A fight ensued, during which a pistol fell from Chiles' pocket, which was picked up by his son, 14 years old, who shot Peacock in the back, inflicting a dangerous wound. Peacock then shot Chiles through the head, killing him. A son of Peacock then shot young Chiles, wounding him fatally. City Marshal Farrow, who then came up to stop the fight, was slightly wounded in the breast, but by whom is not known.....A daring and extensive plot to rob the Indianapolis Exposition of diamonds and other valuables has been discovered. It was arranged that experienced burglars should be placed near the cases containing an immense amount of diamonds, jewelry, and silverware, while confederates should cut the gas-pipe which supplies the Exposition, and which runs through an open common. In the darkness and confusion a raid was to be made, the cases smashed, and the valuables secured. Since the discovery of this plot the guards have been strengthened, calcium lights provided, and all precautions taken to frustrate their design.

A St. Paul dispatch of Sept. 23 says: Friends of the Northern Pacific concede today that Jay Cooke & Co.'s failure puts a stop to building the road, and that when building will be resumed is an unanswerable question. It is rumored that the Minneapolis Construction Company holds short time acceptances of the Northern Pacific for about a quarter of a million, being about all the profit made by the Construction Company, and its payment is thought doubtful in financial and mercantile circles. The feeling holds good, though, from the latter class that the worst is over.....The bruisers Tom Allen and Mike McCoole contested a prize-fight in Illinois, a few miles above St. Louis, last week. Allen was declared the victor after the eighth round, having received scarcely a scratch. McCoole was badly punished.....It is stated that the cholera is raging among the Russian colonists in Dakota.

The South.

A Shreveport (La.) dispatch of the 20th says there are less than 3,000 people in the town, 1,000 of whom are either down with fever or convalescing.

The yellow fever is rapidly abating at Shreveport and Memphis....A series of railroad accidents, resulting in serious loss of life, occurred in Georgia, on the 22d of September, caused by a heavy rain-storm washing away culverts. At Branchville a train ran into a washed culvert, killing four persons. Another train ran into a culvert near Millen, and three persons were killed. All the killed were employes of the roads. Other accidents of a minor nature are reported....The dwelling of William Crouch, near Williamstown, Ky., was burned a few nights ago, and his wife, two children, and an orphan boy named Dunn perished in the flames.

A terrific storm recently visited Tallahassee, Fla., and vicinity. Many dwellings and gin-houses were blown down, and several lives lost. The towns of St. Marks and Newport were swept away, only two houses being left.

A bloody affray occurred near Bardstown, Ky., a few days ago, in which Columbus and Reynolds Beam, brothers, were killed by G. W and William Samuels, who surrendered themselves to the authorities....Advices from Brownsville, Texas, represent that the Mexicans around Matamoras are preparing for a foray into Texas, in retaliation for Mackenzie's raid into their country....A duel is pending between ex-Guerilla Mosby and Col. Hughes, Republican candidate for Governor of Virginia....The Attorney-General of Mississippi has decided that no election for State officers in that State can be held for two years. This will put an end to the canvass which has already begun, and which has been so far prosecuted with great bitterness.

Revenue Collector Wedinee, of the Second (Montgomery) District of Alabama, is a defaulter to the extent of $20,000....The yellow fever is spreading in the rural districts of the South.

Washington.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives the very gratifying assurance that the Government "does not lose a cent" by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co., with whom it has had extensive dealings during the past four years in the sale of bonds, etc....Internal revenue receipts since the beginning of the present year exceed those for the same period last year by about $1,000,000.

Foreign.

Miss Rye has sailed from London for Montreal, having in charge another detachment of workingwomen, fifty-five in number, for whom she has secured employment in America.... The cholera is raging with great violence in Hungary....Roger Tichborne has been forbidden by Chief-Justice Cockburn to make any more public statements about his claims. He has appealed to the courts, and must be content to await their decision. This curious order has called forth a protest from the claimant, who complains that to obey it will lose him all the contributions which have sustained him in his litigation.

Cholera prevails to an alarming extent in Vienna....A London dispatch says: At the session of the Old Catholic Congress yesterday, Dr. Walck, of Augsburg, made a bitter attack on the French, accusing them of provoking the late war and holding them responsible for all its horrors. The speech caused a painful sensation. Pere Hyacinthe and other French delegates were deeply offended and withdrew from the Congress.

The Elector of Hesse-Cassel has consented to the annexation of his territory to Prussia. ....A dispatch from Calcutta announces the loss at sea of the ship Indus, coolie-laden, and 118 coolies perished....It is said there are 50,000 members of the International Society in Spain....The Emperor of Morocco is dead.... The Count de Chambord has expressed a willingness to abdicate the French throne....Dr. August Nélaton, the eminent French surgeon, is dead....The Government of Spain has decided, immediately after the prorogation of the Cortes, to declare Spain to be in a state of siege.

The situation of the Carlists in the north of Spain is pronounced critical....Garibaldi, professional patriot, tenders his sword to the Republic of Spain. Castelar thanks him for his offer, but declares that Spain needs no assistance....Chief-Justice Cockburn has fined the editor of the Cheltenham Chronicle £750 for publishing criticisms on his conduct on the trial of the Tichborne claimant....Gen. Von Manteuffel, who was Commander-in-Chief of the German Army of Occupation in France, has been appointed Field-Marshal....The wife of Prince Bismarck is dead....It is stated that the Bank of England holds $300,000 of Jay Cooke & Co.'s acceptances, and that the Rothschilds have $100,000 of the same paper.

The revolution in San Domingo against President Baez has every prospect of a successful issue. The war cry of the revolutionists is "Down with the Samana Bay Convention and Baez."... Spain has borrowed 100,000,000 francs from France....The Shah has arrived safely home.

Political.

The following is the ticket nominated by the Liberals and Democrats of Wisconsin, at their recent convention at Milwaukee: Governor, William R. Taylor, of Dane county; Lieutenant-Governor, C. D. Parker, of La Crosse; Secretary of State, Peter Doyle, of Prairie du Chien; Attorney-General, A. Scott Sloan, of Dodge; Superintendent of Schools, Edward Searing, of Rock county; Emigration Commissioner, Martin J. Argard, of Eau Claire....The New York Republican State Convention, recently in session at Utica, passed a resolution denouncing the "salary-grab."....Mosby and Hughes, of Virginia, have postponed their duel till after the election.

A London telegram of the 18th says: The whaling steamer Arctic, for Dundee, passed Peterhead last night, with the crew of the Polaris, who had been transferred from the whaler Ravenscraig, which rescued them from boats on the 20th of July, twenty miles south of Cape York....The Society of the Army of the Cumberland closed its session at Pittsburgh, on the 18th inst. They adjourned to meet at Columbus, O., on the 17th and 18th of September next. The contract for the Thomas monument was not awarded, as all the models were found glaringly defective. The society is in a flourishing condition, having over $1,000 in its treasury.

Gen. Sheridan has been elected President of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland.

The safe arrival of Capt. Buddington and party at Dundee, Scotland, has been fully confirmed. After separation from Tyson and his companions the Polaris was abandoned in a sinking condition by Capt. Buddington and the remainder of the expedition. They passed an uneventful winter in Lone Boat Cove, in timber houses covered with sails. In the spring two boats were built of thin pine boards, taken from the cabin of the Polaris. In these the whole party embarked as soon as the ice opened, and sailed southward. On the 3d of June they sighted Cape York, and on the 22d of the same month were picked up by the British bark Ravenscraig. The rescued party say that Capt. Hall enjoyed the confidence of every one, and his death, which was unexpected, was deplored by all on board the Polaris....The Grand Lodge of I. O. of O. F. of the United States held their annual session at Baltimore, recently. The next communication will be held at Atlanta, Ga.....A National Live Stock Dealers' Association was recently organized at Kansas City, Mo., and was largely attended by prominent Western cattle-dealers. John T. Alexander, of Illinois, was elected President.

Crop reports for September, received by the Department of Agriculture, present a complete summary of the wheat crop for 1873. There is manifest improvement in the yield of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Ohio, Kansas, Pennsylvania and New Jersey; in Illinois, Iowa and Michigan there is little difference from the crop of 1872, while California and Indiana have been less favored than last year. The Commissioner of Agriculture believes that the decrease of yield, in nearly every instance, can be traced to the want of intelligent cultivation....A series of robberies and foul murders have recently been committed on the United States citizens residing and traveling on the Mexican border of Texas which seem to indicate that the banditti select Americans as the victims, either as a retaliation for Gen. Mackenzie's raid into the Kickapoo camp in Mexico, or because the authorities are so unfriendly to the Americans that such crimes can be perpetrated without fear of punishment. In many instances the perpetrators have been arrested and their guilt established, but they are never punished. The facts have been proven before the United States Consuls and sent to Washington, in the hope that redress will be demanded.

THE FINANCIAL PANIC.

The Failure of Jay Cooke & Co.—Other Suspensions Follow in Rapid Succession—The Excitement at New York, Philadelphia, and Other Points.

New York, Sept. 18.—Another day of intense excitement has passed over Wall street. Early this morning predictions were made that this would be a hard day, and one that would see the downfall of more than one financial house. The Chicago fire, it was thought, would occasion a drain upon deposits and tend to a panic. Stocks for the first two or three hours fluctuated wonderfully. Western Union fell 10 per cent. without an upward struggle, but about noon recovered its opening figure. At noon the report was whispered that the house of Jay Cooke & Co. had suspended. At first the rumor was considered an idle one, or at most started by some scheming faction. However, it had great effect. Men and boys ran races from office to office. The telegraph was incessant in its operations, and the excitement grew intense. Shortly after 12 m., it was officially announced that the suspension had occurred, the reasons therefor being advances made to their Philadelphia house, which rendered them unable to meet the demand made upon them by their depositors here. As soon as it became generally known that Jay Cooke & Co. had suspended, many rumors touching other prominent houses sprang into existence, but all reports about the suspension of firms excepting Jay Cooke & Co., Richard Schell, and the small firm of Robinson & Co., upon investigation proved to be without foundation. When this fact was made known on the streets, confidence was again restored, and at the close of business a stronger feeling prevailed.

The liabilities of Jay Cooke & Co. cannot be ascertained. It will take some time to make a statement of the affairs of the house. The creditors are mostly banks and bankers, there being but few individual depositors in the list. The suspension will greatly interfere with the operations of the Syndicate, and probably suspend the negotiation of 5 per cents.

The Tribune says: "Late this evening the following reasons were given by Mr. Fahnestock, one of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., for the failure of this house. For several weeks the uneasy feeling which prevailed in connection with the new railroad scheme caused heavy drains upon the deposits both of their Philadelphia and New York houses. The deposits in both cities suffered continual diminution, until at the beginning of the present month, their deposits were lower than at any time during the last fall and this spring. The drain upon the deposits, already so heavy, was still further increased by the recent suspensions and demand for money was incessant, and is felt still more severely in Philadelphia. The Philadelphia house was compelled to call upon the New York house for aid, and a large amount of assistance was rendered. The Philadelphia house was under large advances to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, involving large sums of money, preventing them from maintaining the reserve ordinarily kept, and they were therefore unable to respond to the demands of their creditors. In this season they were unable to return to the New York house advances made by the latter, or to supply them with any collaterals available in New York at the present time. Owing to this, the cash balances became exhausted, and suspension became inevitable. Fahnestock said that of course the different members of the firm were possessed of a large amount of private and personal property, but none of this was available in an emergency such as the present. He was not at the present time, nor was any member of the firm, prepared to tell the exact amount of liabilities or assets of the firm. He believed that all the creditors would be paid in full, and hoped that the suspension would only be temporary. On this point nothing could positively be said at present, and some time must necessarily elapse before the exact amount of private property of the firm can be decided."

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 18.—Third street was thrown into an uproar at 11 o'clock this morning by the report that the old banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co. had suspended. The rumor caused the most intense excitement amid all circles, and the intelligence flew from mouth to mouth with lightning rapidity. Persons interested, as well as those not interested, turned their steps toward the office on Third street to see for themselves the condition of affairs. Very soon a constant stream of people were seen debouching from all the adjoining streets into Third, until that street was filled with people, all intently and excitedly looking at the building. The doors were closed and guarded by officers, and all except those having business with the firm were prevented from entering.

Mr. Cooke, authorized the posting of a notice on the doors. The crowd then rushed toward the spot, all being derious of seeing and reading themselves what was upon it. This was impossible, and a voice from the crowd cried out, "Read it aloud." The demand for this increased, fifty voices seconding the request; whereupon Mr. D. M. Longstreth read aloud, to be heard in the middle of the street, the following:

"To the Public: We regret to be obliged to announce that, owing to unexpected demands upon us, our office has been obliged to suspend payment. In a few days we will be able to present a statement of our affairs to our creditors. Until that time, we must ask for their patient consideration. We believe our assets to be largely in excess of our liabilities. Jay Cooke & Co."

This statement settled the existing doubt which still lingered in the minds of many of the crowd, who, notwithstanding the evidence which the closed doors of a banking-house exhibits, still hoped against hope till almost the very signature of the firm was read.

The expressions upon every side were those of commiseration and of sympathy for a firm that has always so highly maintained its credit, and which will raise up from this temporary prostration stronger than ever.

Many reporters tried to gain admittance, and but few were fortunate. The reporter of the Evening Telegraph was the first to enter, and I followed shortly afterward. The banking room was darkened; the clerks were scattered through the building, some in groups, chatting about the disaster, and others as busily engaged at their books as upon ordinary occasions.

We found Mr. Cooke in his private office calmly dispatching his orders, and unexcitedly conversing about the sudden and unexpected blow that had befallen him. He pleasantly welcomed whoever called upon him to express sympathy and confidence. He said: "You can announce that the firm has temporarily suspended. Please state also that I believe this house will speedily be relieved from embarrassment, and that to this end, if needs be, every dollar of the means possessed by the members of the firm will be applied. No one who has a dollar on deposit here will lose it. Every liability will be faithfully discharged. I can say no more now."

Mr. Cooke then directed notices of the temporary suspension, as couched above, to be sent abroad; and stated that this event closed the doors of three offices—the three leading houses of the firm in Washington, New York, and this city. Then, with his brother members, he commenced an investigation to ascertain the exact financial standing of the firm. The temporary suspension of the American house does not effect in any way the London house of Jay Cooke, McCullough & Co., from whom this afternoon came the following cablegram. Its statement, when made known to the public, created the liveliest satisfaction.

"London, Sept. 18.—The London firm of Cooke responds to his suspension by stating that all drafts and letters of credit on them, issued by Jay Cooke & Co., will be duly honored."

New York, Sept. 19.—The liabilities of Jay Cooke & Co. are estimated all the way from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000.

The Panic in New York.

As a natural consequence of the failure of the great banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co., a stock panic broke out in New York, and within twenty-four hours after the collapse of Cooke & Co. nineteen failures were announced among railway operators in that city. Only one of them, that of Fisk & Hatch, is really important, and it is said their suspension is only temporary. Their failure is attributed to large advances to the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad. There were nine failures in Philadelphia on the day following the suspension of Cooke. The excitement in that city was even greater than in New York, and there was a great run on the savings banks, all of which stood firm.

Gen. Grant hastened to the capital, and, after a conference with Secretary Richardson, at once determined that the Secretary of the Treasury should come to the rescue of the New York market. Accordingly, at midnight of Friday, the 19th, the Secretary sent a message to the Sub-Treasurer at New York, directing him to purchase $10,000,000 immediately. By this action over $10,000,000 was thrown upon the market, which, it is thought, will give relief and avert a general financial crash. The press, as a general thing, take a hopeful view of the situation, which has gone a long way in allaying the public excitement and averting a universal panic. The New York Express of the 19th says:

"The day closes on the whole with fewer killed and wounded than might be expected, all things considered. No trust company has suspended; no bank has refused payment; all the great railway corporations are apparently as firm as a rock. Rumor, however, is not yet satisfied, and warns everybody to beware of rumor. Stock values have shrunk enormously, but when the bottom is fairly touched, a rebound, as usual, is inevitable. Business in nearly all branches of produce is at a standstill, and in fact, almost bordering on general demoralization."

Among the New York failures was E. P. Randolph, a son-in-law and the New York banker of Tom Scott, the railroad king.

It is stated that the National Life Insurance Company will not be affected by the failure of Jay Cooke.

A Washington dispatch says: "The head of one of the most important Bureaus in the Treasury says the Government will not likely lose anything directly by the failures, or financial panic, but may suffer to some extent in consequence of the diminution of revenue that will doubtless follow."

E. C. Steadman, the poet, and for several years a Wall street operator, takes an interesting view of the panic. The following statement of his views on the financial situation is telegraphed from New York: "The present trouble dates back to the time when Secretary Boutwell tried to fund his loan from 6 per cent. to 5 per cent., which was in 1871. Prudent men said it could not be successfully done, and they were right. Boutwell kept money easy for five or six months, in order to get people to take his loan; but instead of funding his own loan to any extent, he enabled small houses to float private loans, and enabled large houses to expand. We should have been back to specie payments but for these railroad bond speculators. There has been a great Western railway expansion, and the bubble has finally burst, as it was bound to do sooner or later. We have known that the crash was impending, but did not expect it this fall. There is no true reason why the trouble should extend to the mercantile world; it can do so only through a sympathetic process. The losses will fall chiefly on speculating firms, who have for years been doing everything to retard resumption. If the Government will sit still and let them fall, then we shall be a long way advanced toward specie payment. The break hast not surprised anyone who knew how business was transacted. Brokers have been able to buy bonds of new roads at 5 or 10 per cent. less than the advertised rates at which they were furnished to private persons purchasing for investment. This was the case with Jay Cooke as regards the bonds of the Northern Pacific, the Oswego and Midland, and most of other railway loans. It was not so with Fisk & Hatch's roads. Their bonds were good, and they believed in them. This panic is peculiar. It is different from any that has occurred since 1857. That was caused by undue mercantile expansion, and this by railroad expansion. One thing is certain, it has cured the disease. there will be no more lending of large amounts on large railway enterprises. When the wreck is cleared away, there will be a healthier condition of things than there has been."

The Result of President Grant's Visit to New York.

A New York dispatch of the 22d says: "President Grant, Secretary Richardson, and Gen. Babcock were in consultation in New York yesterday with the leading banks and business men of the city to devise some means of relieving the financial condition. The propositions of the New Yorkers, which were submitted in writing to the President, all urged very strongly the issuing of the so-called green-back reserve to the amount of forty millions of dollars. Reverdy Johnson reinforced their appeals by a written opinion, in which he said that, although the action proposed was unconstitutional, it was demanded by public policy, and if he were President he would not hesitate to take the step. Secretary Richardson's opposition to this movement was very strong, and the President stoutly supported him. The Secretary said, in very vigorous slang, that he would never consent to it, as it was none of his funeral. The result of the conference was an order from the President that the Assistant Treasurer at New York buy bonds on Monday to any amount offered. How much relief this will afford does not appear. Government bonds were a drug in the market on Saturday; the National Trust Company, which had nearly a million of them in its possession, being unable to raise a dollar therewith to save itself from suspension."

Subsidence of the Panic in New York.

New York, Sept. 22.—Wall street to-day presented a most extraordinary spectacle. It would be difficult, in the necessarily brief limits of a newspaper report, to give a correct idea of the excitement which prevailed. But the excitement to-day was, apparently, of an entirely different kind to the intense anxiety observable on Friday and on Saturday, which had its origin in a condition of universal panic. The streets, that is to say, Wall street and Broad street, were crowded.

It was difficult for a pedestrian to thread his way through the different groups which occupied the streets and sidewalks alike.

Confidence increased as the day advanced, and about 2 o'clock, there was a sudden shrinkage of the lines at paying tellers' windows at the banks and banking houses. The heavy business done all day had been dispatched with all possible speed, and as soon as it was known among the merchants that the purchase of bonds was uninterrupted, and that the rule adopted by the savings banks, of requiring thirty days' notice for the withdrawal of all large sums, was accepted without any disturbance at the savings banks, the certification of money checks was not pressed, and it was evident at the banks that the depositors were beginning to believe that the storm had passed.

No embarrassments are expected in any of the private banking firms who have sustained themselves through the late crisis. The suspension of the Union Trust Company is generally attributed to the defaulting Secretary's neglect to call in the $3,000,000 loans ordered on Thursday. According to general report, he completely lost his mental balance, and showed no disposition to submit the affairs of the company to inspection. His whereabouts are still unknown. It is currently reported that the company will be ready to resume business in a few days. It is a little remarkable that only one of the trustees of the company had any money on deposit in the institution, and that, with the exception of two or three, owned but very little stock. This may account for the bad management of the concern.

Messrs. Jay Cooke & Co. are out with a statement giving names of banks and banking houses who will pay drafts of their correspondents. All drafts against deposits made since the suspension will be paid on presentation.

The National Trust Company, which suspended payment on Saturday, state that their liabilities do not exceed $4,000,000, and that the capital and assets of the company exceed their liabilities.

The day closes with confidence greatly improved, with a general opinion that the crisis is entirely over. There seems to be no reason why all the banks should not now go along in a quiet and regular manner.

A dispatch from Philadelphia announces a subsidence of the excitement in that city. The State Bank has resumed payment.

Washington, Sept. 22.—Judge Richardson said this evening that he believed the storm was over, and that quiet and good order would soon be restored in financial and business circles.

The President decided to-day to send $20,000,000 from the National Treasury here to Assistant Treasurer Hillhouse in New York to-night, to enable that officer to buy all bonds that may be offered.

A dispatch from Pittsburgh announces the failure of James T. Brady & Co. and the Security Trust Company.

It is stated that the Canada Southern Railway Company is seriously crippled by the panic.

A Renewal of the Panic in Wall Street —Failure of Henry Clews & Co.

New York, Sept. 23.—Wall street was quiet this morning, but it was the calm that invariable precedes a storm. There was no crowd in the street, no noise, none of the confusion which has served, in the two or three days past, to accelerate and increase the panic; but, underneath this apparent security, there was lurking a great danger, which may yet precipitate universal disaster. Men went to bed last night confident that the worst was over; they rose this morning confident in their security. The latest foreign advices helped to increase this confidence, for they spoke of no failures, though some distrust, and an easy market. All rejoiced to know that the London market was firmer, American securities undamaged, and that, while dealings on the Paris and Frankfort bourses were limited, rates were encouraging.

Stock quotations in the street were better in every instance than they had been on the close of Saturday's operations on the Exchange.

Savings banks officials were in good spirits, and few runs were reported.

In the Gold Room the price of gold was placed at 112, a rate much lower than was expected to be established, and settlements were easy.

Stock brokers were much relieved by Jay Gould's settlement, through his brokers, of 5,000 shares of stock at reasonable rates, which bankrupted nobody and relieved everybody.

But, while there was all this cheerful outside appearance of the crisis which had seemed to be impending, and encouraged people to hope that the panic was over, there were events occurring that showed how futile was the wish. Early in the morning, reports of the suspension of banks began to come in from all parts of the country. This news did not reach the general public until the afternoon, but the bankers and brokers were early advised of and warned by it.

It is known that every country bank with a balance to its credit in New York made drafts for it, so that the total aggregate country demand was $200,000,000. Such a demand was unprecedented, and not to be met. Upon many bankers the run was instantly and secretly begun.

The crowds in the street were doing nothing to avert the impending disaster, saying nothing of that which was undermining and destroying many of the largest and best-known banks in the city.

Toward noon it became whispered that a run was being made upon Henry Clews & Co. It is asserted that Clews paid out during the morning nearly $1,000,000 on demand, and then went about the "street" with mercantile paper endeavoring to raise more funds. But no man knows how his fellow-merchant stands, and the offer to pay 2 per cent. a day —730 per cent. a year—for loans upon good mercantile paper were laughed at. Clews could realize nothing on doubtful railway securities which he held, nor anything upon worthless Georgia bonds, which he has led others into taking, and for which he was stuck about $1,000,000. He failed in every legitimate effort to raise money, and, being without hope of further aid from the Government, he closed his doors at half-past 2 o'clock.

The fact of the suspension created as much excitement as the suspension of Jay Cooke & Co. The news left the street, at the close of business, in a condition of great excitement, and the headway made in restoring confidence was in a great measure lost.

The run on the savings banks continued today, but as most of them adopted the time rule for paying depositors, the excitement soon subsided.

There is endless confusion, wild speculation, absurd proposals, loud threatenings, ominous prophecies. These indicate the clamor at the Fifth Avenue Hotel this evening, where the whole city seems congregated in condensed, compressed, confused agitation. The prospects for the morning are gloomy enough. There is depression everywhere; and yet it cannot be said that the actual financial situation in New York warrants this depression of the public.

After the failure of Clews was announced, the city was flooded with a great many rumors, involving the credit of such men as Opdyke, Vermilye, Howe, and Macy, and others who are believed to be substantial and sound.

THE SITUATION IN PHILADELPHIA.

Philadelphia, Sept. 23.—The financial crisis here is over, and bankers and brokers are transacting business as usual. All the State banks that were under temporary difficulties have resumed, except the Union and Citizens'. The latter will soon resume. All the National Banks stood firm, and no doubts were entertained of their stability.

Neither Jay Cooke & Co. nor De Haven & Bro. have as yet issued any statement of their affairs. The invariable reply to inquiries as to the probable date of such issue is, "We cannot say; our clerks are busily engaged on it." Some few unfeeling persons are parading around caricatures of Jay Cooke after his failure, representing him with head cast down, knees almost drawn up to his chin, and seated on an old box, in evidently a very abject state.

Subsidence of the Storm.

New York, Sept. 24.—The depression which settled down on the city last evening continued this morning at the opening of business. It was generally recognized that the depression was unwarranted, and that the excitement consequent on the failure of so prominent a house as that of Henry Clews & Co. had caused the actual disasters to be exaggerated and augmented, and the panic unnecessarily superficial; and panic-stricken brokers had gone to bed demoralized, while substantial and conservative financiers had retired serious and a little apprehensive, but still strong in the belief that the panic was practically ended, and that the banks could sustain themselves. Both parties rose in the same humor, and, with the same impulse guiding both, they crowded into Wall street at an early hour this morning—the first, excited and noisy; the second, serious and disposed to be gruff.

The crowd on the street was not so large as on previous days, but it was more impressive. In front of the Stock Exchange in Broad street, there was gathered, earliest of all, a large group of brokers, who discussed the probabilities of a reopening of the Exchange. Finally, when it was announced that the Stock Exchange would not open during the day, the group of regular brokers gave way to an equally large gathering of operators, who, by their loud vociferations and gesticulations, made the street more hideous than their predecessors had done.

The first startling event of the morning was the announcement that Howes & Macy, probably as strong a firm of private bankers as there is in the city, had declined to open their doors. Instantly it was interpreted as a failure. It was hours before it became understood that these bankers had taken this step as a precautionary measure, believing that, in the excited state of the market and general inability to realize on a particular class of securities, they must eventually run short of greenbacks. There had been, on Tuesday, an indication of a panicky run on this house, consequent on the fact that it is in the same building with Clews & Co., who had just failed. Of course the suspension to-day had a very depressing effect, but it was nothing like that which ensued yesterday on the closing of Clews & Co.

It started a run on Vermilye & Co., renewed that on George Opdyke & Co., and there was a shower of depositors clamorous for their money at the windows of Belmont & Co., but none of these houses showed the slightest indications of weakness. Howes & Macy's failure, if indeed it may be called so, is not looked upon as serious. The chief fear is that the temporary suspensian will affect the company's correspondents in other cities, and so help to keep up the excitement which all are anxious to allay.

Upon the heels of this suspension came the news that Clews & Co. had swamped their London house of Clews, Habicht & Co.

The over-drafts on the London house are estimated at $1,200,000, or about the amount which Clews & Co. paid out previous to their suspension. The information to-day leads to the supposition that Clews & Co.'s failure is complete—certainly as complete as that of Jay Cooke & Co. Howes & Macy may resume shortly, when matters are quieted down, but few hope for such good luck for Clews & Co. Southern securities and railway bonds have finally been their ruin.

The next event to influence the street was the announcement that resolutions had been passed by the Clearing-House Committee representing the various banks. The first resolution, issuing an additional $10,000,000 for loan certificates, had been undisputed, and caused good feeling, and was encouraging. This proposition to obtain $10,000,000 of Government bonds, to be sold to the Treasury by the banks, was also accepted as an indication that the banks were laboring wisely and well; but the last proposition, resolving that banks should not cash heavy checks for currency, but should certify such checks as good only when passed through the Clearing-House, was at once translated to be a practical suspension of the banks of the Clearing-House Association. There was a good deal of feeling on the announcement of the adoption of this resolution. But the discussions which followed have proved that the resolution was a wise provision. In the first place, it prevents panic-stricken depositors from drawing out their money and hoarding it, thus taking greenbacks out of the street and from business. In the next place it facilitates business by making more liberal the certification of checks through the banks, thus balancing accounts without the employment of much money. The savings banks have been perfectly quiet. In fact there has been no time during the panic when the officers of these institutions were doubtful of their ability to meet all demands made upon them, and the confidence of depositors has been most remarkably displayed. The panic has not apparently seriously affected mercantile houses and the principal trades. The principal dry goods men report no lack of confidence among buyers, no marked decline in prices, and little excessive apprehension for the future.

The reports from Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, St. Louis, Richmond, New Orleans and Hartford are very encouraging. It is believed the worst has passed.

The Chicago Banks Determine to Suspend.

Chicago, Sept. 25.—At a meeting of the officers of the different banks connected with the Clearing-House Association, held on last evening, it was resolved to suspend payment.

The meeting had been called after informal consultations between the Bank Presidents during the day, in which the situation of affairs was discussed and various expedients suggested for pulling through the crisis. It was thought by some of the bankers that the issuing, by the Clearing-House, of loan certificates on the plan now in use in New York would be an adequate relief, for the present at least. The majority, however, thought that all hope of receiving currency from the East was now gone, and as the currency balances were daily growing smaller, it was hazardous to continue business. The meeting in the evening commenced at 8 o'clock and did not adjourn until after 1. The discussion on the resolution to suspend was earnest and protracted. The leading financiers of the Northwest took part in it, and although it was stoutly opposed by some, it was finally carried This action has been taken after the banks have made a heroic fight. There is no cause for alarm on account of it. The banks have ample securities, and eventually no losses will be sustained by their depositors.

Jay Cooke and the Freedmen's Banks.

The Bankers' Almanac for 1873 gives in its list of banks and bankers of the United States at the close of 1872 the name of the New York correspondent of each banking institution. Conspicuous among those institutions, of which Jay Cooke & Co. were the New York correspondents, are the Freedmen's Saving and Trust Companies, organized all through the late slaveholding States. This class of institutions seem to have done business almost exclusively with Jay Cooke & Co. In the list we find the following:

Freedmen's Saving and Trust Bank of the District of Columbia. Same banks at Huntsville, Mobile and Montgomery, Ala. Freedmen's S. and T. Bank, Little Rock, Ark. The Freedmen's S. and T. Banks at Atlanta, Augusta, Macon and Savannah, Ga. The Freedmen's S. and T. Banks at Lexington and Louisville, Ky. The F. S. and T. Bank at New Orleans, La. The F. S. and T. Bank at Baltimore, Md. The F. S. and T. Banks at Columbus, Natchez and Vicksburg, Miss. The F. S. and T. Bank at St. Louis, Mo. The F. S. and T. Bank at Philadelphia. The F. S. and T. Banks at Beaufort and Charleston, S. C. The F. S. and T. Banks at Chattanooga, Memphis and Nashville, Tenn. The F. S. and T. Banks at Norfolk and Richmond, Va., and at Martinsburg, W. Va. In all, twenty-six of the savings banks established among the freedmen. This list was up to the close of 1872, and since then some of the institutions may have changed their correspondents, but the probability is that the freedmen are out of pocket considerably by the failure of Jay Cooke & Co.

The Brooklyn Frauds.

Rodman, the Treasurer of the Brooklyn Trust Company, and Assistant City Treasurer of Brooklyn, has at last made the revelation he threatened some time ago concerning the deficit in the Brooklyn Treasury. He states that there was an agreement between himself, City Treasurer Sprague, and the late President Mills, by which they were to loan out the city funds that were on deposit with the Trust Company, and divide among themselves all the profits that accrued beyond the 3 per cent. which had to be credited to the city. As might be expected, their anxiety for high interest overwhelmed their prudence, and a large number of the loans were made to worthless borrowers. In this way the Trust Company was bankrupted and the City Treasury depleted. Treasurer Sprague, Rodman says, repeatedly offered him $50,000 to run away, but he declined. Sprague is lying dangerously ill at his house, but is guarded by policemen as a precaution against a too precipitate convalescence.

Toad, Worm, Bee and Fly Stories.

Dr. Thomas Hill, a scientist, at the recent convention of the Society for the Advancement of Science, at Portland, made the following statement:

In the summers of 1843–5 an old toad used to sit under the door of a bee-hive every fine evening and dextrously pick up those bees who were laden, or tired, or missed the doorstep and dropped to the ground.

When our toad gets into his mouth part of an insect too large for his tongue to thrust down his throat (and I have known of their attempting a wounded humming bird), he resorts to the nearest stone or clod and presses the protruding part of his mouthful against it and thus crowds it down its throat. This can be observed at any time by tying a locust's hind legs together and throwing it before a toad. On one occasion I gave a "yellow striped" locust to a little toad in its second summer, when he was in the middle of a very wide gravel walk. In a moment he had the locust's head down his throat, its hinder parts protruding, and looking around for a stone or clod, but finding none at hand in either direction, he bowed his head and crept along, pushing the locust against the ground. But the angle with the ground was too small and my walk too well rolled. To increase the angle he straightened his hind legs up, but in vain. At length he threw up his hind quarters, and actually stood on his head, or rather on the locust sticking out of his mouth, and after repeating this once or twice, succeeded in "getting himself outside of his dinner."

I was tossing a four-year-old toad (at Antioch College) earthworms, while digging, and presently threw him so large a specimen that he was obliged to attack one end only. That end was instantly transferred to his stomach, the other end writhing free in air and coiled about the toad's head. He waited until his writhings gave him a chance, swallowed half an inch, then taking a nip with his jaws, waited for a chance to draw in another half inch. But there were so many half inches to dispose of that at length his jaws grew tired, lost their firmness of grip, and the worm crawled out five-eighths of an inch between each half-inch swallowing. The toad, perceiving this, brought his right hand to aid his jaws, grasping his abdomen with his foot, and by a little effort, getting hold of the worm in his stomach from the outside, he thus by his foot held fast to what he gained by each swallow, and presently succeeded in getting the worm entirely down.

A garter-snake was observed this summer in North Conway, pushing a toad down his throat by running it aginst the clods and stones, just as the toad crowds down a locust.

The amount which a toad can eat is surprising. On Tuesday I threw a squash-bug to a young toad. He snapped it up, but immediately rejected it, wiped his mouth with great energy, and then hopped away with extraordinary rapidity. I was so much amused that I gathered some more of the sow-bugs and carried them to a favorite old toad at the northeast corner of the house. He eat them all without any wry face. I gathered all that I could find on my vines, and he eat them all to the number of twenty-three. I then brought him some larvæ of pygaera menistra, three-quarters grown, and succeeded in enticing him to put ninety-four on the top of his squash-bugs. Finding that his virtue was not proof against the carterpillars when I put them on the end of a straw and tickled his nose with them, he at length turned and crept under the piazza, where he remained until Friday, digesting his feast.

This, like the paper on snakes, brought several members to their feet, but the climax was finally capped by a man who had seen a toad swallow with relish 713 house flies.

The Unwritten Side of Great Men.

We always think of great men as in the act of performing the deeds which give them renown, or else in stately repose, grand, gloomy and majestic. And yet this is hardly fair, because even the most gorgeous and magnificent of human beings have to bother themselves with the little things of life which engage the attention of us smaller people. No doubt Moses suffered and got angry when he had a severe cold in his head, and if a fly bit his leg while he was sitting in the desert, why should we suppose he did not jump and use violent language and rub the sore place? And Cæsar—isn't it tolerably certain that he used to become furious when he went up stairs to get his slippers in the dark and found that Caliphurnia had shoved them back under the bed so that he had to sweep around wildly for them with the broom-handle? And when Solomon cracked his crazy-bone, it is unreasonable to suppose that he hopped around and looked mad, and felt as if he wanted to cry? Imagine George Washington sitting on the edge of the bed putting on a clean shirt, and growling at Martha because the buttons were off; or St. Augustine with an apron around his neck having his hair cut; or Joan of Arc holding her front hair in her mouth, as women do, while she fixed up her back hair; or Napoleon jumping out of bed in a frenzy to chase a mosquito around the room with a pillow; or Martin Luther in a night-shirt trying to put the baby to sleep at two o'clock in the morning; or Alexander the Great with the hiccups; or Thomas Jefferson getting suddenly over a fence to avoid a dog; or the Duke of Wellington lying in bed with the mumps; or Daniel Webster abusing his wife because she hadn't tucked the covers in at the foot of the bed; or Benjamin Franklin paring his corn with a razor; or Jonathan Edwards at the dinner-table wanting to sneeze just as he gets his mouth full of hot beef; or Noah standing at his window at night throwing bricks at a cat.—Max Adeler.

Brown-tinted note-paper is now the fashion in London. The note sheet is cut in legal shape, and turns at the top instead of at the side. The novelty will soon be the rage here.

Postal-Card Progress.

Postal cards are still so much of a novelty here that it may be interesting to learn something of the growth of the system. They were first introduced in England in 1870, at the price of a cent apiece, and the circulation is nearly 2,000,000 a week, with a steady increase both in letters and postal cards. In Germany, postal cards were introduced July 1, 1870, and were mainly popularized by their use during the war with France; at first they cost about two cents, but after July 1, 1872, this was reduced to one cent, leaving letters at the old rate, with a prodigious increase in the numbers carried and in the revenue from the postoffice. A reform introduced in Germany has been adopted in Holland, Belgium and Switzerland; that is, adding to the ordinary postal card another, to be used in returning an answer, prepaid by the original writer. Postal cards were introduced into Switzerland in October, 1870, at a cent, with a great increase in the ordinary letters alongside of this new source of revenue. In Switzerland postal cards are largely used in official communications, a reform that might be very profitably applied in this country, where the Government is put to an enormous expense in postage for sending the most formal orders and reports, all of which would be the better for being reduced, like telegraphic messages, to the briefest limit.

Belgium got its postal cards in 1871, in a sort of preliminary experiment, which was soon found to be successful, with a penny postage, and now the double postal card, that is, the prepaid one to be returned with the answer on on it, is largely used, with the double rate, of course. Holland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, all have the same system. In Russia local cards cost two cents, those for general use about four cents. In Austria the postoffice claims to have introduced postal cards in 1869, and even now makes them at a much less price than other countries. In France postal cards were only introduced by a law passed in December of 1872, and then at a rate proportioned to the high postage always in fashion there. In Spain and Greece and Portugal postal cards have been introduced, and in Italy they were delayed only until the question of price could be settled—the Executive wanted it fixed at two cents, and Congress at one cent. Even in Turkey some effort has been made to introduce this last reform, and now that the United States has got it, carrying it across the American continent, it ought to be extended across the ocean, so that the dream of cheap postage around the world may at last be realized.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Perils of Ballooning.

A large balloon was started some days ago from a pleasure garden in San Francisco, an acrobat named Buislay performing various feats on a trapeze suspended where the car usually hangs. As the balloon rose, and was passing away from the garden, a gust of wind drove it on a tall pole, the sharp point of which tore out a large strip of the silk, making an opening three feet across. The rest is thus described by the local papers: "Notwithstanding this huge opening the balloon continued to ascend, and must have remained up at least ten minutes. The aeronaut, nothing daunted by the disaster, went through all his perilous performances on the light trapeze. The balloon now began to drift rapidly toward the bay, slowly falling as it was driven on by the wind. Buislay's position then became perilous in the extreme. The wind was pretty strong, and the large inflated mass was wholly uncontrolable, swaying in every direction and swinging the gymnast about in a manner that was fearful to witness. Ever falling lower and lower, the balloon rapidly approached the extremity of Long Bridge. Here the situation of the man became fearfully desperate; the balloon would evidently dash the trapeze and its human freight against the high poles or the telegraph wires that were strung to them. There was but one chance of escape. Taking one glance at his position, Buislay flung himself from the short bar of the trapeze into the waters of the bay, a distance but little less than forty feet. Accoutred as he was, in his gymnastic dress, his movements were unimpeded, and after a short struggle he reached the mud-flats, and at last succeeded in reaching the shore, though in an exhausted condition. The balloon meanwhile had struck, tearing down several poles and twisting up the telegraph wires generally. It finally caught on some loose piles a short distance off, and anchored on the mud-flat."

Harness Reform.

There seems to be a general desire to put down all unnecessary cruelty to animals. Taking advantage of this commendable feeling, I should like to appeal to the public on behalf of the abolition of blinkers and cruppers—two useless pieces of harness—which I think can be easily shown to be both painful and inconvenient to horses. The Midland Railway Company, probably one of the largest employers of horses in the Kingdom, has for some time entirely dispensed with the use of blinkers; and cruppers, I am glad to see, are gradually going out of fashion, particularly with draught horses. The crupper frets and irritates an animal, and harness-makers tell me there would be no mechanical difficulty in contriving a substitute for it. A horse's eye is a most beautiful feature, full of tenderness, fidelity and intelligence. With the free use of its eyes the animal can readily interpret the wish of its driver, and make the frequent use of the whip unnecessary. Blinkers often tease and distress an animal for a long time before it gets habituated to their use; for the eye looks sideways rather than forwards, and the effect of the blinker is to force the eye out of its natural position.—Letter in Public Opinion.

Emigration.—A Washington dispatch says: "Persons who are interested in the new American transatlantic steamship line will ask Congress to grant a bounty of $10 per head for every emigrant who is brought to this country in steam vessels built in the United States, and carrying the American flag. It will be claimed that a subsidy in this form will secure much more valuable results to the Government than a subsidy as now voted."

Humors of the Yellow Fever Epidemic.

What can we say of a humor that stalks amid pestilence—of a levity that feeds upon calamity! The Shreveport (La.) Times relates, with every appearance of enjoyment, a series of anecdotes founded on the yellow fever at that place, at the same time stating, in mitigation, that the ravages of the disease have been greatly exaggerated. It says a citizen visited Dallas, Texas, and registered at a hotel as from Shreveport. No sooner had he done so than a man looked at the book, then at him, stealthily made as wide a circuit around him as the wall would permit, and, reaching the door, sprang with the agility of a cat into the street. This person told somebody there was a man at the hotel from Shreveport, and the somebody's hair rose straight up on his head, and he went running down the street; at the next corner he told another somebody there was a sick man from Shreveport at the hotel; at the next corner it was reported there was a man from Shreveport at the hotel with black vomit; then news spread that there was one Shreveport man at the hotel dead, and two others with yellow fever; and, finally, the city was thrown into consternation by the intelligence that there were three men from Shreveport at the hotel dead as herrings, and ten others sick of the yellow fever. The hotel was virtually abandoned, and the Shreveport man had all the room and as many beds as he wanted. The next day the excitement reached a climax. A body of policemen and citizens built a huge fire on the railway track and awaited ferociously the approach of the train from the plague-smitten city. As the train stopped the citizens flourished their six-shooters and mildly but determinedly informed the engineer and condutor that it should approach no nearer Dallas, and remonstrance was in vain until the mail agent, minion of a despotic Government, said something about $500 fines, when the death-spreading messenger was permitted to continue its journey. It is evident from this that Dallas is possessed of resolute citizens—men who mean business every time—men who will not be trifled with, even by Yellow Jack.

Deep-Sea Discoveries.

One of the discoveries made by the deep-sea soundings of the Challenge expedition, which arrived recently at Bermuda from the Azores, is a mountain ridge that extends from Greenland to the mouth of the Amazon, on the coast of South America, and includes the whole volcanic region of the Azores. This ridge is nowhere more than two miles below the ocean level. Toward the east it is divided between Europe and Africa by an immense valley from two and a half to three miles in depth. The valley reaches north of the equator as far as the fifty-second degree of latitude. If this valley were not under water, it would present a view of whose magnificence no conception can be formed, for in the north it extends to the gigantic mountains of Cape Verde and the Canary Islands, the latter of which, with the peak of Teneriffe, would be 26,000 feet in height. Madeira would command, from a height of $20,000 feet, a view of this valley and another stretching toward the Mediterranean. On the western side of the ridge is a vast undulating plain, which extends at an average depth of two and three-quarter miles to the American coast. Bermuda, which rises now only 200 feet above the ocean level, is in fact an isolated column 15,000 feet high, which would overlook an amphitheater of at least 500 miles in radius. Between the West Indies and America, and in the vicinity of the Azores, the water is of uniform depth and warmth. There was not much animal life found in the great depths. The blind crustacea appear to belong to the Western hemisphere; in this part these animals require many eyes. A sea-garnel was caught which, strange to relate, had four eyes, two of which were in the front knee joints.

Proficient Pistolers.

According to a St. Louis Democrat correspondent, the bandits who robbed the Iowa railroad train are still in Southwest Missouri. Having lived in the neighborhood of their present lurking place all their lives, says the correspondent, "they are of course thoroughly familiar with it and its inhabitants, about two-thirds of whom are friendly to them. The country is very hilly, and affords any number of secure hiding places, which they will not be slow to avail themselves of when the pursuit becomes too hot. The opinion is that their capture is impossible while they remain in the vicinity, and every one laughs at the idea of any one having been foolish enough to suppose that they have left the section of country with which they are so familiar. Many seemingly exaggerated stories are told of the proficiency of the gang in the use of their pistols. A fence-rail was torn down and planted, end up, on the road near the bank of the Osage, and one of the Youngers mounted his horse and rode away from it at full speed, discharging six shots from his derringer, over his shoulder, every one of which struck the mark. Dismounting, he recharged his pistol, and, borrowing his brother's, took one in each hand. Two apples were thrown in the air at the same time, and before they fell to the ground each one of them was split in two by a separate shot from each revolver. If these stories are true, it is scarcely to be wondered at that the numerous detectives who are said to be on the trail fight shy of the Missouri bandits."

The Sickness and Death of Capt. Hall.

A New York Herald correspondent interviewed Dr. Bissell, the surgeon of the Hall Arctic exploring expedstion, on the arrival of the Buddington party at Dundee, Scotland. In relation to the sickness and death of the chief of the expidition, Dr. Bissell said:

"Since arriving here we find by American papers that several very silly and absuad rumors of a mischievous tendency have been abroad. It is quite possible that the Government at Washington prefers that we reserve what we have to say for graver discussion, but I must emphatically contradict the statement that Capt. Hall died other than a natural death. He died of apoplexy. He appeared to be in perfect health when entering upon the voyage. I noticed nothing unusual in his health up to the period of his illness. The rumor that he was poisoned is too absurd to be seriously entertained. The rumor may have been founded on the hallucination of the raving patient.

The Herald correspondent adds: Schumann, the engineer, says that Hall was in continual apprehension of being shot, but was not aware that any one member of the crew more than another excited his suspicions. Another phase of his mania was a determination not to eat or drink anything unless it was first tasted by some person. The tasting was mainly done by Hannah, the Esquimaux woman. When he rallied, and for a while recovered his wonted intellect, he would say to Capt. Buddington, "If I die, you must still go on to the North Pole." He would say, "My last wish is that you strive to get to the North Pole. Don't let my death be a hindrance to the accomplishment of this great undertaking."

THE ANTI-MONOPOLY MOVEMENT.

How Producers and Consumers Are Oppressed by the Railroads—Speech of Col. Richard P. Morgan, Jr., Delivered at Saybrook, Ill., Sept. 17.

* * * * * *

It is evident that the work we are entering upon is of no small magnitude, and to make it successful will require time, persistence, and wisdom.

Let no man who puts his hand to this plow look back. To adopt the language of the New York Times, "An earnest movement of political reform will always have to encounter numerous enemies. It aims at abolishing certain things which many people are deeply interested in preserving. It has little to offer, for one of its objects is to secure economy and efficiency. It cannot fill public offices with unfit persons, because that is one of the evils it sets out to correct. It cannot give bribes, because it undertakes to preserve the public treasury from robbery.

There will, then, from the very outset, be a strong phalanx arrayed against it. Even if partial victory is secured, there will too often be more complaining than rejoicing. The friends of the dishonest factions will declare that the new officials are not equal to the old. Very likely the reformers themselves will make some mistakes, especially in the course of a long and difficult contest. Then a great chuckle will be raised over them, and the friends of the outs will remind you that they always told you how it would be, and ask you "What you think of reform now?" All these and other difficulties will be promoted to an unusual degree by the subtle and far-reaching money-power we are contending with.

Such being the work to be done, such the enemies to encounter, such the evils to be destroyed, it is evident the contest will be a long and arduous one.

Let no man flatter himself with the hope of sudden victory. The changes to be made are in themselves great, and true statesmanship requires that in some respects they should be gradual; but the interests involved are so vital, and the benefits to be gained so great, as to give the highest encouragement to all those who are honestly seeking to bring about these great and much-needed reforms.

It must also be borne in mind that the proposed reforms appeal directly to the whole people of the country, to all classes, excepting only the monpolists and their sleuth-hounds, the corrupt politicians; and that, therefore, the people, enlightened by honorable and truthful discussion, will see to it that the work is thoroughly done.

Are you, my fellow-citizens, willing to enlist for the war? Will you exhibit to these corrupt men who have brought us to this strait, and to the world, the power of the just indignation of the people?

The number and variety of topics pressing upon our attention, and the intricacy of the questions involved in the proper consideration of most of them, make it impossible to discuss them satisfactorily within the limits of such an address as this.

Inasmuch as the attention of yourselves and the people of this portion of the State was next directed to a consideration of the relations of the railroads to the public, and the method by which the State could properly regulate the charges on railroads, so as to prevent unjust discrimination and extortion for transporting persons and property, I shall confine what I have further to say to you to this topic.

The value to the people of this State, and the country at large, of railroads honestly constructed and operated as promoting the general welfare, no one now seeks to question. Nor is it believed to be true that the real interests of the people and of railroads are in anywise in conflict. No just-minded man desires that capital actually and properly expended in the construction of railroads should fail to return to the owners thereof a just and reasonable interest upon such investment, over and above the proper expenses in maintaining and operating them. But the people have been, and now are, subjected to a double burden by nearly all the railroads.

One of these grows out of the fact that the nominal cost of the roads is very largely in excess of their actual cost; and this is true, although that cost is estimated upon the basis of actual cash subscriptions to stock and the proceeds of mortgage-bonds sold at considerable discount. In addition to this, stocks have been issued by way of dividends, and to "capitalize earnings," as it is styled by railroad managers. This, in brief, means that those railroad companies which have made earnings great enough to enable the payment of maintenance and operating expenses, interest on their bonded debts, and to pay dividends on their stock, and also construct branch lines, and make improvements in the capacity of their roads—which latter items alike belong to construction, must have charged unreasonable rates to have accomplished so much.

It is admitted that, by the common law underlying such privileges as could be constitutionally granted to the railroad corporations of the country, the charges of a common carrier must be reasonable, and without unjust discrimination; therefore, every dollar expended by the railroad companies of the United States out of their earnings upon the construction—after paying maintenance and operating expenses, and reasonable interest on the actual capital invested, has been taken secretly and fraudulently from the people.

These accretions of value to the roads, in their increased capacity, after an accummulation of years, have been adroitly thrown into the pockets of the stockholders by an issue of stock to represent the value thus secretly accumulated from excessive earnings, the result of unreasonable and excessive rates.

The New York Central railroad has more than $100,000 per mile of this secretly-extorted money now embraced in its represented capital.

Various methods of erecting fictitious capital into the attitude of actual money expended are employed, but always with the same result so far as the people are concerned; and also mortgage bonds have been, and are being, fraudulently disposed of.

In this way, the sum upon which earnings are now to be made, and interest and dividends paid, is very largely exaggerated above the true cost of the roads. It is impossible to state with accuracy, from any statistics before the public, what the amount of such excess is; but it is believed by those most competent to judge, that, on the railroads in this State, the amount is not less than eighty millions of dollars.

Can we realize the magnitude of this enormous sum? Let us put it in form so as to enable ourselves to do so in some degree. For easy computation, we will say there are 100 counties in Illinois. If each county embraces an average of 15 townships, 6 miles square, it would give in all the State 1,500 townships, which is probably very near the truth. Eighty millions of dollars divided by 1,500 makes the average amount of fictitious debt for each township equal $53,333—enough to build and complete 53 comfortable farm-houses in every township in the State, and, in the whole State, 80,000 houses better than the average farm-houses of Illinois.

The aggregate of such excessive nominal cost in the United States may be safely estimated to exceed $800,000,000, equal to eight hundred thousand homes—comfortable homes for 5,000,000 people.

On this enormous nominal capital, or, as it is commonly designated, "watered stock," which represents actually nothing, dividends are sought to be made by railway managers, and, to a considerable extent, they have hitherto succeeded in doing so. To accomplish this end, railroads must necessarily charge unreasonable and extortionate rates, and, unless restrained, will continue forever to subject the people to the same wrongs.

Suppose Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jay Gould, and some other high representatives of railroad cupidity, had, by a single resolution, placed a debt of $800,000,000 upon the people of the United States, and sent out their agents to collect the interest annually forever. Would you pay your proportion? This is precisely what has been done, only it has crept on by stealthy degrees. The railroad system, under proper control, as a new manifestation of power and usefulness, is grand almost beyond human conception—but not grander than terrible, if it takes the form of a blindly selfish and unrestrained giant—an immense vampire, spreading all over this fair land, sapping from the people their long-cherished hopes of real and enduring liberty, and wresting from them the God-given blessings of this, our beloved country.

To secure complete relief, then—and we cannot afford to adopt half measures—the first work to be done is to ascertain the actual and equitable cost of each railroad, having due regard for the rights of the people and railroads, but without regard to the ability of railroads to make earnings enabling the payment of dividends on fictitious stock or interest on fraudulent bonded debts. Until this just basis is obtained, satisfactory rates cannot be accurately established.

It will be quite enough if the people consent to pay tithes perpetually upon the costs resulting from improvident and bad management, in addition to the necessary charges for constructing their railways. Upon such a valuation the property of railroads should be taxed the same as individual citizens, and from their net earnings they should be permitted to pay only reasonable interest or dividends, as for money loaned. They must also be required to observe strict economy in their management and prompt and cheerful obedience to the laws.

The second burden imposed by the railroads, before alluded to, arises out of the excessive charges and irregular and unjust discriminations, especially in the transportation of freight. To enter upon this branch of the subject in detail would occupy more time than I have at my disposal, and would involve an array of statistics and figures more than the human memory could retain, and would be of little practical value on such an occasion as this. One striking illustration, generally applicable, will suffice:

The recent rate upon first-class freight from the city of New York to Bloomington, in this State, about 1,000 miles, all the way by rail, has been 90 to 50 cents per 100 pounds, or an average of 8 mills per ton per mile. At the same time, the rate from Chicago to Bloomington, via the Chicago and Alton railroad, for the same class of freight, a distance of 127 miles, was 58 cents per 100 pounds, or about 9 cents and 1 mill per ton per mile—more than eleven times greater charge. The merchants of Chicago may well complain of such excessive difference in rates as destructive to their business; but it is not the recent law that has produced this injury to Chicago, as has been stated. This vicious condition of rates has existed substantially for many years—the price for transporting merchandise from the seaboard cities being frequently less than the price charged for the same freight from Chicago to the same points.

One of two things must be true; either that the through rates from the seaboard cities to the interior of Illinois and adjacent country are greatly too low to be remunerative, or that the local rates from Chicago to the same points are oppressive and extortionate.

If the former be true, then the loss upon the transportation of through goods must be made up by excessive charges upon local transportation; and the latter is therefore charged, not only with its reasonable cost, but also with the burden of the loss occasioned by an unjust discrimination against Chicago in favor of its rival seaboard cities.

Although primarily the injury thus produced may be said to be borne by Chicago and other interior cities, yet, in the end, the losses fall upon the consumers of the goods, and upon the producers of the State, whose products are charged with excessive rates for local service and for transportation in seeking market, to make good the losses occasioned by such, if they are, unreasonably low rates.

The geographical position of Chicago ordinarily guarantees cheap rates for transportation to and from that point by natural lines of transit. It is a great commercial center by reason of those advantages the influence of which, in a great degree, controls the rates charged by the railroads which center there. But, if all other points at the West are to have low rates equal to Chicago, and, to make good the losses on such low rates, extortionate charges are made on local freights—products going to, and merchandise shipped from, Chicago,—the effect will soon be apparent. Indeed, the serious results upon Chicago and this State of the vicious freight system during the past ten years can be quite clearly apprehended by any intelligent person who will take the time to consider the subject.

The local rates within this State for transporting articles of prime necessity, such as fuel, lumber, stone, agricultural products and implements, are from three to ten, and even twenty, times greater per ton per mile than the rates on higher classes of freight to and from the seaboard States.

It is quite clear that all kinds of articles manufactured at the East are brought here by rail at unremunerative rates, and also grain shipped to the Eastern States by rail at a loss, else the local charges on the roads in Illinois and all the States are outrageously wrongful and extortionate. If the first be true, it presents an unjust and vastly injurious discrimination against Chicago, St. Louis, and the whole Northwest, in favor of the manufacturing States at the East, sustained by extortionate local rates.

If the rates of freight charged by the railroads were reasonable and just—an equal charge for the same service, as a rule, based on a just and equitable scale,—and such as would, if proper, in the aggregate produce to the railroad companies of the country the same amount of gross earnings as they now receive, the effect of the change and equalization would be to relieve the people of this and other States from the burdens imposed by extortionate local charges, and from an artificial competition with the East, created by rates which are now in the interest of that section of the country.

It would, in a short period of time, develop the various interests and manufactures now so completely repressed by these discriminations.

Such a condition would at once increase, and soon greatly add to, the population and wealth of this State, and enhance the value of lands and products through the influence of home markets. The producer and consumer would stand face to face, and Chicago would have the benefit of its natural advantages, now greatly impaired by the wrongful conditions existing.

Illinois possesses many great facilities for carrying on manufacturing successfully, and no sound reason can be given why they should be repressed by continuing the vicious freight-rates which have existed in the past. Certainly no reasons can be presented of sufficient force to justify us in tamely submitting that those advantages should remain dormant to satisfy either the folly or cupidity of the railroad and other monopolists.

Greater benefits are properly due to us, and we must not lack the manliness to demand, secure and preserve them. The importance of Chicago to the whole people of this State and the Northwest, under an accurate commercial equilibrium, cannot be overestimated. Its prosperity is, in a great measure, the prosperity of the State at large. When it suffers, the State suffers; and any system of management by the great transportation agencies which discriminates against Chicago and checks its prosperity is injuriously felt throughout the whole State and Northwest.

Another evil, more widely diffused than that just mentioned relative to Chicago, grows out of a system of unjust discriminations, almost universal on the railroads prior to the recent legislation, between the small towns and villages along the railroad lines. Places situated at railroad crossings where competition existed paid much lower rates than were paid in places having the advantage only of a single line.

This evil has, to some extent, been remedied by the recent legislation on that subject, and the decision of the Supreme Court in the quo warranto case in McLean county against the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company. Although this evil has been partially relieved, yet it still exists in some degree.

The people of the State of Illinois, by their Constitution of 1870, after several years of patient remonstrance with the railroad companies, and, to the same end, making most liberal contributions for the purpose of constructing competing lines of railroad, which were no sooner completed than consolidated, were finally forced to take the initiatory step to secure the just control of the State over the railroads.

It was by that Constitution declared that all railroads were public highways, and it was made the duty of the Legislature to provide by law against all extortions and unjust discrimination in the transportation of persons and property.

The Legislature in 1871 passed laws in obedience to those constitutional provisions, and created a Board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners to supervise their execution.

From the beginning, the railroad companies have deliberately disregarded and set at defiance the authority of the State, and refused obedience to the laws. In 1873 the Legislature again passed laws on this subject, amending and modifying the laws of 1871. These laws have as yet been only obeyed colorably—not at all in letter and spirit; and, under pretext of conformity with the laws, the railroad companies have, on the whole, largely increased the burdens before resting on the people. This is the condition in which we now find ourselves. It remains only for the people of the State to meet with proper firmness the question forced upon them: Which is the master, and which the servant?

Some persons, despairing of being able to control these great corporations by State authority, and others, probably secretly in the interest of the roads themselves, have proposed to apply to the Congress of the United States to exercise the power conferred upon it by the Constitution to regulate commerce between the several States, so as to subject these corporations to national control. This remedy, if such it may be called, is of very doubtful utility, nor does the recent legislation of Congress on kindred subjects commend it to our confidence. It would seem as though we were already under a provisional railroad empire, and to throw a subject of such vast extent and intricate complications, backed by interests of like nature and such immense wealth and subtle power, wholly into the hands of Congress, would be virtually to abandon all attempt at control and accept a railroad empire.

These considerations, though so incompletely presented, seem to require of the people immediate, thorough and independent action, that they may, if possible, secure servants in great preponderance upon whose integrity they may safely rely.

Let us, therefore, resist this tendency to the last, and only accept the alternative proposed when compelled to do so. Bear in mind the recent exhibitions of want of integrity in Congress, and then consider that an assessment of 1 per cent. per annum on the present railroad capital of the country will produce $35,000,000. This enormous sum for annual legislative use, it is fair to presume, judging by the past, would be quite sufficient to prevent unfriendly legislation; or, in other words, it would secure such rates as the railroad monopolists might think they could succeed in extorting from the people.

Integrity is the only power that can be successfully opposed to capital, and, unless we can command it, there is no ground on which to base our hope for a final and glorious success for our form of government. The danger which menaces us is not an imaginary one. It is portentous and real. But few who are not willfully blind can fail to see its shadow; it is so dark as almost to be felt. Let us, then, pledge ourselves that Illinois shall be, as she ever has been, one of the trusted watch-towers of Liberty!

Pressy Pieces.

—An editor who was going courting said "he was going to press."

—A Wisconsin editor speaks of a wind which "just sat down on its hind legs and howled."

—A prosperous merchant has for his motto, "Early to bed, and early to rise, never get tight and advertise."

—The editress in a Western journal recently announced that the arrival of an "extra male" prevented the prompt issue of her paper.

—The poet of an Iowa newspaper dates his effusions from the county jail, which is thought by competent critics to serve him quite right.

—Editing a newspaper is very much like raking a fire—every man thinks he can perform the operation better than the man who holds the poker.

—An editor's pocket was picked at Litchfield, Ill., and he tried to make the public believe he lost $2. Two dollars in an editor's pocket? Pshaw!

—A sensative editor laments because the illsions of his youth have departed, and he has learned by sad experience that four-fifths of the American people spell copy with two p's.

—A young man in Danbury, Conn., when told by the editor of a local paper that the insertion of the announcement of the death of his wife would cost him nothing, feelingly remarked that "death for him had been robbed of half its terrors!"

A Corpse Exhumed to Kill a Slander.

A Canadian gentleman named Cameron ten years since returned home from British Columbia, bringing with him a coffin containing the dead bodies of his wife and child, who had died during his absence. They were interred near Cornwall, where Mr. Cameron resides. Recently, while he was absent, some of his neighbors got up a story that the coffin supposed to contain the corpse of Mrs. Cameron inclosed nothing but a piece of clay, the lady having been in reality sold by her husband to an Indian chief on the Pacific coast for a gold chain. Strange as it may seem, this monstrous tale found ready belief among the Canucks, and when Mr. Cameron came home he found it necessary to refute it. So he advertised that on a certain day the grave would be opened and the corpses exposed to view. When the time came several hundred people were present. The bodies were exhumed and exhibited to the gaping crowd. They were in excellent preservation, having been embalmed immediately after death, and the features of Mrs. Cameron were distinctly recognized by those who knew her in life. This, of course, exploded the story of the sale, and gave peace of mind to the gossips.

"Now, John, suppose there was a load of hay on one side of the river and a jackass on the other, and no bridge, and the river's too wide to swim, how can the jackass get to the hay?" "I give it up." "Well, that's just what the other jackass did."

THE ABSORBING TOPIC.

PROGRESS OF THE LIQUOR CASES.

THE ARGUMENT OF THE HON. ALBERT G. PORTER—NEW AND UNEXPECTED POINTS IN FAVOR OF THE COSTITUTIONALITY OF THE LAW—THE CASE TAKEN UNDER ADVISEMENT BY THE COURT.

can not affect its character in this respect, no more than if it were a general license law providing for license to all who might apply throughout the State, the circumstance that it led to a great deal of drunkenness in one community and to little or none in another would render it liable to the constitutional objection of being a "special" law.

But it is argued that it is a local law and that in the language of the learned counsel for the defendants, quoting from the constitution, the "General Assembly shall not pass special or local laws in any of the following enumerated cas s; that is to say * * * * For the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors * * * * In all the cases enumerated in the preceding section, and in all other cases, where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general," etc.

It is sufficient to say that whether a general law could be made applicable, is not a question for judicial determination unless this law comes within the classes required specifically by enumeration in Sec. 22 of Art. 4 to be general, whether others can be made of general application is a political question to be determined by the Legislature, as this court has solemly decided.

In reference to the objection that it is a local law, for the punishment of misdemeanors I answer that this does not provide, nor can it happen that the same act shall be punished at one place in one way and in another place in another.

AS IF THE LEGISLATURE

Should provide that in townships purely agricultural, where horses are an absolute necessity for prosecuting the occupation of the inhabitants, a horse thief should be punished by hanging, and in a city, where there are chiefly used for pleasure, he should be punished by imprisonment for a short term in the State's Prison,

The act which, under this law, exposes the violator to punishment, is retailing liquor, to be drank upon the premises, without license, and there is no difference in the character of the punishment for this act in any county or township or ward in the State.

Objection is also made that the Boards of County Commissioners are left with no discretion by this law whether to grant or refuse the license when the requisite number of petitioners have signed an applicant's petition.

The objection would apply with equal force to the acts concerning the purchase of lands for agricultural and horticultural fairs; the change of county boundaries; and many other acts that might easily be enumerated. The Board of County Commissioners is a body mentioned but once in the Constitution, and that is in the clause which states that the Legislature may confer upon them powers of a local, administrative character. They can claim, therefore, to exercise no powers which the Legirlature does not confer upon them. It can grant to them what measure of power it pleases, it can annex to the grant what conditions it pleases, it can withhold from them any powers. It can, of course, make the granting of a license a mere administrative duty. That is what the granting of licenses generally is in practice. When we, a few years ago, applied to the United States Asessor for license to practice our professions, and tendered him the license fee, we never suspected, I dare say, that he was a judicial officer. When the County Treasurer, upon a tender of a proper fee, gives to the showman a license to exhibit his caravan, we never imagine that he is exercising a judicial function.

A discretion may and no doubt is often exercised by administrative officers. But it is not of the essence of their office. Their imperative duty is often simply to do and not to consider.

CASES HAVE BEEN CITED

by learned council for the defendants which are supposed to have an application to the present controversy.

Of the seven cases cited by the learned council for the defendant four have no pertinency to the present case.

The questions submitted to the people in the cases cited from New York and Iowa (Bartory Himrod, 4 Seld. 483; State v. Weir, 33 Iowa, 134,) were, whether the enactments in question should become laws. They were not to be laws unless the people voted that they should become so.

The question sudmitted in the Michigan case (The people v. Collins, 3 Mich. 343,) was, at what time the law should take effect, and the Judges were equally divided as to whether the law was or was not Constitutional.

The cases in Pennsylvania and Deleware and Vermont (Appeal of Lock et al., Chicago Legal News, vol. 5. p. 362, Rice v. Foster, 4 Harr. 479, Bancroft v. Dumas. 21 Vermont, 459) arr mrre nearly in point. In those States the question was submitted to the electors to determine by vote whether licenses should issue or not, and two of the courts—the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania and the Supreme Court of Vermont—held that the law was liable to no Constitutional objection. The decision in Pennsylvania overruled a previous decision of that Court, on the ground that laws of a similar nature, where the sale of liquors was not involved, had since been repeatedly upheld by the Court so that their first decision could not be upheld unless a more favorable rule was to be applied to the retailers of liquor than to other suiters. None of these laws, however, are like the laws now in question before this Court. It is not a law, the taking effect of which is submitted to the people. It does not submit the question whether a license shall issue to a vote of the people but requires, merely, that to obtain a license, the applicant shall obtain a fixed number of signers to his petition, exceeding half of the voters who cast their ballots at the next precediud Gongressional election. And, as I have shown before, such a law was distinctly upheld by this Court, when its judicial functions were exercised by Blackford and Sullivan and Dewey, and a class of laws has been upheld by the present Judges of this Court of a similar character, but when it has chanced that the questions in controversy did not relate to the sale of intoxicating liquors.

The decisions of other States, whether favorable or adverse to the present law, can have little weight, for the reason alluded to before—that before the present Constitution was ordained a law like the present one in all the substantive features that have application to the present controversy, had been held valid by this court, and that the constitution was framed in the light of the construction which had been given to that statute, and incidentally to the provision that all legislative powers were vested in the General Assembly. To ive a different construction to that instrument now, after the great body of legislation which has assumed that the old practice and construction wore correct Would be scarcely distinguishable from the exercises by the judiciary of legislative powers.

MUCH HAS BEEN SAID

In the argument, with great felicity of style, of the dangers always to be apprehended from the people when they exercise a direct office in the making of laws. If the well chosen words and the sounding rhetorical periods that have been uttered, had been delivered by an English landlord, depriratiny the extension of popular franchises they would have had a familiar and a harmonious sound, but they jar strangely upon the ear when they daop from an American tongue. I dare say that they weresentimente put forth in the ardent spirit of advocacy, in support of a side of a cause that needed that kind of argument, and that they are not supported by the deliberate judgement of out distinguished brother

Great strength of assertion is put forth to show that the purpose of the convention which framed our constitution, was to enlarge representative, anp to diminssh popular authority. In the view we have taken of the case the question is of little importance. But I deny that the present constitution was founded in any spirit of distrust of the people acting in their primary capacity. I assert, en the contrary, that it was a constitution founded in a distrust of the legislative department of the government.

I invoke, in proof of what I assert the provisions that the sessions should be held tiennially; that no regular session extend beyond sixty days; that no Senator or Representative, during the term for which he is elected, be eligible to any office the election to which is vested in the General Assembly; that every act shall embrace put one subject, which shall be expressed in the title that no act shall ever be devised or amended by mere reference to its title; that local or special laws should not be passed in many enumerated easas; that the vote on the passage of every man shall be by yeas and nays; that the election ot Secretary, Treasurer and Auditor of State and the Judges of the Circuit Courts was taken from them. I assert that the constitution was founded in trust in the people. The secretary, Treasurer and Auditor of the State, before chosen by the Legislature were to be elected by them. So also the whole judiciary. And the provision requiring that when general laws could be made applicaole, local laws should not be passed, necessarily much enlarged their direct officers in the conduct of government.

Happily this Court has interpreted the Constitution in respect to this important matter.

In the city of Lafayette vs. Cox, 5 Ind., R. 38, where certain powers of that city were in question, this Court said:

Under representative governments, where the political tendencies are centrifugal, tending to diffuse powers among the members rather than concentrate it in the head of the body politic, we may expect greater powers of local governments entrusted to the municipial corporations scattered over the state. Such was the spirit in which the new Constitution was framed and adopted. Hence the restraints upon the legislative power in regard to enacting speci l and local laws and the provisions for extending local administration.

But this jealousy towards the legislative department of the Government has not prevailes in relation to powers legislative in their charactee delegated by the legislature to be exercised subordinately by other bodies near to the people. This court has held, in relation to city ordinances, that the provision that an act shall contain but one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, and that the yeas and nays shall be called on the passage of a bill does not apply to them.

THE INTERPRETATION

of the Constitution by the Courts has been—without fixing any definite limitations— that legislative power of a subordinate character may be delegated by the legislature, but always of course, subject to resumption at pleasure. Such powers cannot be permanently parted with.

Mr. Dillion, in his work on corporations, says: "Although the proposition that the Legislature of a State is alone competent to make laws, is true yet it is also settled that it is competent for the Legislature to delegate to municipial corporations the power to make by laws and ordinances wich, when anthorized, have the force, as to persons bound thereby, of laws passed by the legislature of the State." Dillon on Municipial Corporations, 272.

In the case of The City of Aurora v. Wesst, 9 Ind. R., 79, the Court say; "Beyond doubt general powers of government, for local interests, may be exercised as equitably by a city as in a State administration. * * * We have thus far treated the power conferred upon cities to enact ordinances, levy and collect taxes, etc, as a delegated legislative power." And, again. Public corporations are such as are created by the government for political purposes, as counties, cities, &c,: they are invested with subordinate legislative powers, to be exercised for local purposes connected with the public good, and such powers are subject to the control of the legislation of the State."

In Beebe vs. The State, 6 Ind., p. 533, Stuart, J., says; "To these [powers before enumerated] may be added the power conferred by charter on towns and cities to inhabit or license the sale[of liquors] at their pleasure—thus clearly assuming the State had herself the power which she granted to the municipalities."

I think my eloquent co-laborer in this cause(Major Gordon) has made it clear, and I think I have myself sufficiently shown. that the provision in the temperance law relating to the persons who may sign the position, and whose signing may evoke the exercise by the Board of Commissioners of the function of granting a license, is in no sense whatever—can be regarded by no torturing of construction—an exercise of legislative power. But if it were, would this Court say that the delegation of such a function—capable at any time of resumption—to a body of people, under a constitution which gives to the people a right to instruct their representatives, and has been held to a low subordinate legislation and police powers to be delegated to local bodies, was a palpable infringment of that instrument?

I have thus, perhaps too briefly for the subject, but feeling that I ought not longer to occupy the attention of the Court, already too severely oppressed with judicial labors, discussed the questions presented in this cause.

I was pained to hear our learned friend who opened this argument refer with a temper almost acrimonous to to those whom he was pleased to call

"THE TEMPERANCE REFORMERS."

There are men—and not a few—who come within that designation, who, moved by no impulse but love of their fellow men, and without any hope of any reward in this world but the consciousness of duty well performed, have given the best years and the best labors of their lives to put under greater restraint— perhaps wholly to suppress—the retailing of spiritous liquors. The path they have trodden has been a rugged one and full of obstacles. They walk footsore but they are undismayed. They work in the spirit of Christian charity wishing harm to evil, but not to its doers. They entered into this strife knowing that the way was long. They bear the virtuous mind which ever walks attended with a strong siding champion, conscience. They have seemed more than once nearly to reach the goal of their disinterested zeal, but just then the Constitution has been succesfully invoked against them. Many seem now ready to exclaim; Shall the Constitution forever furnish the pitfall into wich all are to be precipitated who seek to accomplish the highest purposes for which the Constitution was framed? After long years of strife a law is before this Court, the substance of which for a generation was held valid, and they are now told that it, too, is unconstitutional. They believe it will be upheld But let it stand or fall they will not give up their work. Hope springs eternal in the breast of the true lover of his kind In the order of the Great Providence there is a perpetual strife between Good and Evil, and, under that Providence, it can never end until the evil yields and the good gains sway. He who was foretold as the Prince of Peace, declared, when he came, that he came not to bring peace, but a sword— the sword that was to maintain a warfare against Evil until the Good prevailed which was to bring Peace.

The announcement of the death of surveyor C. C. Clark by the Press. last week, seems to have been premature. Up to last Sabbath, Mr. Clark was still alive, though there was little hope of his recovery.

Nothwithstanding opposition P. Morell, of Waterloo; has his building up and finished, and is now offering the trade great inducements in Boots & Shoes. Phillip is a man of energy, and these kind of men are always safe to deal with.

That public caterer to the public taste, W. F. Smith, of Butler, will have an extensive eating establishment at the Fair grounds at Waterloo next week. Smith knows how to dish up a good meal, and the public should bear this in mind.

There will be another one of those grand hops at Rainiers Hall next Thursday, Oct. 9d. The managers of the society understand their business, and all who attend will be treated well and have a good time. Good music in attendance.

We call attention to the able argument of Hon. Albert G. Porter, in defense of the State Liquor law, in this week's paper. By request of quite a number, we find room for it, although it crowds out our own matter.

Dr. Casebeer informs us that a man by the name of Benj. Cumings, had his arm frightfully crushed while felling trees in the woods one day last week. A large limb fell against an adjoining tree and glanced off, and struck his arm, breaking the bone in a dozen pieces.

Whenever a lady finds a gentleman unable to engage in a half hour's sensible conversation on a Sunday evening, but instead shoots his mouth off in sickening drollery, she may depend upon it, whatever he may be guilty of. It will never be a revolution beyond that of kicking over an empty dinner pot.

We are requested to state that the members of the M. E. Church, of Waterloo, will open a dining hall on the fair grounds next week, to assist them in paying for the new parsonage they have just purchased. Here you can get a good meal, and at the same time contribute to a worthy cause. Remember this when you feel hungry at the Fair.

"Pound Parties" are becoming fashionable. A pound party is a surprise party, where all the guests take a pound of something to donate to the host. They are a new thing in this town and are likely to become quite popular. We have had several surprises lately but they have been ten pounders, and we object to this infringement on the custom.

The Defiance engine costing about $4,000, beat the new Silsby engine of Ft. Wayne, at the Defiance fair last week. We think our town ought to have one of these Piston engines, smallest size, and we believe the Town Board would be justified in its immediate purchase. Let us have an engine of some kind if it is a small squirt-gun.

Those who think that the possession of great wealth is the panacea for earthly happiness will learn something by the Parker tragedy in New York, by which a man in the prime of life, and a millionaire in wealth, shot his wife and then shot himself, both wounds supposed to be mortal. Money can not buy earthly contentment, much less happiness. Something else, and more important, is required.

Hon. E. V. Long, we learn, has been nominated for Circuit Judge in the Warsaw district by the Democrats. We do not know the exact political complexion of the district, but we are confident Mr. L. will make a splendid race. We think, however, these judicial officers should be selected without regard to politics, as we believe a judge would take his position upon the bench upon a much more independent basis than otherwise.

A Frenchman's definition of the word broker: "Ah! I make von discoverate Dat is de raison vot fore de peeples call the agent brokair—because von the personne nave bizziness vid him he become broke."

But not so with Vodermark & Sons. where greenbacks are received at par, and an equivelent given in first class Boots and Shoes at the lowest prices.

WANTED.—One hundred young men more or less, of all shapes and sizes, from a tall graceful dandy, with hair sufficient, on his upper lip to stuff a barber's cushion down to the little, large and good looking people everywhere, to call and see the piles of Boots and Shoes, just received at the New Store, in Odd Fellows building. Go and see them sure. Special invitation given to ladies, to call and see the handsome stock bought expressly for their wear.

The Hop.

The opening hop for the coming season held last Thursday evening at Rainiers Hall, was a grand success and reflects much credit upon the managers of the society. The company was large, intelligent and courteous, and altogether was the most brilliant and happy of the kind we ever witnessed either here or elsewhere. The most attractive and interesting part of the scene, was the debut of two bridal couples. Mr. Henry Little and his accomplished and retiring bride, nee Miss Sylvia Orr, of Corunna and Mr. Johnny Spacht, of Columbus Grove, Ohio, and his beautiful pettite bride, nee Miss Georgie Lowry, of this place. Too much praise cannot be given the room manager for his attention to the bridal parties in receiving them in the Hall, welcoming them, and conducting them to the post of honor on the floor. Many were the good wishes and congratulations by all, whether in the bounds of matrimonial blessedness, or single cussedness.

ATTEMPED RAPE.—Bastardy and rape cases seem to be on the increase in this county. Last Saturday week, an attempt was made by two ruffians to commit a rape upon the person of a daughter of Mr. David Lung, of Jackson township. The young woman was at the house all alone when two men came up and asked for a drink of water. When supplied they asked her if she was all alone, and she said that she was. They then made insulting proposals to her which she resisted, and while one held her the other went for a close line to tie her According to one rumor they both violated her person, while we have heard that such was not the case. Her brother, who had been after nuts in the woods came along, at which the ruffians fled. Pursuit was made but the villains escaped. Miss Lung had been married, but has not been living with her husband, we understand. It seems to us a vigorous pursuit would surely have resulted in the arrest of the guilty parties.

STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

The regular annual meeting of the stockholders of the Detroit Eel River and Illinois Rail Road Company, for the election of directors for the ensuing year and the transaction of such other business as may regularly come before such meeting, will be held at the Court House, in Columbia City, Whitley County, Indiana, on Thursday the 30th of October, A. D. 1873, at one o'clock P. M.

EDWIN F. UHL,
Secretary,

Dated October 1st. 1873.

We have just received the October number of the FOLIO, containing an exquisite portrait of Anna Granger Dow, and eleven pages of choice music, viz: "Two little Heads lay side by side," Song and Chorus, by C. A. White; "Rosebud Waltz," by R. F. Raymond; "Just touch the Harp lightly," by C. Blamphin; and "Almighty God, Thou knowest best," a Sacred Quartette by C. A. White.

The literary department is carefully made up, of judicious selections and original matter, together with a complete digest of the musical news of the day, making it altogether the largest, cheapest, and most newsy Musical Magazine which comes to our table. Published by White, Smith & Perry, Boston, Mass.; at $1 00 per year.

THE FAIR.

Next Tuesday the fair at the grounds near Waterloo will open, under most flattering prospects, and if the weather proves good, a grand success will be realized. We are authorized to say that no admission fee to the grounds will be charged on the first day, Tuesday. Free to all. Everybody should remember that nothing is charged on articles for exhibition. All entries free except fast horses. The Directors have decided to permit no gambling upon the grounds, or anything else of an immoral tendency. Bring on your articles.

We are reluctant to say that we have seen more drunken men laying round our streets in a helpless condition for the last two weeks, than ever before. It is common now for our school children to come home and tell their stories about their escape from a drunk man. It may be because of the transient population engaged upon our railroads, and we believe it is confined to this class, though now and then one of our citizens can be seen in the same way. We are inclined to think that there is more liquor drank to-day in Auburn than under the old law.

POLICE COURT.—Our police court justice Witney presiding, on Monday last had before it one Benner, for wife whipping, and the way he was fined in the sum of fifteen dollars and cost, would prove that he is a successist as a whippist. He then thought to have revenge by having his wife arrested for assaulting a son with an unloaded musket, but the justice could not be made to see it, but thought as the woman expresed it in german, she was at the time "verucht," that is "crazy," and so let her go.

The Hon. Henry Feagler and J. W. Riekel, Esq., for the whippist, and W. H. Dills, Esq., for the woman.

Our New Hotel.

We say our new hotel, because it justly belongs to and is a feature of the place. We will challenge the State of Indiana or Ohio, for that matter, too, to beat it in point of size style and beauty of finish, and its appointments generally. We do not know yet what the furniture will be, but we venture to say that if it corresponds with the house, and Mr. Swineford has too much harmony in his nature to let it do otherwise, it will be the neatest, nicest, cosiest and best kept hotel, (we intend the last to have particular reference ty Mrs. Swineford) in the country. Among the many new features we may mention that of lighting it with gas. The proprietor has purchased the Combination gas machine, and having the building laid with gas fixtures, has attached them to the gasometer, on the outside of the building. This furnishes as good a light as that which can be produaed from coal, and is about one third cheaper. A tank containing oil is placed in the ground, and then air pressed into it from the bottom, during which process the air becomes impregnated with gas, and then it is conveyed in tubes to each room in the house. The hotel was lighted up last Tuesday evening to test the quality, and produced a strong and brilliant light, one burner having the same ratio as three coal oil lamps.

This apparatus, is large enough to supply 50 burners, cost $500. We do not see but that the proprietors of the large brick block, would adopt a wise and economical plan by introducing this method of lighting the building. It is safe, as there is fire or heat used to cause it to explode.

Announcement.

We are authorized to announce the name of Wm. B. McConnell, as a candidate for the office of Prosecuting Attorney, for this 35th Judicial District, at the election to be held October 14th 1873.

MARRIED.

ROSE.—NIMMONS.—At the residence of the bride's father, near Butler, Ind. on September 28th. by Rev. Warth, James E. Rose of Auburn, and Mary F. Nimmons of Butler.

It gives us pleasure to congratulate our legal friend on the happy event, and his good fortune in securing so fair and accomplished a bride. Having passed through bitter afflictions, we hope that the cloud has passed, and sunshine and happiness will linger uninteruptedly at their door. May they both live long and happily, with roses all the year round.

REED,—GRUB.—By the Rev. W. B. Sando. at the Reform Parsonage on Thursday, Sept. 25th. Mr WILLIAM REED to Miss IDA GRUB, both of DeKalb county, Ind.

SPACH.—LOWRY.—At the residence of the bride's in this place, on Thursday evening Sept. 25th, 1873, by Rev. J. Emory Fisher, Mr. LORAIN W. SPACH, of Columbus Grove, Ohio, to Miss GEORGIA A. LOWRY, of Auburn, Ind.

Another Spach-ulation has been entered into, and we trust that there never will be a regret as to the co-partnership.

REMORSE.

I met him on the street one morn—a youth upon whose head
[illegible] and twenty summers their balmy sweets had shed;
A slender youth, in life's May-time, when skies appear serene,
And foliage and neckties and things looked glad and green.
But care sat on his pallid brow and marked his haggard cheeks,
And plowed his paper bosom in unseemly rumpled streaks;
And melancholy dimmed his eye, obscured its lustrous flash,
And was denoted by the state of his unkempt mustache.

"What ails thee, hapless youth?" said I. He heaved a deep-drawn sigh
Of mingled woe and cardamon, and thus he made reply:
"I am that epidemic known as the Druggist's Clerk,
Haunted by the ghostly specters of the victims of work!

"Through all the day they follow me, a ghostly retinue,
And through the night surround my bed, bent on an interview;
They give me neither rest nor peace, for each avenging shade
Revives the horrid memory of blunders that I've made.

"The spectral infants glare at me, and though their lips are dumb,
Too well I know the victims of perverted laudanum!
And those old ghosts that glare at me with bleared, accusing eyes,
Were folks cut off by arsenic, to their extreme surprise.

"Prescriptions cannot always be interpreted at sight,
And Arrowroot, on paper, sometimes reads like Aconite;
But when a man gets the wrong stuff, and goes away and dies,
And then his ghost goes back on me—'tis conduct I despise?

"I might endure the strangers' ghosts; but both my parents died
Before my blunder in their case could be quite rectified;
And now their spirits visit me, and drive me almost wild,
By their reproachful glances at their orphan chi-yi-ild!"

Filial emotion choked him here, and while he wiped his nose,
I wrote a brief prescription his excitement to compose,
"Take this composing draught," said I, "and mix it in your store,
And the ghosts of poisoned customers will trouble you no more."

I builded wiser than I knew. That absurd clerk misread
The recipe, as usual; and then he went and fed
Himself with Acid Prussicum, whereas I wrote quite plain:
"One ounce of Aqua Pura and Lupulia one grain."

THE PIKE'S PENANCE.

Where they came from no one knew. Among the farmers near the Bend there was ample ability to conduct researches beset by far more difficulties than was that of the origin of the Pikes; but a charge of buckshot which a good-natured Yankee received one evening, soon after putting questions to a venerable Pike, exerted a great depressing influence upon the spirit of investigation. They were not blood-thirsty, these Pikes; but they had good reason to suspect all inquirers of being at least deputy sheriffs, if not worse, and a Pike's hatred of officers of the law is equaled in intensity only by his hatred of manual labor.

But while there was doubt as to the fatherland of the little colony of Pikes at Jagger's Bend, their every neighbor would willingly make affidavit as to the cause of their locating and their remaining at the Bend. When humanitarians and optimists argued that it was because the water was good and convenient, that the Bend itself caught enough driftwood, and that the dirt would yield a little gold when manipulated by placer and pan, all farmers and stock owners would freely admit the validity of these reasons; but the admission was made with a countenance whose indignation and sorrow indicated that the greater causes were yet unnamed. With eyes speaking emotions which words could not express, they would point to sections of wheat fields minus their grain-bearing heads; to hides and hoofs of cattle unslaughtered by themselves; to mothers of promising calves, whose tender bleatings answered not the maternal call; to the places which had once known fine horses, but had been untenanted since certain Pikes had gone across the mountains for game. They would accuse no man wrongfully; but in a country where all farmers had wheat and cattle and horses, and where prowling Indians and Mexicans were not, how could these disappearances occur?

But to people owning no property in the neighborhood—to tourists and artists—the Pike settlement at the Bend was as interesting and ugly as a Skye terrier. The architecture of the village was of original style, and no duplicate existed. Of the half dozen residences, one was composed exclusively of sod, another of bark, yet another of poles, roofed with a wagon-cover, and plastered on the outside with mud; the fourth was of slabs, nicely split from logs which had drifted into the Bend; the fifth was of hide, stretched over a frame, strictly Gothic from foundation to ridge-pole; while the sixth, burrowed into the hillside, displayed only the barrel which formed its chimney.

A more aristocratic community did not exist on the Pacific coast. Visit the Pikes when you would, you could never see any one working. Of churches, school houses, stores, and other plebeian institutions, there [illegible] none, and no Pike bemeaned himself [illegible] entering a trade or soiling his hands by agriculture.

Yet unto this peaceful, contented neighborhood there found his way a visitor who had been eveywhere in the world without once being made welcome. He came to the house built of slabs, and threatened the wife of Sam Trotwine, owner of the house; and Sam, after sunning himself uneasily for a day or two, mounted a pony and rode off for a doctor to drive the intruder away.

When he returned he found all the men in the camp seated on a log in front of his own door, and, then he knew he must prepare for the worst—only one of the great influences of the world could force every Pike from his own door at exactly the same time. There they sat, yellow-faced, bearded, long-backed and bent, each looking like the other, and all like Sam, and, as he dismounted, they looked at him.

"How is she?" said Sam, tying his horse and the doctor's, while the latter went in.

"Well," said the oldest man, with deliberation, "the wimmin's all thar, if that's any sign."

Each man on the log inclined his head slightly but positively to the left, thus manifesting belief that Sam had been correctly and sufficiently answered. Sam himself seemed to regard his information in about the same manner.

Suddenly the raw hide which formed the door of Sam's house was pushed aside, and a woman came out and called Sam, and he disappeared from the log.

As he entered his hut all the women lifted sorrowful faces and retired; no one even lingered, for the Pike has not the common human interest in other people's business—he lacks that, as well as certain similar virtues of civilization.

Sam dropped by the bedside and was human; his heart was in the right place, and, though heavily intrenched by years of laziness and whisky and tobacco, it could be brought to the front, and it came now.

The dying woman cast her eyes appealingly at the surgeon, and that worthy stepped outside the door. Then the yellow-faced woman said:

"Sam, doctor says I ain't got much time left."

"Mary," said Sam, "I wish ter God I could die fur yer. The children—"

"It's them I want to talk about, Sam," replied his wife. "An' I wish they could die with me, rather'n hev'em ez I've hed to. Not that you ain't been a kind husband to me, for you hev. Whenever I wanted meat yev got it somehow; an' when yev been ugly drunk yev kept away from the house. But I'm dyin', Sam, and it's cos you've killed me."

"Good God, Mary!" cried the astonished Sam, jumping up; "yu're crazy—here, doctor."

"Doctor can't do no good, Sam; keep still and listen, ef yer love me like yer once said yer did; fur I hevn't got much breath left," gasped the woman.

"Mary," said the aggrieved Sam, "I swow to God I dunno what yer drivin' at."

"It's jest this, Sam," replied the woman. "Yer tuk me, tellin' me ye'd love me an' honor me, an' perfect me. You mean to say now yer done it? I'm a-dyin', Sam—I hain't got no favors to ask of nobody, and' I'm tellin' the truth, not knowin' what word will be my last."

"Then tell a feller where the killin' came in, Mary, for heaven's sake," said the unhappy Sam.

"It's come in all along, Sam," said the woman. "There is women in the States, so I've heerd, that marries fur a home an' bread an' butter, but you promised more'n that, Sam. An' I've waited, an' it ain't come. An' there's somethin' in me that's all starved and cut to pieces. An' it's your fault, Sam. I tuk yer fur better or fur wuss, an' I've never grumbled."

"I know yer haint, Mary," whispered the conscience-stricken Pike. "An' I know what yer mean. Ef God'll only let yer be fur a few years, I'll see ef the thing can't be helped. Don't cuss me, Mary—I've never knowed how I've been a-goin'. I wish there was something I could do 'fore you go, to pay yer all I owe yer. I'd go back on everything that makes life worth hevin'.

"Pay it to the children, Sam," said the sick woman, raising herself in her miserable bed. "I'll forgive yer everything if you'll do the right thing for them. Do—do—everything?" said the woman, throwing up her arms and falling backward. Her husband's arms caught her; his lips brought to her wan face a smile, which the grim visitor, who an instant later stole her breath, pityingly left in full possession of the rightful inheritance from which it had been so long excluded.

Sam knelt for a moment with his face beside his wife—what he said or did the Lord only knows, but the doctor, who was of a speculative mind, afterwards said that when Sam appeared at the door he showed the first Pike face in which he had ever seen any signs of a soul.

Sam went to the sod house, where lived the oldest woman in the camp, and briefly announced the end of his wife. Then, after some consultation with the old woman, Sam rode to town one of his horses, leading another. He came back with but one horse and a large bundle; and soon the women were making for Mrs. Trotwine her last earthly robe, and the first new one she had worn for years. The next day a wagon brought a coffin and a minister, and the whole camp silently and respectfully followed Mrs. Trotwine to a home with which she could find no fault.

For three days all the male Pikes in the camp sat on the log in front of Sam's door and expressed their sympathy, as did three friends of Job—that is, they held their peace. But on the fourth their tongues were unloosed. As a conversationalist the Pike is not a success, but Sam's actions were so unusual and utterly unheard of that it seemed as if even they must have wondered and communed among themselves.

"I never heard of such a thing," said Brown Buck; "he's gone an' bought new clothes for each of the four young 'uns."

"Yes," said the patriarch of the camp, "an' this mornin', when I went down to the bank to soak my head, 'cos last night's liquor didn't agree with it, I see Sam with all his young 'uns as they wus a-washin' their faces an' hands with soap. They'll ketch their death and be on the hill with their mother 'fore long, if he don't look out. Somebody ort to reason with him."

"'Twould do no good," sighed Limping Jim. "He's lost his head, an' reason goes into one ear an' out at t'other ear. When he was scrapin' round this front door t'other day, an' I asked him what he wuz a-layin' the ground all bare an' desolate fur, he said he was done keeping pig-pen. Now everybody but him knows he never had a pig. His head's gone, just mark my words."

On the morning of the fourth day, Sam's friends had just secured a full attendance on the log, and were at work on their first pipes, when they were startled by seeing Sam harness his horse in the wagon and put all his children into it.

"Whar ye bound fur, Sam?" asked the patriarch.

Sam blushed as near as a Pike could, but answered, with only a little hesitation:

"Goin' to take 'em to school to Maxfield—goin' to do it ev'ry day."

The incumbents of the log were too nearly paralyzed to remonstrate, but after a few moments of silence the patriarch remarked, in tones of feeling, yet decision:

"He's hed a tough time of it, but he's no business to ruin the settlement. I'm an old man myself, and I need peace of mind, so I'm going to pack up my traps and mosey. When the folks at Maxfield knows what he's doin, they'll make him a constable or a justice, an' I'm too much of a man to live nigh any sich."

And the next day the patriarch wheeled his family and property to parts unknown.

A few days after Jim Merrick, a brisk farmer a few miles from the Bend, stood in front of his own house, and shaded his eyes in solemn wonder. It couldn't be—he'd never heard of such a thing before—yet it was—there was no doubt of it—there was a Pike, riding right toward him, in open daylight. He could swear that Pike had often visited him—that is, his wheat-field and corral—after dark, but a daylight visit from a Pike was unusual as a social call of a Samaritan upon a Jew. And when Sam—for it was he—approached Merrick and made his business known, the farmer was more astonished and confused than he had ever been in his life before. Sam wanted to know for how much money Merrick would plow and plant a hundred and sixty acres of wheat for him, and whether he would take Sam's horse—a fine animal brought from the States, and for which Sam could show a bill of sale—as security for the amount until he could harvest and sell his crop. Merrick so well understood the Pike nature that he made a very liberal offer, and afterward said he would have paid handsomely for the chance.

A few days later and the remaining Pikes at the Bend experienced the greatest scare that ever visited their souls. A brisk man came into the Bend with a tripod on his shoulder and a wire chain and some wire pins, and a queer machine under his arm, and before dark the Pikes understood that Sam had deliberately constituted himself a renegade by entering a quarter section of land. Next morning two more residences were empty, and the remaining fathers of the family adorned not Sam's log, but wandered about with faces vacant of all expression, save the agony of the patriot who sees his home invaded by corrupting influences too powerful for him to resist.

Then Merrick sent up a plow-gang and eight horses, and the tender green of Sam's quarter section was rapidly changed to a dull brown color, which is odious unto the eye of the Pike. Day by day the brown spot grew larger, and one morning Sam arose to find all his neighbors departed, having wreaked their vengeance upon him by taking away his dogs. And in his delight at their disappearance Sam freely forgave them all.

Regularly the children were carried to and from school, and even to Sunday school. Regularly every evening Sam visited the grave on the hill-side, and came back to lie by the hour watching the sleeping darlings. Little by little farmers began to realize that their property was undisturbed. Little by little Sam's wheat grew and waxed golden, and then there came a day when a man from 'Frisco came and changed it into a heavier gold—more gold than Sam had ever seen before. And the farmers began to step in to see Sam, and their children came to see his, and kind women were unusually kind to the orphans; and, as day by day Sam took his solitary walk up the hill-side, the load on his heart grew lighter, until he ceased to fear the day when he, too, should lie there.—California Exchange.

The Duke's Lesson About Diligence.

There was once a duke who disguised himself, and placed a great rock in the middle of the road near his palace. Next morning a peasant came that way with his ox-cart. "Oh, these lazy people," said he, "there is this big stone lying right in the middle of the road, and no one will take the trouble to put it out of the way." And so Hans went on raving about the laziness of the people. Next came a gay soldier along. His head was held so far back that he didn't notice the stone, so he stumbled over it. He began to storm at the country people around there, for leaving a huge rock in the road. Then he went on. Next came a company of merchants. When they came to the stone, the road was so narrow that they had to go off in single file on either side. One of them cried out: "Did anybody ever see the like of that big stone lying here all the morning, but no one stopping to take it away?" It lay there for three weeks, and no one tried to remove it. Then the duke sent around word to all the people on his lands to meet near where this rock lay, as he had something to tell them. The day came, and a great crowd gathered. Old Hans, the farmer, was there, and so were the merchants. A horn was heard, and a splendid cavalcade came galloping up. The duke came down from his horse, and began to speak to the people: "My friends, it was I who put this stone here three weeks ago. Every passer-by has left it just where it was, and has scolded his neighbor for not taking it out of the way." He stooped down and lifted up the stone. Directly underneath it was a round hollow, and in the hollow lay a small, leathern bag. The duke held up this bag, that all might see what was written on it: "For him who lifts up the stone." He untied the bag, and turned it upside down, and out upon the stone fell a beautiful gold ring, and twenty large, bright gold coins. So they all lost the prize, because they had not learned the lesson or formed the habit of diligence.

The Crops.

The Chicago Tribune, of the 22d of September, publishes reports of the crops throughout Illinois and contiguous States. The substance of the statement is, that much of the corn had been harvested before the frost came; the rest was badly damaged. In Southern Illinois, the corn was considerably injured in the lowlands, where it had not been cut before the frost. In Upper Illinois, the frost did much harm, and not more than half a crop is expected. In Iowa, reports are conflicting, but the weight of the evidence is that the corn has been generally injured. In addition to the ravages of the frost, the influence of a wet and late spring, and the summer drought have combined to lessen the yield.

After all, it is rare that a man gets utterly at the end of his rope until he is hanged.

LIFE AMONG THE ICEBERGS.

Rescue of the Missing Portion of the Polaris Crew—Thrilling Account of Their Sojourn in the Frozen Regions—The Journey South in Their Frail Boats, and Final Rescue.

[Dundee, Scotland (Sept. 20), Cor. New York Tribune.]

The whaling steamer Arctic, Capt. Adams, has arrived at this port from Davis' Straits, having on board the men of the Polaris expedition, who were picked up by the whaler Ravenscraig, on the 20th of July. The men are all well, and show no marks of emaciation, such as might have been expected after their terrible experiences.

The following narrative of incidents that occurred after the separation of the crew, is gathered from a conversation with several of the party:

The Polaris had been leaking badly before the 15th of October, 1872, and her situation ultimately became so alarming that it was deemed advisable to make preparations to abandon her. The determination to leave the ship was arrived at on the 15th of October, at which time they were in latitude 79. Some of the crew remained aboard, while others landed on the ice, and they began to get out stores, with the intention of taking everything they could need for a long sojourn in those frozen regions. Between 10 and 12 o'clock at night, while this work was proceeding, a severe gale sprang up, and snow began to fall heavily, with strong, but variable winds. Operations, however, were continued, and, after untiring efforts, the boats were got upon the ice, and a large supply of provisions taken out. Suddenly the hawsers by which the ship was made fast to the ice, gave way, one snapping, the other tearing its anchor from its lodgment on the ice. This was about midnight. The anchor, in starting, tore off a large piece from the floe, with three men upon it, and, as the Polaris drove past them, they cried out in an agony of terror: "What are we to do?"

Capt. Buddington shouted back that he could do nothing for them; they had boats and provisions, and must shift for themselves as best they could.

A few minutes later those of the Polaris saw a boat launched and manned by these men, making for the place where their comrades were stationed. In a short time the storm and darkness shut out every object from their view. The feelings of the men can be imagined, as with half the crew left to perish, as they supposed, in a desert of ice and snow, the ship drifted away helpless, until at last she brought up at Life-Boat Cove.

The prospect was now gloomy enough There seemed to be little prospect of their remaining in the Polaris. She still leaked fearfully, and in her damaged condition Buddington had no hope of getting any further south with her. It was therefore determined to beach her, but the question was how that could be done. The wind being favorable, an opening in the pack was finally discovered, and the ship was bored through under canvas. Everything apparently favored the work, but though the ship was only a few miles from shore it took twelve hours to get her close in. The next consideration was how to provide for the shelter of men on shore. All the timbers from between decks were torn out, provisions were deposited on the ice, the coal was removed, and everything useful was secured. The walls of a house were then built of heavy planks, jointed to exclude the wind, and the roof was made of sails. In such a home the long winter was passed. Some help was received from three Esquimaux, who discovered the wrecked ship, and agreed for a few paltry presents to convey provisions over the ice from the vessel. They gave still more valuable aid by supplying skins for clothing, of which the crew were generally in need, for many of their clothed were worn out, and many more were lost. When the vessel broke away, on the night of the 15th, the Esquimaux had plenty, and though they were filthy-smelling garments, the castaways gladly adopted the full Esquimaux costume, of fur trousers, coats, hats, and boots.

Through the long dreary winter the men kept up their spirits remarkably well. The snow fell heavily, but it served to protect their frail habitation and make it more comfortable. Their arrangements were so complete that no visit to the ship was necessary before Jan. 27, when they went for a supply of wood. Fresh water was obtained in abundance by collecting pieces of icebergs and melting them. Toward the end of winter Chester suggested that some means should be agreed upon to extricate the party from their perilous position. The provisions were gradually diminishing, and the fuel, of which only six tons had been obtained from the ship, was nearly exhausted. The Polaris was still available for materials, and it was now proposed to build two boats.

A survey by Chester showed that the lining of the cabin could be used, and this was accordingly stripped off. During the spring months, with the thermometer 23 degrees below zero, and often in a blinding drift, the building of the boats went on. The situation grew daily more discouraging, but the work was never relaxed, and the courage of the men never failed. Advancing steadily, the crew were ready to depart by the end of June, determined to push southward.

Just at this moment, when everything was in readiness, they were alarmed by the appearance of the scurvy. Happily, however, the attack proved slight, and a plentiful supply of walrus liver, which they obtained from the Esquimaux, enabled them to avert the disease. Whenever boats were launched they leaked a good deal, but the men determined to trust them, and, stowing aboard all their remaining provisions and ammunition, they said farewell to Life-Boat Cove. If not perfectly tight, the boats proved themselves excellent sailors and remarkably easy to row, and on the first day the voyagers reached Sontag Bay. After remaining there a short time to regain their strength the party made for Hakluyat Island, where the expedition was brought to a standstill by a tremendous gale, which blew for three full days, with a continuous fall of snow. For all that time immense flocks of ducks—kind of penguin species—were encountered here, however, as the men could easily take up their guns and kill ten of them at a shot, there was a plentiful supply of fresh provisions, which were thankfully received. Occasionally their tiny crafts were sadly beset, and it was feared they would come to grief, but they were among the ice, and there was nothing to be done but to force a passage southward at all hazards.

After enduring many privations, and encountering perils from which their escape seemed almost miraculous, they succeeded at last, through great exertions, in reaching Cape Parry. A few miles below the Cape, at Fitz Claressa Rock, an encampment was made every night. When the labors of the day were over, the boats were hauled upon a floe, and everything taken out, and the only hot meal of the day was prepared.

The apparatus employed in cooking was of the most primitive character. Each boat carried a quantity of rigging from the Polaris, and a cad of oil. With these a fire was made in the bottom of an old iron bucket. Tea was the only thing that could be made with such an apparatus. They state that the privations they suffered were not serious. The life was rough, laborious, and monotonous, but though dangers occasionally presented themselves well calculated to inspire the greatest fear, no serious accident occurred, and on the 21st of June the boats reached Cape York in safety.

Here they were again close beset with ice. On the 22d their troubles came to an end. A whaler was descried a few miles off, and the whole party was at once in a turmoil of excitement. A great fear seemed to take possession of them all at once that the ship might get away before they could make themselves seen, and they put forth every effort to to push through the ice with the least possible delay. The vessel proved to be the Ravenscraig, of Dundee, Capt. Allan. She soon saw their signals, and Capt. Allan sent his crew to their assistance, and took on board their effects and one of their boats, the other being left behind. Capt. Allan treated them, they say, in the kindest and most generous manner.

Capt. Hall was regarded as peculiarly adapted for the great enterprise under his charge, and all lament his untimely end. As to the statement that the ship might have aided the party on the ice, all agree that it was impossible after the Polaris broke adrift to learn even the whereabouts of those left behind. Every effort was made to find them, but to no avail.

What Will Become of the Northern Pacific?

What is to become of the Northern Pacific railroad? The question inevitably rises upon the suspension of Jay Cooke & Co. The construction of the Northern Pacific may be said to have been exclusively in the hands of this firm. The only partners Jay Cooke & Co. had in the enterprise were the bondholders. Jay Cooke & Co. having failed, there is but one way in which the road can be completed, and that is for the bondholders to take what there is of it and assume its construction to Puget Sound There is nobody else to do it. The stock of the road is merely nominal. But $200,000 has been paid in on stock subscriptions, and Jay Cooke controlled that. The Government never advanced any money and has no interest in the road. There have been no municipal subsidies, for there are no municipalities on the line of the road to subscribe them. There was a "Credit Mobilier" ring in it, of course, making profits out of the construction, but that will go to pot along with Jay Cooke & Co. Another such ring cannot be formed, for it would be impossible for them to dispose of the bonds. The present bondholders, whoever they are, own what there is of the Northern Pacific, which consists of about 600 miles of poorly-constructed road running through a wilderness, and a land-grant equal to the proportion of railroad already completed, and not exceeding 15,000,000 of unsalable acres located in a bleak and desolate stretch of country.

Singular Fatality.

It is a remarkable fact that Gen. E. S. McCook, who was recently killed at Yankton by Wintermute, the banker, is the fifth member of the family who has met with a violent death. Charles M. McCook, the youngest, was killed at the first battle of Bull Run; Brig.-Gen. Robert L. McCook was assassinated by guerrillas, in Tennessee, while sick in his ambulance; Maj. Daniel McCook, the father of the family, was killed while in pursuit of Morgan, during his Ohio raid; Brig.-Gen. Daniel McCook was killed at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain; and lastly, Edwin S. McCook, after meeting bravely all the hazards of the war, was assassinated at Yankton, as the telegraph has already reported. Three sons remain: Col. George W. McCook, the eldest; Maj.-Gen. A. McD. McCook, now in Texas; and Capt. John McCook, who is practicing law.

Prudent business men have predicted for years that Jay Cooke & Co. would fail. Their enterprises were so daring, their scrupulousness so doubtful, their liabilities so large, their exterior so glittering, that among the really heavy men of the country there has long been a belief that sooner or later the firm would go to everlasting smash. Nevertheless, their actual suspension, when announced, was a surprise. They had stood so long under the Northern Pacific load that even those who predicted their failure fancied that they would somehow pull through. When their collapse was announced, there were probably thousands of business men in all parts of the United States and Canada who exclaimed simultaneously, "I told you so."

The Milky Way.

Eighteen million suns furnish the lights for the milky way, which is the greatest feature of our heavens. How far separate these suns may be we know not, but they are so far distant from us that light traveling with its incredible speed, is ages in reaching the earth. One astronomer said he had gone back in the milky way so far as would require 330,000 years for the transmission of light. Whether the telescope has allowed the human eye to gauge it more or less, the fact stands that the bounds of creation are immeasurable as their eternal creator.

PRAYERS I DON'T LIKE.

I don't like to hear him pray,
Who loans at twenty-five per cent.;
For then I think the borrower may
Be pressed to pay for food and rent;
And in that Book we all should heed,
Which says the lender shall be blest,
As sure as I have eyes to read,
It does not say, "Take interest."

I do not like to hear him pray,
On bended knees, about an hour,
For grace to spend aright the day,
Who knows his neighbor has no flour.
I'd rather see him go to mill,
And buy the luckless brother bread,
And see his children eat their fill,
And laugh beneath their humble shed.

I do not like to hear him pray,
"Let blessings on the widow be,"
Who never seeks her home to say,
"If want o'ertakes you, come to me."
I hate the prayer so long and loud,
That's offered for the orphan's weal,
Ay, him who sees him crushed by wrong,
And only with his lips doth feel.

I do not like to hear her pray
With jeweled limbs and silken dress,
Whose washerwoman toils all day,
And then is asked to "work for less."
Such pious shavers I despise!
With folded hands and face demure
They lift to heaven their "angel eyes,"
Then steal the earnings of the poor.

I do not like such soulless prayers;
If wrong, I hope to be forgiven;
No angel's wing them upward bears,
They're lost a million miles from Heaven!

Humorous.

The most timely of gifts—A watch.

The great knead of the day—Bread.

The most mealy-mouthed people in the world—Millers.

The man who pretends to know everything generally knows nothing.

How to keep your head above the water—Never be above drinking it.

When a man becomes your tool, look out that he doesn't make you his fool.

Never talk to a man when he is reading, nor read to a man when he is talking.

A man from Placerville, Cal., when asked by a Saratoga waiter what he would have for breakfast, replied: "Well, I rather guess I'll just flop my lip over a chicken."

Scene in court: Judge—"Have you anything to offer to the court before the sentence is passed on you?" Prisoner: "No, judge; I had ten dollars, but my lawyers took that."

"If George had not blowed into the muzzle of his gun," sighed a rural widow at the funeral of her husband, "he might have got plenty of squirrels, it was such a good day for them."

The Peoria Review plaintively sings—

Poison your neighbor's dog if you can,
For that's the way to do;
Call him up close
And give him a dose
That'll scuttle his old canoe.

A country clergyman, paying a professional visit to a dying neighbor, who was a very churlish and universally unpopular man, put the usual question: "Are you willing to go, my friend?" "Oh! yes," said the sick man, "I am." "Well," said the simple-minded minister, "I am glad you are, for the neighbors are willing."

An economical Iowan, who had a toothache, determined to remove his tooth in the Indian fashion. Accordingly he bent down a sapling in the woods, lay down himself and attached a stout cord to his tooth and the sapling. Then he touched the spring, and the next he knew he had jumped over a grove of about forty small trees and was trying to get out of a small pond that he happened to alight in.

A DITTY OF DESPAIR.

The slowly starving editor of a paper at Brattleboro, Vt., drops into poetry as follows:

We had sweet dreams the other night,
When all around was still—
We dreamed we saw a host of folks
Pay up their printers' bill.
We wish the dream would come to pass,
And our empty pockets fill—
Tar da ump a te diddle dum,
Te tump te iddle dill.

A Detroit paper states that last week a man about fifty years of age, accompanied by a wife who looked still older, applied at the ticket office of the Central road for tickets to Jackson. When told the price he demurred, and asked for second-class accommodations. There were none to be had, and after withdrawing for a consultation he returned to the window and asked: "Well, won't you knock off a dollar if the old woman will ride on the platform?"

"Sam," said a darkey to his ebony brother, "how am it dat dis yaa telegraf carries de news froo dem wires?" "Well, Cæsar, now s'pose dar am a dog free miles long." "Nebber was such a big dog; do'n b'leib dat!" "You jess wait minnit; I'se only illustratin', you stupid nigger. Now, dis yaa dog, you see, jess puts his front feets on de Hoboken sho', and he puts his behind feets on de New York sho'." "Yesser." "Now, s'pose you walk on dis yaa dog's tail in New York—" "Yesser." "He'll bark, won't he?" "Yesser." "Well, where will that dog bark?" "In Hoboken, I calc'late." "Dat am jest it. You walk on de dog's tail in New York, an' he bark in Hoboken; an' dat's de way de telegraf works." "Yesser; dasso—dasso! Your right, by golley."

The Transportation Problem—An Important Project.

Gov. Morton, in his address at the Indiana State Fair, made one important statement, while referring incidentally to the prevailing question of cheap transportation. He argued that this problem can most easily be solved by the multiplication of tracks and the use of steel rails. With regard to the latter, he affirmed that with Indiana block coal Bessemer steel rails can be made cheaper than iron rails, and as they will last seven or eight times as long as iron ones, their employment becomes an important element in cheapening the construction of railroads, reducing the expense of keeping them up and cheapening transportation. In this connection he informed the audience that he had then in his possession a proposition from a distinguished business man in Holland to build a railroad with four tracks, from New York city west to some point in Ohio or Indiana, then two tracks diverging to Chicago, and two going to St. Louis—these tracks to be laid with steel rails, and the road to be constructed in the most substantial manner with private capital, and no aid asked from any State or from the General Government, the only condition of the proposition being that the road shall be chartered by Congress. There ought to be no doubt of the immediate acceptance of such a proposition.

Loss of Sight.

A little accident, carelessness and ignorance in regard to the condition, strength and power of the eye to endure has given to many an early blindness. It may not be generally understood that reading on the cars, steamboat, coach, or a[illegible] motion, is intended to impair the eye-sight.

The sculptor Crawford was accustomed all his life time to read lying down. To this, very largely, the physicians attribute the loss of his eye. Very soon a cancer formed in the other, which caused his death.

The great historian, Prescott, lost his eyesight when a student, by a bit of bread thrown in sport by a fellow-student at the table. A pair of scissors or a fork, thrown in sport or anger, has caused the loss of an eye which the wealth of the world cannot replace. A friend, who was very ambitious to finish a set of linen for her brothers spent almost a winter in the stitching, sitting up often late at night over the work, in which she took great delight. The result was, the nerve of the eye was so injured that she was obliged wholly to give up sewing, knitting and reading, under penalty of becoming perfectly blind.

A young lady, who lived but ten miles by train from school, used to spend the time in studying a certain lesson while she was riding down in the morning. The result was a severe affection of the eyes, which disabled her from study for a long time. It is always hurtful to the eyes to read in the train, though we may not see the effect so plainly when it happens only occasionally. A steady practice like this, young ladies, may produce even worse results when the system is in a bad state.

Never read by twilight, nor before eating in the morning. The little you gain in time will be doubly lost before life's sundown.

I know a young clergyman who is a remarkably well-bred man, but whose eyes are a perfect deformity. He said he ruined them by reading at night, long and intently, when he was getting his education. He seems to have no control of the lids, which twitch and move in a most grotesque manner. Don't fancy you can do what you please with your eyes, and yet have them serve you faithfully. Take good care of them as you would of gold, for gold can never replace lost eyesight.

The Boy Butler.

In his younger days Ben Butler was a school-teacher at Dracut, a little place opposite Lowell, and among his scholars was a boy named Ray, who subsequently became an Episcopal clergyman, and finally developed into a newspaper writer. Butler was then a lank, long-haired, cross-eyed, queer-looking character, and was the terror of the scholars. He often got into an uncontrollable rage with them, and fell upon them with tongue and ratan. One day Ray gave him offense in some way. Butler made a speech at him, wild in its invective (very much like his more recent speeches), threatening him with murder, slaughter and all sorts of horrors, and, finally, losing all self-control, he made a rush for the offender, who, however, sprang for the door, got out, and took to his heels. Butler seized a big jack-knife which was lying open on his desk, leaped over the benches, and, with hatless head, heelless slippers, and long-tailed coat, gave chase. The boy was fleet of foot, and ran for dear life, getting ahead of the stumbling teacher. Butler kept up the race, however, yelling after his flying victim, pursued him through Dracut, crossed the bridge over the Merrimac river at the height of his speed, entered Lowell at full gallop, blowing tremendously, and rushed through the streets after his prey, to the amazement of the men, women and children who happened to witness the scene. It was a Big Bethel affair or Fort Fisher explosion. The boy escaped, and, getting to his home after a two hours' race, made faces from the second story at Butler, who, bursting with chagrin, had to pick up his collapsed nerves and wend his bareheaded way back to Dracut with the closed jack-knife in his pocket. The story would not be worth recalling if it were not so very characteristic of Butler.

Cabs.—London is famous for its luxurious cabs, of which some ten thousand are employed by the city. The rates are cheap, for two passengers can be conveyed a distance of two miles for twenty-five cents. A novelty in the shape of cabs is one fitted to accommodate four persons; it is set on very small wheels. The idea of the inventor was that such vehicles may be started and stopped more easily than the large wheeled machines. The traction of the small wheels is a little more, but it is contended that the sum of the work upon the horse, in ordinary cab traffic, is less than the large wheeled vehicles. Another improvement for two-wheeled cabs is a shifting ballast box which the driver can readily move at pleasure, and thus counterbalance the weight of the vehicle in respect to its pressure upon the horse's back, to correspond with the number of passengers occupying the interrio of the cab.

A backslider from a Nashville church lately sent the following communication to the pastor: "After holding my works for several months, I was again attacked furiously, and, after being shelled for several weeks with mortars, I was again routed—horse and dragoon. On my retreat I was captured and carried up on the top of a mountain, and promised all the lands in my survey if I would join the devil's army, which I have done. Now, under the foregoing circumstances, and knowing that I am no longer a soldier of the Cross, I shall have to withdraw from your pious brigade. Therefore, please accept this as my resignation."

Can it be True?—Within the last few months a considerable number of persons have called upon Dr. Walker, the proprietor of the popular medicine known as Vinegar Bitters, and assured him that, in their belief, its preparation is an infallible antidote for rum and tobacco. The minute details which have been furnished him forbid him to doubt the accuracy of the statements. This new claim of a great remedy to the confidence of the public will give a vast and well-deserved impulse to its popularity. Heretofore the Bitters have been recognized as a pure vegetable tonic and corrective, devoid of alcohol, and thoroughly adapted to the cure of stomach and bowel complaints, nervous disorders, bilious affections, muscular diseases, and, indeed, a majority of the ailments within the reach of medicine; but if it will also cure the craving for liquor and tobacco, philosophers, statesmen and theologians ought to unite their voices in its praise. Can the good news be true? It is easy to test the question. 9

Peerless Clothes Wringer.

The Milwaukee Monthly Magazine for October reaches us in advance of the other monthlies. It is an excellent number of this sterling and popular magazine. The finely illustrated article on Africa is followed by attractive and entertaining stories and poems, while a practical and profusely illustrated fashion article, and readable editorials on many different topics, make the book complete. This is no cheap rehash of trashy stories, but is a first-class original magazine, for one dollar a year. Send three cent stamp for prepayment of postage, and receive a specimen copy free. Address T. Half Alive.

It is a sad thing to pass through life only half alive. Yet there are thousands whose habitual condition is one of languor and debility. They complain of no specific disease; they suffer no positive pain, but they have no relish for anything which affords mental or sensuous pleasure to their more robust and energetic fellow-beings.

In nine cases out of ten this state of lassitude and torpor arises from a morbid stomach. Indigestion destroys the energy of both mind and body. When the waste of nature is not supplied by a due and regular assimilation of the food, every organ is starved, every function interrupted.

Now, what does common sense suggest under these circumstances of depression? The system needs rousing and strengthening; not merely for an hour or two, to sink afterwards into a more pitiable condition than ever (as it assuredly would do if an ordinary alcoholic stimulant were resorted to), but radically and permanently.

How is this desirable object to be accomplished? The answer to this question, founded on the unvarying experience of a quarter of a century, is easily given. Infuse new vigor into the digestive organs by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Do not waste time in administering temporary remedies, but wake the system up by recuperating the fountain-head of physical strength and energy, the great organ upon which all the other organs depend for their nurture and support.

By the time that a dozen doses of the great vegetable tonic and invigorant have been taken, the feeble frame of the dyspeptic will begin to feel its benign influence. Appetite will be created, and with appetite the capacity to digest what it craves. Persevere until the cure is complete—until healthful blood, fit to be the material of flesh and muscle, bone and nerve and brain, flows through the channels of circulation, instead of the watery pabulum with which they have heretofore been imperfectly nourished.

A Conflict has been raging for years between the forces of the "Old School" practice of poisonous drugs, powerful potions and pills which have falsely been called Remedies on one side and Mild Correctives on the other. For many years the deadly poisons have had their sway, and potions which might well be called Death's Chained Lightning has been in the ascendency, a record of which may be found in our grave yards. A white slab marks the resting place of most of the believers of this false doctrine. But a reformation has began, and the people are fast finding out that in Dr. Smith's OLD STYLE BITTERS they have a mild, yet perfect corrective of the Liver and Blood; a pleasant, yet reliable alterative; a gentle purgative, a splendid tonic, and a purely vegetable and anti-bilious medicine; the only remedy that gives universal satisfaction; the only remedy that is quick to cure your every ail. Yet perfectly harmless, they are a mild corrective and contain none of those "Old School" poisons which have made such sad havoc, the record of which should make us shudder at the very thought of them. Address, Union Medicine Co., 6 and 8 North 2d St., St. Louis, Mo.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia, and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. Ayer's Sarsaparilla expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

ROSADALIS

THE GREAT ALTERATIVE AND BLOOD PURIFIER.

It is not a quack nostrum. The ingredients are published on each bottle of medicine. It is used and recommended by Physicians wherever it has been introduced. It will positively cure SCROFULA in its various stages, RHEUMATISM, WHITE SWELLING, GOUT, GOITRE, BRONCHITIS, NERVOUS DEBILITY, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood. Send for our Rosadalis Almanac, in which you will find certificates from reliable and trustworthy Physicians, Ministers of the Gospel and others.

Dr. R. Wilson Carr, of Baltimore, says he has used it in cases of Scrofula and other diseases with much satisfaction.

Dr. T. C. Pugh, of Baltimore, recommends it to all persons suffering with diseased Blood, saying it is superior to any preparation he has ever used.

Rev. Dabney Ball, of the Baltimore M. E. Conference South, says he has been so much benefitted by its use, that he cheerfully recommends it to all his friends and acquaintances.

Craven & Co., Druggists, at Gordonsville, Va., say it never has failed to give satisfaction.

Sam'l G. McFadden, Murfreesboro', Tennessee, says it cured him of Rheumatism when all else failed.

THE ROSADALIS IN CONNECTION WITH OUR

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked. "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the Sarsaparillian Resolvent excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

Tumor of 12 Years' Growth Cured by RADWAY'S RESOLVENT.

PRICE $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

The Sun.

NEW YORK, 1873-4. WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible, and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party, and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies, and the markets for the men, especially the cattle markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have THE WEEKLY SUN at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six Columns. Only $1.00 a year, no discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun, $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to Clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four page newspaper of twenty-eight Columns. Daily Circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6 a year. To Clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

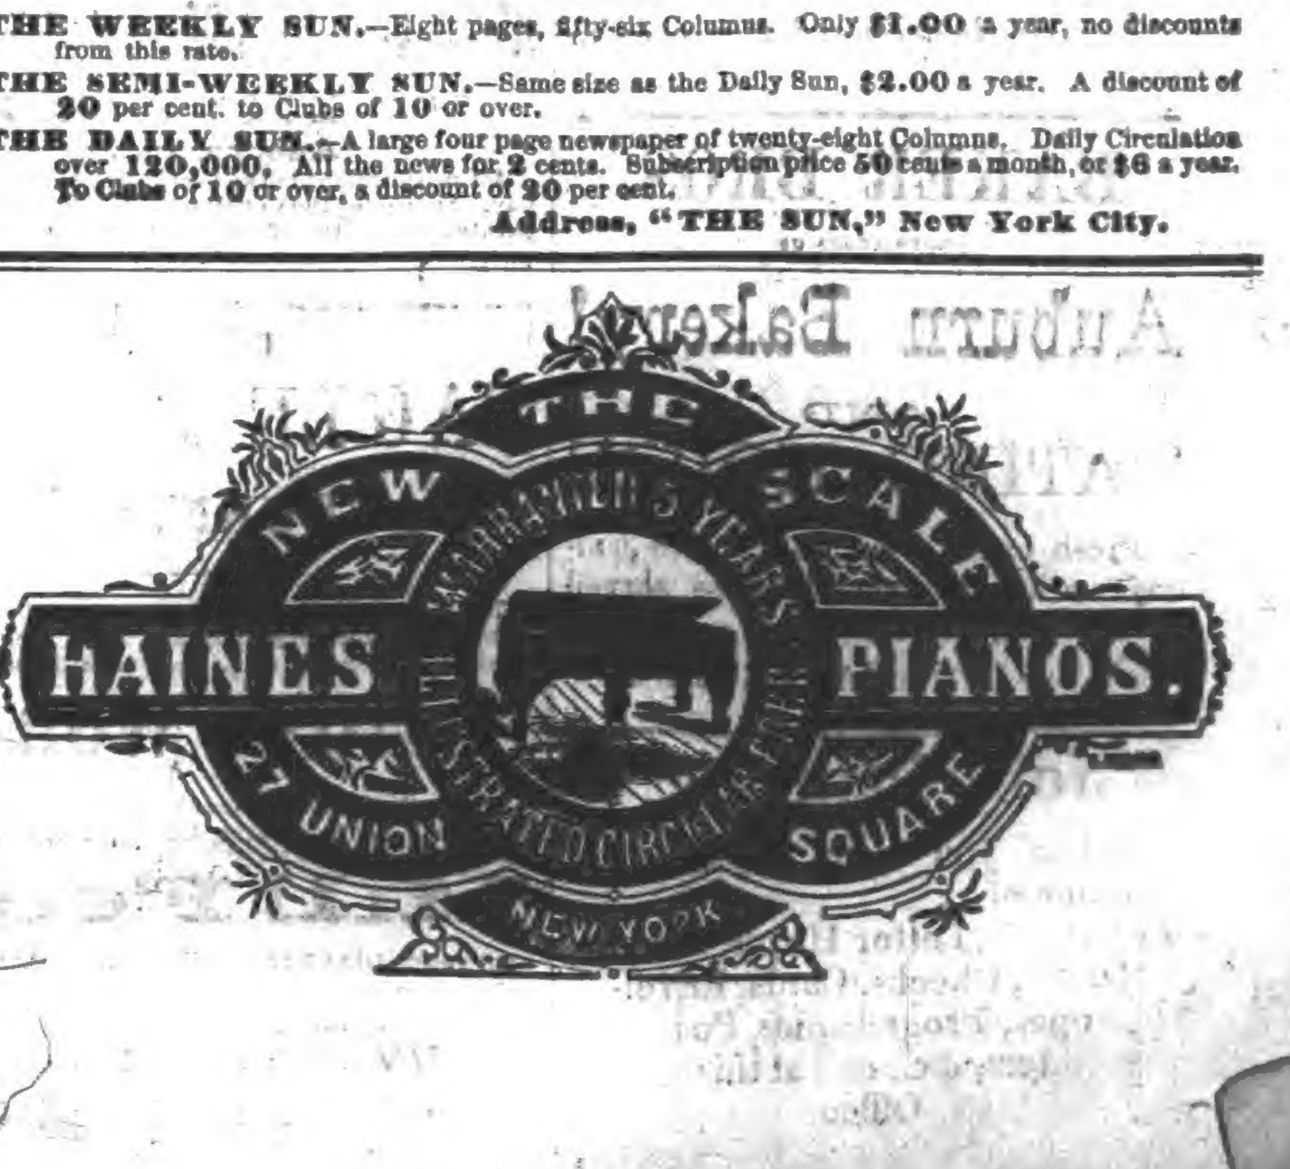
Address, "THE SUN," New York City.



A letter by Gen. Joseph E. Johnston has recently been published, in which we notice the expression that he is not a citizen of the United States.

Well, if Gen. Johnston is not a citizen of the United States he ought to be made one as quick as possible. When such persons as Longstreet flourish as citizens, men of honor and sincerity like Gen. Johnston ought not to be excluded.

John E. Neff, who beat Gen. Shanks for Congress by 14 majority in the Ft. Wayne district, and then was refused the certificate of election, by Gov. Baker, has petitioned for a mandate to compel Gov. Hendricks to show cause why the certificate is with held from him. The court calls upon Gov. Hendricks to defend the case by the 25th inst. Neff was the Democratic candidate. It is claimed that a mistake in the returns was what gave him his small majority and that Shanks is really the successful candidate.

Tom Corwin, as he was familiarly called, was certainly one of the great men of this nation. He was Governor of Ohio, member of the Senate, Congressman, Secretary of the Treasury and President Lincoln's Minister to Mexico until the advent of Maximilian—and yet his grave, at Newark, O., is without a headstone. Neiher personal nor political friends, nor the State whose annals his abilities did so much to illustrate, have been willing to expend even fifty dollars to mark his last resting place, as we learn from an exchange which claims to know.

We hear of a good many members of Congress who have not yet returned their back bay, but now for the first time we hear of a member who has used the ill got cash to build a monument to perpetuate his own infamy. The Chenango Union informs us that the Hon. E. H. Prindle has invested his share of the grab (say $5,000) in a beautiful brick block in Norwich, which structure is called and known as the Government Building. We admit that we rather like Mr. Prindle's pluck. He at least is square and honest in his dishonesty. We hope that the building is a strong one, likely to last for a good while after Prindle has gone to settle the matter elsewhere, and remain a warning to all future Prindles.—N. Y. Tribune.

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE.

The Baltimore-Chicago Route, Via Kankakee.

Its Princely Equipment.

It is at all times pleasant te be enabled to chronicle a step in the right direction, and in railroad matters in this our land of magnificent distances to observe improvements which obviate the tedium of travel and rob the long hours of a protracted journey of half their weariness.

Pullman's efforts to this end have been rewarded with well-deserved success, and, in response to the reiterated demands of the English press. his cars have recently been introduced into Great Britain. Good as they always were, new improvements are continually added, and the latest and best of all have just been adopted by the Baltimore and Ohio Railway upon what is known as the Baltimore-Chicago route These improvements are of the greatest consequence to our city, as by their means the route which lies past our gates will be rendered so attractive that much of the Eastern travel and trade previously diverted to other points will, almost perforce, seek their natural center here, and still further stimulate our business activity, Henceforth the arrangements for traveling by day or night, for eating, drinking and sleeping, for living in fact, if need be, upon the Baltimore and Ohio, will be second to none in the country and vastly superior to any in Europe, not even excepting the royal carriages of France and Germany.

The Company being about to open a new connection, to be called the Baltimore-Chicago or Kankakee Route, resolved to equip it throughout with the most elegant rolling stock that mechanical ingenuity and good taste combine : could effect. As an example of what a liberal expenditure could do they determined to build twelve Palace Cars of the most approved pattern, and fitted up not comfortably merel. but luxuriously. These, owing to the speed at which their construction was required. were necessarily contracted for in different sections of the country, those centers being invariably chosen in which thh best work is turned out, and where experience has developed the greatest taste in design and durability of workmanship For both these essentials of a machine shop of the highest excellence in railway rolling stock, Dayton, Ohio, stands deservedly pre-eminent, and among all her manufacturers none rank higher than the Barney & Smith Manufacturing Company, and to that Company the erection of two of these twelve cars has consequently been intrusted.

Passing through Dayton yesterday, we had an opportunity of examining the establishment, which, by the way, occupies more than twenty acres, and is exclusively devoted to building and finishing railway stock. Of this opportunity we availed ourselves, and, having been most courteously received, are thus enabled to tell the traveling public something of the comforts and splendor in preparation for their couvenience.

These cars, as a primary essential, are so admirably planned and built that they may be made perfectly dust-proof. The joints and groving of the doors and windows fit so exactly that, while ventilation is secured, the dust in summer never enters, and in winter no draughts can injuriously effect the most delicate invalid. By day they appear as well appointed as the most luxurious drawing-room, and the coming travelers by the Patuxent, as one, and the Patapsco, as the other is called, will not easily discover a hotel so comfortable and well fitted The interior is resplendent with gold filagree work of the most exquisite design, and when folded up the bunks display medallions of rare inlaid woods stained in the daintiest hues and harmony of coloring —green, white, black with their various shades, and what artists call their correspondents are blended with a skill so rare that nothing is left for the most exacting to desire. Treading upon soft Axminster carpets, the passenger may pass from the drawing-room to the smoking-room In both the seats are of the richest scarlet plush from the famous looms of Lyons, and in both lounging-chairs, sofas and divans invite the rest of the weary. We spoke of living almost in these cars, and, to perfect the illusion, wathing and bathing rooms and with-drawing closets, all finished in the rare French black walnut, capable of the highest polish. have been added, suited for a long or even a short journey. By night the cars are equally well fitted, well ventilated and commodious Lighted with mirror lamps, with concave reflectors, the light is soft and subdued. On each side of the ailses heavy damask curtains, rich in pattern and design and gracefully draped, screen the sleepers, while the shaded light from without woos sleep without producing absolute darkness. The heating apparatus, unseen, under the seats, and diffusing an equal and easily regulated temperature. While all danger of fire is thus obviated comfort even in the coldest December or January days is easily secured. Another novelty is an arrangement by means of which a party of four a mother and her daughters for instance, can secure to themselves in perfect privacy an elegant state-room.

These private compartments are also fitted up with separate bathing rooms and closets, and in all their appointments are equal to the conveniences provided for the general public. At a moment they can be thrown open to the general drawing-room, or the privacy the most exclusive can desire can be obtained throughout the whole journey.

In all and for all the bedding and bed furniture is the sweetest and cleanest and freshest. Viewed from without the Patuxent and Patapsco present a splendid appearance. Scarlet and gold, black and delicate olive. are harmoniously added to the adornment, and with the polished and varnished wood-work underlying all, are as handsome as the entrance to the best equipped boudoir. We need not enter into any further details, what we have said will satisfy the traveling public that a rich boon is being prepared to console and make pleasant those hours hither to devoted to ennui and discomfort—Cin. Enquier.

A Warning to Lovers.

"Matilda, you are the most good-for nothin', triflin', owdacious, contrary piece that ever lived."

"Oh, ma!" sobbed Matilda, "I couldn't help myself—no, 'deed I couldn't."

"Couldn't help yourself? That's a pretty way to talk. Ain't he a nice young man?

"Yes'm."

"And got money?"

"Yes'm."

"And has got good kinfolks?"

"Yes'm.,'

"Well, in the name o' common sense, what did you send him home for?"

"Well, ma, if I must tell the truth, I must, I s'pose, tho' I'd rather die. You see, ma, when he fetcht his cheer close to mine, and ketcht hold of my hand, and squez it, and dropt on his knees, then it was his eyes rolled, and he began breathin' hard, and his gallowses kept a creakin' and a creakin, till I thought in my soul somethin' terrible was the matter with his in'ards, his vitals; and that flustered and skeered me so that I bust out crying. Seeing me do that, he creaked worse'n ever, and that made me cry harder; and the harder I cried the harder he creaked, till all of a sudden it came to me that it wasn't nothin but his gallowses; and then I bust out laughin' fit to kill myself right in his face. And then he jumped up and run out of the house mad as fire; and he ain't comin back no more. Boo-hoo; ahoo, boohoo."

"Metildy," said the old woman strenly, "stop yer snivlin. You've made an everlastin' fool of yourself, but yer cake ain't all dough yet. It all comes of them no 'count fashionable sto' gallowses—'spenders, I b'lieve they call 'em. Never mind, honey. I'll send for Johnny, tell him how it happened, 'pologize to him, an' knit a real nice pair of yarn gallowses, jest like yer pa's; and they never do creak."

"Yes, ma," said Matilda, brightening up, "let me knit'em."

"So you shall, honey; he'll vally them a heap more than if I knit 'em. Cheer up, Tildy, it'll all be right—you mind if it won't."

Sure enough, it proved to be all right, Tildy and Johnny were married and Johnny's gallowses never creaked any more.

The statement of the public debt shows a reduction for last month of $1,901,497. The reduction is not as large as was expected. The stringency in the money market has prevented Grant from making his usnal payments.

"Die With my Face to the Foe."

A writer in the Louisville Journal tells the following amusing story of the rebellion:

A single shot, followed by a loud shriek, told us that one of my best men Bradley, was wounded. He proclaimed his agony with a loud voice. turned over on his back, and commenced kicking so vigorously that the surgeon had difficulty in getting in reach of him.

"Poor fellow!" said the doctor, as he saw the whitish liquid oozing out; "shot in the bladder. I am afraid it's fatal."

And he commenced opening his coat.

"Oh, my God!" said Bradley, "I am a dead man. I shall never get over it."

"Keep up your spirits my boy; never say die," said Capt. Johnson, kneeling over him.

"Doctor," asked the wounded soldier, feebly, "will you write to my mother, and tell her that I died bravely, doing my duty, with my face to the foe, and that I thought of her when I was dying?"

"Yes, yes," said the doctor, with dim eyes, and husky voice; "I will write to her, and tell her too."

But suddenly springing to his feet, with an indignant voice, added;

"Why, confound it, man, you are not hurt a bit. It's only your canteen that's shot, and that's the water from it. Get up, will you?"

Bradly raised up slowly, felt himself all over, and with an exceedingly foolish countenance, crawled back to his position, amid the uproarous laughter of the whole regiment.

For months after that, on the march or in camp, and sometimes in the stillness of the night, you would hear a voice in one direction demanding:

"What shall I tell your mother?" and perhaps a half a dozen other responses would be heard; "Tell her I died with my face to the foe," and then "Canteen Bradley', would come out, and angrily hunt for the man that said it. He seldom found him, but when he did, there was certain to be a fight.

HOSPITALITY.

For real whole-souled hospitality and entertainment Arkansas is the place to go. An editor of the Little Rock Gazette was invited to the pleasant little town of Fulton, on the occasion of a railroad celebration. After seeing the lions, which were principally the saloons of "Charly" this "Joe" that, etc., the following realistic scene concludes the picture:

Fulton is wild by night. One man roamed the streets spoiling for a fight and at last he got it and was laid out. His battle cry was:

"I'm a wolf, and it's my night to howl."

In the hotel, about ten o'clock, sat a tall, long haired Texan. His raven locks reached far below his showlders He said not a word to either proprietor or guest. At last one of the laborers went up to him, slapped him familiarly on the shoulder and said:

"Say, stranger, if I was a louse I'd swim Red River twice to get in your head of hair."

The last seen of the bold railroader his coat tails were disappearing over the banks of Red River, closely followed by a pair of Texas boots.

The Modocs, while under the death sentence, are kept in close confinement twice a week, however, they are permitted to air themselves under strict guard. They borrow very little trouble about death. "Curly headed Doctor" misses his whiskey about as much as he does his freedom. Captain Jack has gained flesh rapidly of late and is in good spirits. He says he does not fear death, but will be ashamed to be hung by the neck. He prefers to die like a warrior—to be shot. A Correspondent of the San Francisco Bulleton says that the disposition of Captain Jack's remains is a question in which many professional gentlemen take a lively interest at the present time, and one which may cause considerable trouble. An embalmer named Sherwood, recently visited the military headquarters at Klamath for information in regard to the execution etc., remarking that he had consumated a bargain with Jack for his body after death, and had a receipt showing that he had already paid the purchase money. An officer advanced the idea that Jack's life and body were the property of the Government and neither could be taken without its consent Mr. Sherwood having replied that he might invoke the aid of the civil courts he finally concluded to open a correspondence with the Secretary of War on the subject. The embalmer desires to exhibit Jack for coin.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The Financial Outlook.

The improvement in the financial situation during the last few days has been most marked. The storm is over, and the business of the country is rapidly settling back into its old channels. Returning ease is apparent in the operations of the New York banks, which are sending greenbacks to the West and South to move the crops; the supply of currency is fully equal to the demand; there is a further advance in foreign exchange, and an active and cheerful tone in produce and cotton. The feeling in the West and South is one of safety and security. In Chicago, prices of grain have advanced, the September settlements were made without difficulty, and the Board of Trade has rescinded its resolution suspending certain rules, thus re-establishing the transactions of members in contracts and options on the old footing. Everywhere throughout the country there is the same evidence of a restoration of public confidence.

The East.

The Masonic fraternity of Philadelphia have just dedicated with imposing ceremonies their new temple, said to be the largest and finest in the world.

A statement of assets and liabilities of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., of Philadelphia, New York, and Washington, has been submitted to their creditors. The following is a summary:

Liabilities, $7,939,409.

ASSETS.
Bills receivable, bank, insurance, and other stocks, bonds, and real estate	$ 7,867,640
Loans to Northern Pacific Railroad Co.	3,750,000
Stock of the Oregon Steam Navigation Co.	1,500,000
Loans to Northern Pacific Railroad Co., on bonds of company	4,068,215
Second-mortgage railroad bonds, stocks, etc.	2,530,356
Total	$15,966,211

The above exhibit of liabilities is exclusive of $1,701,140 loans of the firm, which are fully secured by good collaterals. The excess of collaterals upon these loans has been estimated and included in the assets. The firm expects soon to submit a proposition for settlement with its creditors, which it believes will be acceptable to the latter, although it will of course require time in the conversion of its assets....The city of Pittsburgh was thrown into an immense state of excitement, the other day, by the announcement that the Postmaster, John H. Stewart, had proved a defaulter to a large amount. He was bound over in $50,000. The defalcation amounts to about $75,000. The Government, it is said, loses nothing.

A serious collision, resulting in the death of three or four persons, occurred last week on the New York Midland railroad. The accident was occasioned by a freight conductor, whose watch was too slow. Wouldn't it be well for railway officials to see to it that their employes have correct time-pieces? This reckless slaughter of human life solely because an engineer or conductor happens to carry a worthless watch is becoming monotonous....An examination of the affairs of the Pittsburgh Postoffice shows that the office has been conducted in a very loose and careless manner....The bodies of Mrs. O'Mara and her daughter were found dead on the railway track near Montrose Station, Penn., last week. Suspicion points to the horrible fact that they were murdered and placed there by Daniel O'Mara, a son and brother of the deceased....Charles J. Riddle, one of the proprietors of the Philadelphia Age, is dead.

Charles Francis Adams, Jr., Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition, has returned home, and a Boston dispatch says he will make a report to the Massachusetts Legislature that will astonish the public....The whole number of claims submitted to the American and British Mixed Commission, which recently completed its labors at Newport, R. I., was 497, the claimants making reclamation, in the aggregate, of the enormous sum of $95,000,000. Of these claims only 181 were allowed, the gross sum of which awards reaches $1,929,236. Awards were only made against the United States in cases were property was taken, used or appropriated by the authorities of the United States, and in cases of the illegal imprisonment of British subjects during the late war....A highly important witness in the Stokes case, whose testimony, it is said, will create great excitement, has just been arrested in New York, at the instance of the District Attorney.

The West.

A balloonist named John H. Boley met his death in a horrible manner at Wapello, Iowa, last week. His hot-air balloon caught fire as it left the ground, and carried him up, unconscious of the flames above him, till at the height of 1,500 feet the ropes that supported the car on which he was preforming some gymnastic feats burned away, and he fell to the ground. His body was frightfully mangled, the fall driving his legs into the hard ground up to his knees....Isaiah Ditts has just been arrested near Leavenworth, Kansas, for a murder committed near Cairo, Ill., seventeen years ago.

The Chicago Inter-State Industrial Exposition is proving a grand success. Notwithstanding the opening occurred at the very height of the financial panic, the "send-off" which it received exceeded the expectations of its projectors. The average daily attendance for the first week was over 20,000....The mining town of Fair Play, Col., has been almost totally destroyed by fire......Rev. George Randall, Episcopal Bishop of Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming, died recently in Denver, aged 63.

Joseph H. Fore, who has created two or three sensations in St. Louis by attempts on the life of his wife, and by killing his father-in-law, caused an unusual rumpus in the Criminal Court in that city, the other day, while on trial for a deadly assault upon his wife with a hatchet. Fore seized a large cut-glass ink-stand from the table and hurled it at his wife with great force. The missile missed its mark and struck an attorney square in the forehead, cutting an ugly gash, and nearly knocking him senseless. Fore was immediately seized by the Marshal and others, and, after a struggle, during which nearly all his clothes were torn off, he was taken from the court-room and order restored....The flue of a boiler in a saw-mill near Bridgeport, Mich., collapsed the other day, killing an old man, and throwing a horse 300 feet. Notwithstanding the horse was not seriously injured, the harness was torn from its body....Three suits have been begun by the United States Government against defaulting Collector Harper, of the Springfield (Ill.) District, and his securities on the three bonds filed by them when he took the office. The sum claimed in each suit is $100,000.

The State of Illinois has just paid to the city of Chicago $100,000, being the last of the principal of the canal-indemnity fund. There is yet due the sum of $100,000 for accrued interest, upon the payment of which the State will run and control its canal free from debt or liens....The Indiana State Exposition, at Indianapolis, has proved a brilliant success....Willie Neff, aged 14, was instantly killed at Chillicothe, Ohio, the other day, by being struck in the stomach by the elbow of a lad with whom he was playing....A dispatch from Portland, Oregon, says work on the Northern Pacific railroad is not suspended. It is expected that cars will be running to Tacoma this autumn....The Union National (Coolbaugh's) Bank, of Chicago, has gone into voluntary liquidation, and is paying all its creditors dollar for dollar.

The State Constitutional Commission of Michigan has voted to incorporate in the organic law of the State a clause forbidding railroad companies to issue free passes to any persons except employes of their own or other lines, and making violation of this law a misdemeanor....The shipments of lumber from the Saginaw river of Michigan to date are 491,163,000 feet, against 349,000,000 feet for the same time last year....The Valley Iron Company, the heaviest nail manufacturing firm in the Mahoning Valley of Ohio, has suspended. Other firms, it is feared, will have to follow....The Indians of Kansas are again becoming troublesome..Ex-Secretary of the Interior Jacob D. Cox has been elected President of the Toledo, Wabash and Western railroad....The United States Signal Station on the summit of Pike's Peak has been completed. An observer will remain there all winter and important scientific disclosure are expected....James Allen and Charles Edwards, of Houghton, Mich., recently settled a quarrel by a duel, posting themselves in opposite corners of a billiard-room. Three shots were fired. Edwards was unharmed, but his adversary received a bullet in his back and one in his brain, from the effects of which he died....The receipts of live-stock at the Chicago Stock Yards, for the month of September were as follows: Receipts—Cattle, 65,394; hogs, 239,512; sheep, 16,794. Shipments—Cattle, 44,301; hogs, 191,241; sheep, 1,975....California shipped to Great Britain, during September, 602,696 centals of wheat, amounting to $1,289,280....The Supreme Court of Illinois has confirmed the constitutionality of the new liquor law of the State.

The South.

The yellow fever is on the increase in Memphis. There were twenty-one deaths from the disease on Thursday....A New Orleans dispatch says: "Dr. Burns telegraphs as follows from Shreveport: 'We arrived yesterday and held a meeting of physicians at night. The disease is yellow fever, a true homœgastric pentilence. Its origin is still obscure, and its character malignant. The deaths are between 50 and 60 per cent. About 400 deaths so far. More than half the population have fled. Every one is working bravely.'"

Montgomery Parker, a farmer of Fayette county, Ky., the other day quarreled with a boy in his employ, discharged him, and then followed and shot the lad down in the highway, while begging for mercy. The miscreant escaped....Murfreesboro, Tenn., has just had a $60,000 blaze.

A fire recently burned two squares and a half of buildings in Brenham, Texas....The population of Shreveport, La., has been fearfully htinned out by the yellow fever pestilence. The town has been compelled, through the Howard Association, to make an appeal for aid. The Times of the 1st says: "We no longer have funerals. The hearses, followed by one or two carriages, dash through the streets like a section of artillery in a battle, seeking a position. A few more are drummed up, the coffins put into the hearse, and driven rapidly to the cemetery. This is the case even with the most prominent citizens."

The last rail on the Cairo, Arkansas and Texas railroad has been laid, and through trains now run from Cairo to Texarkana, on the eastern border of Texas.

The New Orleans Picayune estimates the cotton crop at not less than 4,000,000 bales....The first Ku-Klux trial before the North Carolina State Courts has just come off at Raleigh, N. C., and resulted in the conviction of three persons—two white and one colored—of murder in the first degree. They were sentenced to be hung on the 13th of November....J. A. Stephens, cashier of the St. Louis Mutual Life Insurance Company, has decamped with $6,500 of the institution's funds....The cotton crop of the Rio Grande valley has been seriously damaged by floods....The report, started by a Mexican paper, that armed United States soldiers had made another raid into Mexico, is untrue.

Washington.

The September report of the Department of Agriculture indicates that the yield of maize will be somewhat lower than that of last year....In response to an inquiry whether a person who sells brandy peaches, brandy cherries, etc., is liable to a special tax as a liquor dealer, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue replies that unless said articles are bona fide sold as such, and contain only the necessary quantity of brandy to preserve the fruit, the dealer must pay a special tax for selling brandy....Two roughs who, while partially drunk, called out to President Grant in a rude and boisterous manner as he was riding to church with his family last Sunday, were arrested and fined $5 for disorderly conduct.

Mrs. Bella Lockwood has been admitted to practice as an attorney in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia....The financial troubles have caused a large falling off of internal revenue receipts....The Comptroller of the Currency states that he cannot legally appoint a receiver for a national bank on account of refusals by a national bank to pay money, which gives certified checks in lieu therefor, as is now the general practice in nearly all of the large cities....A Washington dispatch says a printed circular will be sent to the creditors of Jay Cooke & Co., stating the terms of compromise which they have decided to offer, and that nothing further will likely be done until replies have have been received from all the creditors....The official statement shows that the United States currency of all kinds outstanding at this date is $402,823,030.

Secretary Richardson says that the Government will lose nothing by the suspension of Clews & Co., in New York, or Clews, Habicht & Co., in London; also, that if Jay Cooke & Co. pay 33 per cent. the Government will be no loser by the failure of the First National Bank. He thinks that the country will be gratified to find in the public debt statement that the "reserve" has not yet been touched, though he reiterates his purpose of using it whenever he judges it to be necessary....The public debt statement for September shows a reduction of $1,901,467. The following are the figures:

Six per cent. bonds	$1,235,000,200

Foreign.

Several persons were killed and injured by a recent railway accident near Carlisle, England....The deaths are announced of Sebastiano Olazaga, the well-known Spanish statesman; Jean Chacornac, the eminent French astronomer; and James Clay, member of Parliament for Hull, England....Dissensions in the ranks of the Carlists in Spain continue, and they are growing disheartened. Money, artillery and ammunition are growing uncomfortably scarce.....A Paris telegram says: Members of the Right assert that the Assembly will declare in favor of the restoration of a monarchy before November.

Railway accidents are becoming alarmingly frequent in England. A recent London telegram records nine accidents in one day on English railroads....The Spanish town of Alicante was recently bombarded by the insurgent iron-clads, which got handsomely whipped, and were compelled to withdraw....It is announced that Thiers will assume the leadership of the opposition in the French Assembly....Louisa Muhlbach, the celebrated German novelist, is dead.

The typhoid fever prevails to an alarming extent in London....The Carlists in the north of Spain have recently met with a series of damaging reverses. Discontent and demoralization are spreading in their ranks....In the meantime, the enthusiasm for the national cause is increasing in the northern Provinces....Eight persons were killed in Alicante during the bombardment....The police have closed the gambling houses in Madrid.

It is stated that France has resolved to carry out, with great activity, the execution of a general plan which will bind together all the fortifications in France by connecting them with Paris....The important announcement is made by telegraph from Paris that Cardinial Gaston de Bonnechase has gone to Rome for the purpose of inviting the Pope to make a journey to Paris to witness the ceremonies of the re-establishment of monarchy, and consecrate de Chambord as King Henry V. of France....Thomas Hughes is lecturing in England on America. He advises all who desire to emigrate to go to Canada or the United States....Don Carlos, as King of Spain, has issued a postage-stamp bearing his portrait....Three criminals lately executed at Tobe, Japan, were beheaded, their skulls battered in, the brains scooped out, and the hearts torn from the bodies....The price of coal is steadily advancing in England....Accidents continue of frequent occurrence on the British railways. The latest and most serious was on the London and Edinborough Express, in which several were killed and wounded....France has been divided into eighteen military departments, under the following commanders: D'Aumale, Clinchaut, Montaudon, Lebrun, Beligna, Bataille, Douay, Ducrot, Cissey, Pourcet, Lallemand, Lartigue, Picard, Bourbaki, Espivont, Aymard, Fenelon, and Palladines....The natives of Omao, a town in one of the West India Islands, lately committed a gross outrage upon the British Consul and imprisoned several of Her Majesty's subjects. The British war-steamer Niobe demanded satisfaction of the authorities, which being refused, she proceeded to bombard the fort, which was silenced after three hours' fighting, in which several of the enemy were killed and wounded. The affair was arranged by the release of the imprisoned British subjects, and the payment of an indemnity of $30,000.

The Carlists of Spain are meeting with reverses in every direction. Several leaders have deserted their commands. A Madrid dispath says hundreds of deserters from Cartagena are coming into the lines. They represent that demoralization and insubordination within the city are increasing....John Bright has been formally installed as a British Cabinet officer....Sir Edwin Landseer, the celebrated painter, died in London on the 1st inst., aged 71....Central America continues to be agitated by political troubles. Panama is constantly menaced by the revolutionists, and troops are kept constantly under arms. Filibusters are said to be continually arriving from New Orleans, a great many of whom are blacks....It is denied that Cardinal Bornechase's mission to Rome had any reference to the French monarchical question....This is a good season for sick monarchs. The King of Saxony is the latest, and his recovery is pronounced doubtful.

Political.

There has been another revolution in Arkansas politics. The Attorney-General has dismissed the suit against Gov. Baxter, the latter has disbanded the militia, and the Republican organ at Little Rock has declared in favor of Baxter. The Governor declares that his general policy will remain unchanged, albeit charges are freely made that he has sold out.

General.

James Gibbons, ex-President of the Fenian Brotherhood, is dead.

The schooner Three Brothers recently foundered on the coast of Newfoundland, and all on board, twenty-one in number, were lost....Recent deaths: John B. Baldwin, a prominent Virginian, and ex-Speaker of the Confederate House of Representatives; Lieut. Hunter, of the navy; and Admiral Winslow, also of the navy, who was in command of the Kearsarge when she sank the Alabama.

The latest official statement of the greenbacks of all kinds now outstanding places the amount at $402,923,039. The amount of National Bank notes is about $333,000,000, so that the total currency of the country now is not far from $800,000,000....The gauge of the Grand Trunk railroad of Canada has been changed from 5 feet 6 inches to the standard American width of 4 feet 8½ inches.

NORTHWESTERN FARMERS' CONVENTION.

To be Held in Chicago, Oct. 22, 1873.

The following call has been issued:

The State Central Committee of the Illinois State Farmers' Association, at the request, and with the promised cooperation, of many persons throughout the West, do hereby respectfully invite the several farmers' clubs, granges, farmers' associations, agricultural societies, boards of agriculture, and other organizations of the industrial classes of the United States and British Provinces, to send, from their own numbers, and identified with their interests, one delegate from each such organizatfon, to meet at McCormick's Hall, in the city of Chicago, on Wednesday, the 22d day of October, at 10 o'clock a. m.

The purpose of the Convention is to discuss the prevailing overcharges in transportation; to incite and perfect the organization of the agricultural and other industrial classes, who chiefly suffer from those overcharges, in every State, Territory and Province of the country, with the view of throwing a combined and overwhelming influence against their further depredations; and to take such measures as shall secure prompt amd efficient legislation, that shall end in the complete extinction of all railway and other monopolies now preying upon the productive interests of America.

It is a matter in which the great agricultural classes of the Northwest are now the chief parties interested, but in which also the welfare of nearly all the States is at stake; and we earnestly solicit and exhort the general selection and sending of the best men from every State, to take into earnest and careful consideration the causes now hindering the progress and impairing the welfare of the people. Let us have a general and able representation.

On behalf of the State Central Committee of the Illinois State Farmers' Association.

W. C. Flagg, President.
S. M. Smith, Secretary.
D. Worthington, Vice-Pres. 2d Dist.
C. E. Barney, Vice-Pres. 6th Dist.
L. F. Ross, Vice-Pres. 9th Dist.
L. C. Lawrence, Vice-Pres. 10th Dist.
T. Butterworth, Vice-Pres. 11th Dist.
John W. Hunter, Vice-Pres. 12th Dist.
Joshua Brown, Vice-Pres. 13th Dist.
J. B. Porterfield, Vice-Pres. 14th Dist.
M. M. Hooton, Vice-Pres. 16th Dist.
James Smith, Jr., Vice Pres. 17th Dist.

The public interest excited by the expression of a lady's face when she sits down on a strange gentleman's hat in church, says Blimber, is what plunges many a Christian female into a vortex of inaudible profanity.

The Financial Crash.

New York, Oct. 1.—Wall street is as quiet as usual, and matters are beginning to assume their normal condition. The crisis is over, although the scarcity of currency is seriously felt, and will be for some time to come.

The feasibility of resuming specie payment is exciting attention among our leading financiers and business men, and especially those bankers who issue bills of foreign exchange. An argument heretofore set forth, that to resume specie payment would depreciate values, can hardly be advanced, now that stocks and securities are flat.

The suspended firms are rapidly reorganizing, and promise a resumption of business before the end of the week. Howes & Macy have practically resumed already. Clews & Co. and Fisk & Hatch will resume within a few days.

The following table shows the prices current for leading stocks on Wednesday, Sept. 17, the day before Jay Cooke & Co. failed, and those current on the street to-day:

	Sept. 17.	Oct. 1.
New York Central	100⅛	89½
Lake Shore	91	71
Northwestern	57⅛	41¼
Rock Island	103⅛	88¾
Pacific Mail	43⅛	32¾
St. Paul	45⅛	32½
Western Union	89	62½
Wabash	59⅜	42¼
Union Pacific	24⅛	20
Ohio and Mississippi	37⅜	27⅞

Philadelphia, Oct. 1.—A decidedly better feeling prevails in financial circles in this city. Bank officials do not apprehend any further trouble of much consequence, and things are going along smoothly.

The members of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co. express much regret that any creditors should be influenced by the efforts of speculators to buy up claims at heavy discounts, feeling confident of their ability, if not needlessly embarrassed, to meet all their obligations with a full and satisfactory settlement. It was remarked by one of the senior partners: "Within 18 months from this time we will show the people what the house of Jay Cooke & Co. is. I would say in six months, if there was a reasonably decent money market."

Washington, Oct. 1.—The Secretary of the Treasury is no longer troubled with telegrams of inquiry from financial sources. No excitement whatever exists in that department, and the Executive Department is equally free from it, since the official announcement that the President and Secretary could do nothing more to relieve the pecuniary embarrassment.

Secretary Richardson says the statement of Jay Cooke & Co. is much better than was expected, and that advices received at the Treasury show a decidedly improved condition of affairs throughout the country.

A Visit to an Iceberg.

A correspondent of the Waterbury (Conn.) American, writing on board the United States steamer Juniata, at St. Johns, Newfoundland, July 7, says: "On the 3d inst. a large iceberg became stranded at the mouth of the harbor, and the Captain wishing some of the officers to go out with him and see it, I gladly accepted the invitation, and as soon as our party was made up we started out in the steam-launch. As we approached the berg the air grew sensibly colder, and we found it necessary to slip on our overcoats. We ran alongside of it and measured it with our eye, which gave us 25 feet high, 100 feet broad, and 400 feet long, and as that portion below the surface bears the proportion of seven to one, we can calculate the thickness of the berg to be 280, equal to 11,200,000 cubic feet, or 286,225 tons. The berg was melting so rapidly that water was flowing from it in every direction, preventing us from approaching very close to it, so we decided to go on to a smaller one and cut some ice for our own consumption. We were very successful, as we brought on board in the neighborhood of half a ton. About five minutes after leaving the large berg we heard an explosion, and looking around, saw that one end of the berg had burst off, and filled an area of about 300 feet in length of the width of the berg, so we escaped an unpleasant dampness just in time."

Death.

Dr. Bailie said that in his vast experience he had never known more than one out every fifty dying men quit life one whit more conscious than when he entered it. "Light, more light!" cries Gœthe with his parting breath. Dr. Cullen, when dying, faintly intimates to a friend: "I wish I could write; I would describe how pleasant a thing it is to die." Bacon, at the point of death, writes with incapable fingers of the snow-stuffed fowl which cost him life. Dr. Black, while eating bread and milk, dies so tranquilly that his stiffened fingers grasp the spoon with its contents unspilt. Coffee-cup in hand, the spirit of Sir Charles Blagden passes away, while Guy Lussac notes the cup of untasted coffee in the dead man's hand, not a drop having fallen to the ground. "That we live in the shadow of death is true, but the shadow is no terrible darkness that need scare or terrify us, and when it completely envelops us we shall be only

'Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.'"

Pullman Car Company.

Sleeping cars and drawing-room cars of this company are now in use on 152 different lines of railroad in the United States, on which the company have 700 cars in all, and 120 new ones have just beem completed. Twelve millions of dollars are represented in the capital stock. Every car costs from $17,000 to $20,000; one of them is running on the New York and Erie broad-gauge which cost more than $50,000. A system is in progress under this extensive organization by which they will sell tickets in London, Paris, Berlin or St. Petersburg, and contract to convey passengers to San Francisco or any other point in the United States, including everything, not only ocean travel and the care of baggage, but also the commissariat of the traveler, so that he can either find his effects at his destination, or can stop at one or more points for days and resume his journey.

A Baby Fondling a Snake.

A man and woman of Lehigh county, Cal., went to the hay-field the other day, and took their baby along and placed it in the shade. Some time after the mother noticed the child playing with a black strap, which the little one would every now and then let fall out of the wagon, and then crawl out after it, seemingly being very busy with the object it had in possession to amuse itself. Upon drawing near, it was discovered that the child was actually fondling a black snake, at least four feet in length, now wrapped around the little one's body, then again entwining itself about its neck and going through all kinds of frightful movements, its red tongue darting out of its mouth with lightning-like rapidity, and the child all the while stroking it, and joyfully laughing until the tears rolled down its cheeks. The snake was killed, to the grief of the child.

Don Carlos.

A correspondent of the London Journal has been visiting the Carlist headquarters, and thus describes a call on his "most religious Majesty": "After breakfast an aide-de-camp said his Majesty would see me, and a few minutes later I found myself in the presence of Don Carlos. The King is a fine-looking man, of commanding presence, and he towers by at least a head and shoulders over most of his suite; very dark hair, cut as short as possible, closely-cropped whiskers, a rather large bnt aquiline nose, with eyes of great brilliancy, and a mouth which slightly deteriorates the effect produced by the other features, as both it and the chin do not correspond with the firmness depicted on the rest of the face, must complete my picture of the sovereign. The effect is very prepossessing, but there is a sad, careworn expression on his Majesty's countenance, and well indeed there may be, for a great cause is at stake. Don Carlos shares the privations which, in this guerrilla warfare, everyone is exposed to, the same as the lowest soldier in the ranks, and this, added to incessant mental worry, would be enough to break down most men. He exposes his life much too freely, and the Generals are continually entreating him to be more careful; but the King won't be denied, and frequently commands in person a battery when under the heaviest fire. He is in consequence idolized by his troops, who adore their leader, and the vivas which greet his appearance are as thrilling as a hearty British cheer. Don Carlos conversed some time with me. No one deplores the war more than the King does, but he said society was being sapped to the core by the socialistic tendencies of the Republic, and, much as he loved peace, he would spare no effort to restore order and tranquility to his country. His Majesty, for I suppose he may be entitled so, as he has already been crowned by the northern provinces, is evidently not the priest-ridden bigot which he is declared to be by his enemies. He speaks French, German, and Italian with fluency, and is a perfect master of that sonorous, passionate Castilian oratory which so delights a Spanish audience."

How to Drive.

There is another point of importance in driving any horse, but especially a young horse; it is the way you handle the reins. Most drivers over-drive. They attempt too much; and, in so doing, distract or hamper the horse. Now and then you find a horse with such a vicious gait that his speed is got from him by the most artificial process; but such horses are fortunately rare, and hence the style of management required cannot become general. The true way is to let the horse drive himself, the driver doing little but directing him, and giving him that confidence which a horse alone gets in himself when he feels that a guide and friend is back of him. The most vicious and inexcusable style of driving is that which so many drivers adopt, viz.: Wrapping the lines around either hands, and pulling the horse backward with all their might and main, so that the horse, in point of fact, pulls the weight back of him with his mouth, and not with his breast and shoulders. This they do under the impression that such a dead pull is needed in order to "steady" the horse. This method of driving I regard as radically and superlatively wrong. It would tax the ingenuity of a hundred fools to invent a worse one. The fact is, with rare exceptions, there should never be any pull upon the horse at all. A steady pressure is allowable, probably advisable; but anything beyond this has no justification in nature or reason; for nature suggests the utmost possible freedom of action of head, body and limbs, in order that the animal may attain the highest rate of speed; and reason certainly forbids the supposition that by the bits, and not by the breast collar, the horse is to draw the weight attached to it. In speeding my horses I very seldom grasp the lines with both hands when the road is straight and clear from obstructions. The lines are rarely steadily taut, but held in easy pliancy, and used chiefly to shift the bit in the animal's mouth, and by this motion communicate courage and confidence to him. I find that by this method my horses break less, and go much faster, than when driven by men who put the old-fashioned steady pull upon them.—Mr. Murray's Book on "The Perfect Horse."

Shipping Cattle to Scotland—A New and Successful Enterprise.

A novel feature in American exports is the shipment of cattle from this port to Glasgow, to be slaughtered for the Scottish market. This enterprise was lately undertaken by the Glasgow firm of John Bell & Sons, the largest wholesale butchers in Scotland, who supply the Anchor line of steamships. A member of the firm, Henry Bell, is now in this city, and was questioned to-day in regard to the management and extent of the new business.

He said that the price of beef in Scotland had advanced 50 per cent. within the last ten years, in consequence of the rinderpest and the rigid restrictions subsequently imposed by the Government on the importation of cattle from abroad. Many of these restrictions are still in force, and the importation of cattle from certain continental countries is absolutely prohibited. This state of affairs determined his firm to try the experiment of obtaining cattle from the United States, the cost of the native cattle in the Glasgow market being from $150 to $225 per head. The latter price, however, is that of only the best prize oxen.

The firm sent out at first but six head, which arrived at Glasgow in an Anchor steamer in the first week in July. These proved so satisfactory that Mr. Henry Bell sailed for this country on the 12th of that month to make the enterprise a regular business. He began by sending out six head of cattle by each of the Anchor steamers, but has now increased the number to twelve. If sufficient accommodations can be obtained he intends to soon forward twenty by each vessel, making an average of forty per week. It is doubtful, hower, if the weekly average by this line can exceed more than thirty.

The cattle come from Illinois and are bought by Mr. Bell at Communipaw at an average of $100 per head. The cost of transportation, including freight charges, feed, and attendance, average about $75 per head; so that the total cost of each when landed is $175. As the animal is then usually equal in weight and quality to a native bullock costing $190 in Glasgow, the extra profit to the firm is, under favorable circumstances, about $15. No insurance is effected, as the cost of this would almost exactly counterbalance the profit.—New York Evening Post.

The New Persia.

With the removal of the first shovelful of sod for the initial railway in Persia, which a London dispatch announces, a new volume opens in the history of the East. Hitherto the Persian used to be, even more than the Chinese, the typical protest set up in satirical literature against the weaknesses and defects of Western civilization. The vast majority of people entertained very confused ideas of the empire ruled over by the Shah. In fact, there may be said to have been in most minds two Persias, quite distinct from each other: the Persia of romance, familiar to us from popular novels, like "Hadji Baba" and the Persia of reality, associated with the late famine. The former was the very ideal land of the Orient. Its gales were perfumed and love-sick, like the winds that filled the silken sails of Cleopatra's barge. Its trees had their summits in the blue heaven of poetry and dream. Its maidens were all moon-faced, and had forms like the cedar, eyes like the gazelle. The nightingale was ever singing in its groves as in those of the calm Beademeer, over which people were once wont to grow sentimental. The finest poetry, both warlike and amatory, to be found in the literature of the East belongs to Persia. We were wont to think of the country as a region of perpetual blue sky, perfumed groves, and golden waters. This was the Persia of romance, which still has a shadowy, unrecognized being in the minds of most people. The Persia of reality, especially as lately presented to us, is, unfortunately, a very different sort of a place. We have come to think of it as a land of vast, barren spaces, often treeless and seamless, baking here under a blistering sun, and blighted there by winds which have nothing of the zephyr in their breath—a land of iron and despotism and abject poverty; a land where sovereign power is all but helpless in beneficence, however potent it may be for the prevention of improvement; a land scourged by the widest and most terrible famine which has made its ghastly presence felt in modern times.

But the Shah's recent visit to Europe will have the effect to change many things. The Persian intellect is peculiarly quick, animated and observant, and the building of a railway is an event which we cannot help regarding as of historical significance, and of good omen.—Inter-Ocean.

Our Daily Supply of Heat.

It has been shown, by the researches of Sir John Herschel and Pouillet, that on the average our earth receives, each day, a supply of heat competent to heat an ocean 260 yeards deep over the whole surface of the earth, from the temperature of melting ice to the boiling point. Now, on or about June 30, the supply is about one-thirtieth less, while on or about December 30, the supply is one-thirtieth greater. Accordingly, on June 30, the heat received in a single day would be competent only to raise an ocean 251 1-3 yards deep from the freezing to the boiling point, whereas, on December 30, the heat received from the sun would so heat an ocean 268 2-3 yards deep. The mere excess of heat, therefore, on December 30, as compared with June 30, would suffice to raise an ocean more than seventeen yards deep, and covering the whole earth, from the freezing-point to the temperature of boiling water! It will not be regarded as surprising if terrestrial effects of some importance should follow from so noteworthy an excess, not merely of light and heat, but of gravitating force, of magnetic influence, and of actinic or chemical action, exerted upon the earth as a whole. Accordingly we find that there is a recognizable increase in the activity of the earth's magnetism in December and January, as compared with June and July. But assuredly the effect produced is not of such a character as to suggest that we should find the means of predicting weather, if it were possible for us now to discover any solar law of change resulting in a corresponding variation of solar action upon the earth.—Popular Science Monthly.

Jay Cooke's Losses.

"Gath" writes from Washington to the Chicago Tribune:

There is some doubt whether Jay Cooke ever accumulated any great degree of wealth. The size of his partnership, which at one time included fifteen people, would indicate numbers to make out capital. He lived a plain life in a big house, neither tasting wine nor tobacco; he worked hard, for it required his personal magnetism to push off his bonds, and they have been coming back to his presence for a good while, pressing for redemption; he was in many respects kind-hearted and with a sincere democratic nature, and he believed whatever he was doing to be a great work. But he is the victim of a belief that the war can be fought over again indefinitely, with loans, bonds, Pacific railways, and all the profligacy of that period in which he was a hero.

He is the preacher and lesson of the hour. They who would climb highest must go slow.

"The Human Frog" is the name given to a deformed inmate of the Orleans County Poor-House, near Albion, N. Y., who was born in the building 28 years ago, and has never been but once moved outside its yard. His legs and arms are contracted in such a way that he hops around after the manner of the animal from which he takes his name, and his only enjoyment consists in lying in the sun covered with muck and dirt.

The Farmers' Movement and the "Dishonest Element."

It is, of course, only prejudice in favor of gamblers, cheats, and confidence-men like Jay Cooke & Co., which impels certain Eastern organs of monopoly and its handmaid, speculative swindling, to say that "the farmers' movement in connection with the establishment of granges has had much to do in precipitating this crash." But what if the allegation be true? What if, instead of being merely one of the causes which have "precipitated a crash" that must, in the inevitable nature of things, have come sooner or later, the farmers' "efforts to restrict the railroads in their exactions" be the sole and only cause which has precipitated the crash?

Let us take this roaring bull fairly by the horns, and not seek to dodge it by any sort of evasion. What is this "crash," and its meaning? The London Times told the whole story when it said: "It is an effort of the fiscal system to get rid of its dishonest elements." It is, then, an honest and earnest response of the fiscal system to the farmers' movement, which is an effort of the political system, that includes the fiscal system, to get rid of its dishonest element.

The dishonest element in the fiscal system is admirably represented by the Jay Cooke sort of financiers, though the genesis of the dishonest element is found far behind all such persons, in that financial lie of the Federal Government which says that a promise to pay a dollar is a dollar. And who are the Jay Cookes? Men whose business activities consist in obtaining money under false pretences. The Northern Pacific railroad scheme was only one in a thousand huge "confidence games" to enable swindlers to get something for nothing. The very same organ of monopoly and swindling which asserts that the farmers' movement has done much to precipitate the bursting of the monstrous bubble of fraud and deception, confesses the truth in words deprecating the "fever of excessive speculation which has given rise to so many vast and ruinous railway schemes, professedly undertaken with the object of developing the resources of the country, but really no more than ingenious devices for the accumulation of enoromus fortunes for their projectors;" such accumulation, it should be added, to complete the truth, being wholly at the cost of the labor industry of the country. The whole process consists in taking something from men who have labored for it and giving it to men who have not earned it. Any person from the rural districts who, on a visit to New York or Chicago, has been relieved of the contents of his pocket-book by a genteel-appearing but vulgar swindler called a "confidence-man" has had an individual experience of that mode of "developing the resources of the country" which the Jay Cooke confraternity, aided by the Federal Government, have been practicing upon the whole American people ever since the passage of that measure of unspeakable scoundrelism, the so-called "legal-tender act."

The Northern Pacific railroad was projected by a ring of confidence swindlers for the purpose of swindling the people out of nearly 100,000,000 acres of land, by building a railroad (to be also owned by the swindlers) with money to be earned and paid by the people who were to be thus swindled. The Union Pacific and Central Pacific and Kansas Pacific, and the Lord hardly knows how many other so-called "national highways," had proven successful swindles of the same kind; the Northern Pacific swindlers were encouraged by the success of the kindred gangs. They would build a railroad two thousand miles in length, through a "howling wilderness" where not in half a century could a railroad be made to return a single farthing on its cost; but they would "develop the resources of the country,"—which means that by persistent lying and misrepresentation they would induce people to go into that wilderness and buy back at six dollars an acre the land which an incorruptible Congress had voted to the swindlers for nothing (or for a few shares in the swindle judiciously "placed where they could do the most good"), and give them five bushels of wheat for carrying one bushel over their road, and thus pay the whole cost of the road out of the earnings of their dupes "the people," and take their places among the grandest money nabobs of the earth, own Government, and be regarded as "public benefactors!" To carry out this stupendous confidence swindle, the "confidence men" got a charter authorizing a capital of $100,000,000, but requiring only $2,000,000 to be subscribed, and only ten per cent. of that amount to be actually paid in, making an actual available capital of only $200,000—not a fifth part of the cost of surveying the route! But unlimited power to issue bonds would furnish the money, which the dupes who were expected to pay six dollars an acre for the wilderness, and five bushels of wheat for carrying one bushel to market, would pay, principal and interest, out of the products of their labor. So, these pattern Tigg Montagus proceeded to "shove" their bonds on every money market in Christendom where they could hope to find a man with more money than mother wit. Their course of procedure was characteristic of the men and the fraudulent scheme. It was especially in religious publications that their lying advertisements were to be seen. It was under the seeming patronage of "Young Men's Christians Associations" that these sharpers piously recommended Northern Pacific bonds to their customers as "better than Government securities!" Pets of the Federal Treasury Department, with branch banking houses in all corners of the earth, and "freedmen's savings banks" wherever there appeared the chance of handling some ignorant negro's small earnings, "with a psalm-singing paradise at Put-in-Bay and a gorgeous palace at Chilton Hills, these nabobs with their saintly and sordid surroundings," succeeded by agencies of thorough dishonesty in disposing of some $85,000,000 of their paper securities, half of them to pay interest on the other half! What is their security? They have built four or five hundred miles of road altogether; they have bought some rolling stock, tools, etc., amounting, all told (according to "Poor's Railroad Manual"), to the cost value of $15,804,374.22. Besides this they have "earned" (that is, are entitled under the terms of their swindling charter to land warrants for) 10,000,000 acres of their land subsidy. Reckoning the land at Government price (qute as much as could be got for it under the hammer), and all their other assets at cost price, and it appears that the assets of this confidence concern amout to $28,054,374.22, against an indebtedness of some $85,000,000! And of "available assets," not one dollar.

Such is the utterly rotten character and worthless foundation of this Northern Pacific confidence swindle, whose timely explosion has exhibited to the country in all its lurid ghastliness the volcano of corruption, fraud, and chicanery on which rests that false appearance of things which monopolists and swindler call "the prosperity of the country," but which the men who really make all the prosperity that any country can enjoy are discovering is not prosperity, but robbery by confidence games of which they are the victims. If their indignant uprising against this monstrous mode of plunder; if their vigorous and angry protests against the "saintly and sordid" confidence rogues that have so long been taking their earnings under false pretenses, and without giving the least return for value received; if their earnest efforts to get rid of the dishonest element in our political and fiscal system; if the "farmers' movement," which certainly comprehends these meanings, has been instrumental in precipitating the inevitable crash, then let every element of honesty in the land si[illegible]dest paens of praise to the farme[illegible]vement for the good it has alread[illegible]one, and the greater good which it is destined to accomplish in purging the body politic, political, financial or commercial, of its "dishonest elements."—Chicago Times.

The Ovation to Gov. Booth.

The following was the address made by Gov. Booth at San Francisco on the 14th of September, on the occasion of the popular ovation given him in that city:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: Standing in the presence of this vast living humanity, conscious for the moment I am the focus of thousands and thousands of eyes, the feeling that predominates in my breast is not one of pride; it is not one of gratified vanity or any exaltation of spirit, but rather a feeling of personal insignificance—the realization of the littleness, the nothingness of any individual, except in so far as he represents a correct, right-thinking public opinion. [Cheers.] We have recently been informed, perhaps not by designing lips, that there was no danger from single or combined monopoly, because the people always had it in their power to redress their wrongs and vindicate their rights. I confess that I do not understand what force there can be in the argument for the indefinite continuance of any abuse, because a day of reckoning will come. A day of wrath may come, when the people will destroy that abuse. [Cheers.]

If I have read history aright—if I have interpreted human affairs correctly—oppression in some form is a rule; popular liberty is the exception. It is just as true as it is trite, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." It is a price that must be paid day by day, and every day, if we would preserve that inestimable boom. Under a republican government political parties grow up for the purpose of giving form and expression to public opinion. At length there comes a time when designing men manipulate machinery in order to defeat a fair expression of the public will. When that time does come, parties must be reformed or they must be destroyed. [Cheers.] We must still go to the living masses themselves to ascertain their will, and not to any clique or ring or private office to learn what their will ought to be. [Renewed cheering.] When that will is expressed under the forms of law it ought to be obeyed. Whoever resists it, whoever endeavors to defeat it, becomes a public enemy. That will has been expressed here. It is expressed before me now. [Cheers.] We have just been told by the President of the Central Pacific railroad that your will has been most unwisely, most foolishly expressed. [Groans.] He attempts to play again the role of Nicholas Biddle. When Jackson vetoed the bank, and the people sustained the veto, Biddle and the bank threatened to ruin the material prospects of this country. They didn't ruin worth a cent. [Laughter and applause.]

We are told that the first effect of this great popular expression is to destroy the European market for railroad bonds. Whoever has studied that market, knows there has been no difference in the prices before and since the election. If there had been a previous decline you must look for the causes in s me reason more potent, more business-like than this. The company have thought, if there had been a different result, that they could have made a fictitious credit for their bonds. But if their credit is as they represent it, substantial and well-founded, it needs no bolstering of yours; it needs no favor of you. [A voice—The people are with you.] But even if it were true; if the basis of the credit of their securities was the belief that that company could control the political destinies of the State, the sooner it were destroyed the better for us all. [Great applause.] The time has not come—the time never will come—when this people will put in pledge their manhood to anticipate the building of a few miles of railroad. [Renewed applause.]

It is not too much to say, my fellow-citizens, that the issues of this contest have been watched all over the Union with a deep, pervading interest. It has been instinctively felt that beneath it was the underlying principle that was involved in the contest; the qestion whether the Government was to be administered for the benefit of the many who support it, or for the few who are supported by it. [Great laughter and applause.] Let it be known for all time that in a good cause it is safe to appeal directly to the judgment, the conscience and the patriotism of this people. [Cheers.] Let it be known for all time that, while Cæsar may have a party and Pompey a party, you stand for Rome. [Continued cheering.] For myself, from a heart overflowing with gratitude, let me return the thanks which words cannot express for your generous kindness and unfailing trust. You cannot trust me with the faith, the whole fath, with which I trust you. Good night. [Great and prolonged cheering.]

The Black Friday of 1869.

[From the New York World.]

While the other great commercial crises which at different epochs have held the credit of the country in the balance have been brought about more by the blundering of financiers than through the systematic efforts on the part of any one man to effect such results, Black Friday was solely and entirely the work of a clique, of which Jay Gould was the head. During the crash of failures on that dismal day the cry was not that "some one had blundered," but that a great crime was being committed. The history of this crime is the history of Black Friday, which was a massacre in the midst of a financial peace. In August, 1869, there was from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 of floating gold, and gold was weak at 131. There was $80,000,000 in the Sub-Treasury, but somebody promised that the Government would not sell. The clique, therefore, could buy gold without fear. In the middle of September it bought $9,000,000 at 133½@134 in one batch. On the morning of Wednesday, the 22d, it held several millions more than there was in the city of New York outside the Sub-Treasury, and yet the price had been forced no higher than 141. The clique settled its plans on Thursday evening. It had loaned gold in immense sums at 138. The plan at first was to call in all this, lock it up, and force the bears to settle by buying in under the rule. The Tenth National Bank was to have been used to shift the immense sums, but the appearance of the bank examiners unsettled this plan, and the programme was to put gold up swiftly and frighten the bears into direct settlements. As it was, the officials of the bank agreed to certify to an unlimited extent night and day. On Thursday it did certify checks amounting to $25,000,000, and on Friday, spite of the presence of the examiners, $14,000,000 more. All this time an army of brokers in the pay of the clique, and under the leadership of one Albert Speyers, was buying up all the gold that was offered, and endeavoring to bring it up to 160. Their efforts were more than successful. Gold reached 160, and for an instant touched 165. This was the harvest time for the clique, and while some of his agents were thus keeping up the price by bawling bids for millions at 160, Gould was unloading through a dozen different brokers at far lower figures, but yet at an immense profit to himself. He had, however, pushed the price too far, and when the news came that Secretary Boutwell would sell $4,000,000 of gold the price fell even more suddenly than it had risen, and general ruin and utter confusion fell upon Wall street, to a certain extent even involving those who had been chiefly instrumental in producing it. Down, down went the falsely bolstered price. The day was the blackest that ever set on Wall street. Men knew not where they stood. The confusion and madness was so great that it was supposed that all the clique had gone down. Of the times that followed it is impossible to give an idea. There was a run on the Tenth National Bank the next day, and a million was drawn out. The Gold Clearing House kept $14,000,000 inextricably locked up. The $500,000,000 of clearings demanded in one day of the bank disclosed its incapacity. Gould had not yet done his work. When it was publicly known that only the account of his firm was needed to finish the clearances for Black Friday, and when upon that account fortunes were pending, hourly Gould telegraphed from his barracks at the Grand Opera House, where he was guarded from the mob by police, not to send it down. The bank went into the hands of a receiver. Then came a crash. Four firms were declared suspended. Then a rumor came that Lockwood & Co., Vanderbilt's brokers, had gone under—the strongest house on the street. They had been carrying Pacific Mail, Lake Shore, Chicago and Northwestern, on which the loss was millions, with money at 300 to 1,200 per cent. a year. The firm went down. But Vanderbilt poured in millions and sent up Lake Shore, Northwest, and Central, held them, and saved himself. On Saturday, Oct. 1, Gould began his clearances—not till then. The delay of the clique in settling is accountable, with the cumbrous machinery of the Gold Exchange and bank, for the terrible wear and tear of the week that followed the fatal Friday.

A Great Russian Editor.

Russia has as yet produced but one great journalist, M. Katoff, editor and proprietor of the Moscow Gazette, which has a daily circulation of 80,000 copies. He is still a comparatively young man, and his editorial sanctum is sumptuously fitted up after the best American establishments. There is a library of 10,000 volumes, speaking-tubes to every part of the building, a telegraph office, and also a genuine Russian peculiarity—a room for the officer of police, to whom all articles are submitted before publication. The presses are of the largest kind, made in New York. At first he was disgusted with his own editorials, but his young wife urged him to persevere, which he did to gratify her, sometimes rewriting his articles half a dozen times. Ten years ago he was very poor. Now he is a millionaire, and the Imperial Government at St. St. Petersburg respects and fears him.

—An Evansville spooney was the victim of a heartless joke, recently. His companions counterfeited a letter from a young heiress, which said that his manly bearing had cavtivated her heart, and hoped he reciprocated. He threw away his tools, invested his money in new clothes, and presented himself to the lady, who indignantly told him that she didn't want a husband who looked like a crooked-necked squash, and if he didn't leave she'd remove his hair. He retired.

A GOOD summer resort—Home.

Distressing Accident to a Danburian.

One of those distressing accidents which no amount of preparation can guard against, occurred on Pine street, yesterday. Mr. Hopley, the insurance agent, intended going to New York at 9:45 a. m. to see the Graphic balloon. A friend suggested it to him just about a half hour before the train would leave and Mr. Hopley hastened home to change his clothes and tell his wife. When he got to the house he found it vacant, but hoping that his wife would come in before he departed, he got out his Sunday suit and began disrobing.

He had got on his clean shirt and was adding the collar before drawing on the pants, when he remembered that his sleeve buttons were in the stand drawer in the dining-room, and he cautiously moved in there after them. He found the buttons, and secured them, when the hall door opened and his wife's voice and the voice of a feminine friend were heard approaching. He would have fled back to the bedroom, but he could not leave the apartment he was in without being seen by them. For one instant it seemed as if he would drop dead and run into the carpet. The next, he perceived the open door of the china closed, and immediately bolted in there and closed the door. Mr. Hopley and the lady friend came into the room, and remarking on the heat, drew their chairs close to the open window and brought out their sewing. Then they fell to talking about the weather, and Mrs. Robbin's black corded silk, and remedies for worms, and other topics of engrossing interest. Mr. Hopley hung to the door with awful tenacity, and perspired and thought. The darkness was intense, and, to add to the unpleasantness, a mouse or rat was heard in among the papers on the floor. Mr. Hopley was not a timid man, but he was bare-legged and bare-footed, and when a man is thus situated a mouse is about the last thing he wants to think of. Still the voices outside continued and greater grew the heat in that china closet. Mr. Hopley did not dare to make the least noise to alarm his wife, because of the presence of the other lady, whose voice he could not recognize. How he did curse that balloon and the man who suggested his going to see it, and Prof. Wise, and how bitterly he regretted that he could not think of that other aeronaut's name (Donaldson) that he might curse him too. But still the two ladies glided on through the mazes of the neighbors' affairs, without the least sign of abatement. He heard the clock strike ten and also eleven. Once or twice the mouse came quite close to his feet, starting the perspiration afresh, until he could feel it trickle from his chin and down his body. Then he moved against something soft and hairy, and he uttered a half-stifled shriek and jumped up, striking his head against a shelf, and bringing a piece of some kind of crokery to the floor. His wife sprang to the door in alarm, but Hopley caught the knob, and clung to it with the grip of death. Mrs. Hopley tried in vain to open it. Then she thought of a burglar being concealed in the closet, and screamed for help, still clinging to the door to prevent the ferocious intruder from dashing out and braining both of them, and burning up the house. Her screams, added to those of the female friend, alarmed the neighborhood in an instant, and among those who dashed in was old Mr. Stocton with a double-barreled gun, and as soon as he learned the trouble, he turned the dreadful weapon full upon the door. There was a stunning report, a chorus of feminine shrieks mingled with a terrific howl from the other side of the door, and the next instant the unhappy Hopley, with both legs full of shot, was writhing on the floor of that closet. The door was opened, the women pushed up to get a sight; got it; and immediately dispersed with another shriek. Hopley was put to bed, and Dr. Myers summoned, who picked out the shot, which had merely pricked through the skin, and applied the needful remedies, and the patient to-day is quite comfortable, and will be at his office again this week.—Danbury News.

Meteoric Stone.

The Marysville (Cal.) Appeal reports that Mr. J. H. Anderson, whose ranch is about ten miles from that town, recently found upon his land a curious specimen of rock, which is supposed to be of meteoric origin. It says: "On Sunday evening, Aug. 24, Mr. Anderson's oldest boy was riding near the edge of the farm when a flash of light passed over his head, and there was a rattling sound in the trees near by and a heavy thud in the ground. Next morning they proceeded to the spot and found a place where the upheaval of fresh dirt showed that some heavy body had fallen. The leaves and branches of a tree near by were singed and splintered, showing the path of some heated object. On digging about eight feet they came upon a stone about twelve pounds in weight, which still retained an intense heat, and the ground was hot around it. Water was poured upon it, and it apparently cooled off and was put in a cart to take to the house, when the latent heat was apparently liberated and it set fire to the cart. Placed in a tank of water it caused it to boil, and did not lose its heat until late in the afternoon. The stone is apparently composed of a mass of heavy metal, which has at one time existed in a fused state."

Barnum's Balloon.

It has always been Mr. P. T. Barnum's ambition to succeed wherein other men had failed, and with that intent the great showman has come out with the following letter, which explains itself:

In reply to a host of letters from ail parts of the country, I wish to say that if a balloon does not cross the Atlantic the present autumn, I will expend $50,000, if necessary, in having this feat attempted, and, if possible, accomplished, as early next year as may be, provided one or more aeronauts can be found in America or Europe who have faith in its success, and will heartily attempt its accomplishment. Mr. Queen, the English balloonist, who has made upwards of 600 ascensions, told me in London twenty-eight years ago, that he had no doubt the Atlantic could be safely crossed in a balloon in from two to three days, and he offered to attempt it if I would provide the funds. I am already in correspondence with several aeronauts in France and England, and although I shall prefer to have the honor given to an American, I have no doubt that the great feat will be accomplished within a twelvemonth. I shall have the silk material manufactured in China, put together and prepared under the direction of scientific men in London, an experimental ascension made from the Sydenham Crystal Palace grounds, then bring the balloon to America, and make the transatlantic trip from New York. I trust the public will believe that if I put my hand to the plow I shall not look back.

P. T. BARNUM.

Wool Pantaloons.

Mr. O'Clarence purchased a new pair of pants, Saturday. When he got home his wife was mixing bread. She wiped her hands on her apron, and made a careful examination of the pants. First she pinched one leg of them, and asked him what he paid for them, and then pinched the other, and asked him if he didn't think it was too much. After that he stood off aways so she could get a look a the fit, so as to form a right opinion of it. Then she asked him if he couldn't draw them up higher, as they touched the floor. He said he couldn't without splitting himself in two, which there appeared no urgent necessity for his doing. She pinched them again, taking up his leg and eyeing it thoughtfully while he clutched the table with his hand, and hopped around on the other leg to rest himself. She was not quite confident they were not all cotton—those clothing people do lie so—but she was not quite sure. However, she could tell better at the window, and drew him over there to the imminent danger of tipping him over, and breaking his spine. She rubbed them again, and turned up the leg so to see the other side, and all the while her mind gathered doubts and forbodings. If he had only said he was going to buy a pair of pants she would have went with him herself, and picked them out. But tailors know that a man can't tell one kind of cloth from another, and will put off anything on him. Then she abruptly dropped his leg, and went to the back door and called Mrs. Mugent. Mrs. Mugent came in, and being made acquainted with the particulars, pinched Mr. O'Clarence's legs herself and asked him why he didn't buy the cltoh and have his pants made at home. Mr. O'Clarence didn't like the bother, and Mrs. O'Clarence explained that he always would have his own way. Mrs. Mugent said an unchle of Mr. Mugent, who lived in Bridgeport, got a pair of all wool pants last April for five dollars, and you (Mr. and Mrs. O'Clarence) would have thought they cost ten dollars if a cent; the cloth was just as fine and firm as anything could be. Mr. Mugent would sometimes get the impression that he must have his pants ready made, but he always got cheated. She was positive there was not a bit of wool in these pants, and if they were Mr. Mugent's she would have them taken back. That is exactly what Mrs. O'Clarence thought, and in spite of Mr. O'Clarence's protestations he took them back and got another pair. The other pair was a little short in one leg, and picnhed his stomach. But there was wool in them, Mrs. Mugent said.—Danbury News.

Drug Stores Scarce in Vienna.

An hour's walk this morning through the most populous parts of Vienna, in search of a Seidlitz powder, was a failure, as far as the object of the search was concerned. We could not find an apothecary shop in all this long walk and diligent search. In the same space we could have found fifty in Baltimore, or in any other American city. Being in pursuit of knowledge, we made inquiry as to the cause of this scarcity, desiring to know whether the sages of Vienna had discovered that Shakespeare was right when he consigned "physic to the dogs." The physicians of whom we inquired assured us that, although the people did not physic themselves much in Vienna, an average amount of medicine was consumed. The scarcity of apothecaries grew out of the fact that the law was very strict as to the qualifications of all aspirants, and that they must obtain a certificate from an examining board, all of whom are apothecaries and interested in restricting the number. Thus it is that the business is kept in certain families, and that very few except such of their children as take a fancy to the business are inducted to its mysteries. The difficulty that a stranger experienced in finding them was partly owing to the fact that they had no competition in their several neighborhoods, made very little display, and very often had their establishments in back streets or courts, where convenienee or cheap rent induced the location. They charge high prices, and are generally quite wealthy.—Vienna Letter.

Boston Improvements.

The burnt district of Boston is being rapidly rebuilt, the streets widened, larger water-pipes laid, and the whole character of the district, with respect to the risks, changed. It is expected that on the anniversary of the fire, Nov. 9 and 10, three of the streets will be wholly restored, and more than three-fourths of the sites of all the other burned buildings occupied by partially completed structures. The new buildings, in beauty, strength and durability, are improvements on those that were destroyed, and many of them are fire-proof. Their value is estimated at twice that of the old buildings, notwithstanding the widening of the streets.

AN old negro named Pete was very much troubled about his sins. Perceiving him one day with a very downcast look, his master asked him the cause. "O, massa, I'm such a great sinner!" "But, Pete," said his master, "you are foolfsh to take it so much to heart. You never see me troubled about my sins." "I know de reason, massa," said Pete, "when you go out duck-shootin', and kill one duck and wound anoder, don't you run after the wounded duck?" "Yes, Pete;" and the master wondered what was coming next. "Well, massa, dat is de way wid you and me. De debbil has got you sure; but, as he am not sure ob me, he chases dis chile all de time."

Humorous.

A GOOD axiom—Grind your own axes.

THREE scruples make one dram, and, if people would only indulge in the scruples first, they would take fewer drams.

ALL the hands in a clock-factory in Connecticut have struck, in consequence of which the clocks have stopped striking.

A RED BANK, N. J., farmer boasts that his hens lay eggs that can't be beat. That farmer ought to be taken into custardy.

ISN'T it about time that people stopped asking Gen. Butler to fork over those spoons. The General thinks that just for a change they might ask him to spoon over those forks.

"YOU are a little bear, madame," said our own brute to a fashionable belle at an evening party. "Sir!" exclaimed the dismayed one. "About the shoulders I mean," smilingly replied he.

MR. JOSH BILLINGS philosophically remarks that "we laff at sheep bekause when one of them leads the way the rest follow, however ridiculous it may be; and I suppose the sheep laff when they see us do the same thing."

THE subject of impression at first sight was being talked over in a family circle, when the mother of the family said, "I always form an idea of a person on first sight, and generally find it correct." "Mamma," said her youthful son. "Well, my dear, what is it?" "I want to know what your opinion of me was when you first saw me."

A MAN whose morning dram had been too much for him, in saddling his horse got the saddle wrong end foremost. Just as he was about to mount a neighbor came up and called his attention to the mistake. The horseman gazed for a moment at the intruder, as if in deep thought, and then said: "You let that saddle alone. How do you know which way I am going?" And he looked daggers at the officious neighbor.

A Dreadful Predicament.

Recently, at a late hour of the night, the people domiciled in a well-known lodging-house in Utica were aroused by calls for help proceeding from one of the rooms, and a general uprising, donning of garments, and rush to the scene took place. There a sight met their gaze which aroused the mirth of the men and caused the women to beat a hasty retreat. From over the transom of the door of one of the bedrooms protruded a pair of masculine legs, clad but in an undergarment, while a faint voice from the inside reiterated the calls for assistance. The men worked promptly, but it was several minutes before the unfortunate could be rescued from his disagreeable predicament, and when taken down he was nearly exhausted from suffocation. It appears that he had returned home late, but, late as he was, his room-mate was still out and he had the key with him. Anxious to get to bed, and not wishing to make any more noise than could be helped, our friend disrobed himself to avoid tearing his garments and to facilitate his movements, and endeavored to enter the room through the transom. After he got half through his courage failed him at the prospect of diving to the floor, and he twisted and squirmed to secure an easy descent, the result being that he finally got upon his back and hung there, head down, unable to get out or in, and, the blood rushing to his head, he was eventually forced to call for help. He was going to carry the key himself hereafter.

How to Make a Bank Bill.

A teller of one of our banks, says a Boston paper, discovered the other day a very ingenious mode resorted to by counterfeiters to make a profit by a little manipulation of genuine bills. The plan is in this wise: Take, say, ten $5 bills, lay one on the other a quarter of an inch below the top, something after paper bags. When they are all thus neatly laid off a knife is run through them, and, of course, from the first bill a quarter of an inch will be cut off, a half inch from the second, three-quarters from the third, an inch from the fourth, and so to the tenth bill, from the bottom of which there is taken a very small portion, nothing more than the border. This bill is left as it is, but to all the others the parts taken off are neatly pasted on, and the result is that there will be eleven bills, all perfect, except a small reduction in the size of each. Of course the operator makes five dollars in every ten. The amount taken from each is so small and the bills being generally all of one kind, it is a very difficult matter to detect them. The bill detected by the teller referred to was bungingly done—the top being a part of an Ohio bill, while the bottom was a part of a Baltimore bill. The names of the places are prominent, and consequently bills on the same bauk or place are preferred. It is a very neat arrangement to cheat people who are not in the habit of giving bank bills a very close examination.

NEVADIANS assert that they were better off before the Central Pacific passed through their Stote. Seven years ago it cost $45 stage fare from Austin, Nev., to Sacramento; now it costs $45.25 on the railroad. Seven years ago it cost six cents per pound to freight powder from Sacramento to Austin; now it costs six to seven cents per pound, and on all bulky goods, oils, etc., nearly as much. The exactions of the railroad are so severe that a popular uprising is threatened.

WHEN Horace Greeley visited Yosemite he picked up in the trail a horseshoe and hung it on the knot of an oak tree for whoever might choose to use it. No one took it, and in time the knot grew over the horseshoe, and recently the portion of the tree containing it was cut out and sent to San Francisco as a memento of Mr. Greeley's economy.

IT is said that when the proof of the new 50 cent stamp was shown to Treasurer Spinner he detected the striking resemblance of the vignette to Beau Hickman, and to prevent mistakes had engraved under the likeness: "Saml. Dexter Sect. Treasy. 1801."

It is said that Jay Gould has made at least two million dollars out of the present financial panic. He is one of the Jays whose plumage has brightened as the other jay bird has fallen off and been blighted.

The New York Republican State Convention eulogizes "the watchful care by President Grant of every public interest," and at the same time denounces as a theft the Congressional Salary Bill, which became a law through Grant's "watchful care."

It only costs the people of the United States one hundred and twenty seven thousand dollaas a year to maintain the establishment of the President There is charged for fuel the little item of five thousand dollars. Is not that rather heavy for a private family? All the expenses are after this fashion.

An exchange says "the gorgeous supporters of Grant—the 'solid men' —told us last fall that the election of Greeley would disturb National finances. Grant was elected in order that the finances might be kept in a pacific state. The present disturbanee is altogether owing to the fact that Greeley carried Kentucky and one or two other States. The effect is just beginning to be felt."

Ex-President Johnson had $60,000 deposited in the First National Bank of Washington at the time of its suspension. The business of the bank has gone into the hands of a Receiver, who reports that the bank is insolvent. This loss will be a severe one to the ex-President, as it includes about all his means. Grant was a depositor, but is all right.

Did you ever stand on a bench to reach something, and have the bench give out. Not smash down, but shoot out behind and fling you. That is what happened to a North street man, Monday night, while he was putting up a picture, and when he went down he made a gully in the wall with his nose nine inches long and nearly turned that valuable organ upwards.—Danbury News.

ANOTHER ROBBERY.

This time it is the Postmaster al Pittsburg. They call it a defalcation and it only amounts to $33,000. Let the farmer and the laboring man rise a little earlier in the morning, and work a little harder and this amount can soon be made up.

The Postoffice Department is making arrangements for the better protection of registered letters sent through the mails. It it quite time to introduce some improvements into the methods so long in use. Under the present system the registering of letters is virtually a guide to a thief in the section of valuable packages, and the chances of their recovery in case of loss are notoriously against the sender.

A prominent official, who values integrity above office, said to-day: "I wonder there is so much astonishment at the appointment of Mr. Shepherd. The Chief Magistrate of a nation that could pardon an army paymaster out of the Albany Penitentiary for stealing nearly half a million of dollars, and welcome him back to the city where the crime was committed, see him associated with the leading District contractors, should not be censured for appointing Alexander R. Shephard Governor of the District."

[illegible] energy in the prosecution of frauds on the Government. A childish old woman named Betty Whalan has been sent to jail in Chicago for swindling the United States by fraudulently drawing her dead sister's pension. It is needless to add that justice will be done her without fear or favor.

Following in the wake of that awfully desolated city, Shrevepert, Memphis is now equally afflicted, and appeals to neighboring cities for that help which she has so frequently and freely given to others. Public and private charities are nearly all exhausted—physicians and nurses are overworked and the condition of the city is indeed deplorable. The death rate has reached an alarming figure and the disease seems to defy all attempts to check its mad career

About one year ago, Mr. Henry Clews, banker of New York City, attended a great Republican mass- meeting in Union Square and made a speech. He addressed himself to "business men." His bosom heaved and his eyes moistened as he depicted to his hearers the crushing disaster which would overtake the business interests of the country in the event of the election of Horace Greeley. Mr. Clews, here's to your health!

The Cincinnati Commercial says that neither Senator Thurman nor Senator Morton wss laborious in opposition to the salary grab, and that if either of them had struggled with it, it would have been defeated. We dare say that this may be true, and yet the fact remains that Senator Thurman returned his back pay promptly to the Treasury while Mr. Morton kept his a long while until popular indignation compelled him to restore it. The two Senators are far from standing upon the same platform in this matter.—Sun.

The Connersville(Ind.) Examiner doesn't see through a glass darkly: We look on Senator Morton as one of the men of the past, having no thoughts to present for the good of the people, or new measures for the sustenance of the Republic. He may decry the farmers' movement, he may say that the Democratic party is dead and that the Republican party is the only one alive, but he will find by the October election that things have considerably changed since the era of the war, and that any party entitled to the support of the people must show clean hands, a pure heart, and not related to any of the grabbers or Credit Mobiliers.

We are glad to have evidence that our distinguished fellow citizen, George Francis Train still lives, and is about to return to his native land. The following cable telegram from him reached us yesterday from Europe:

"I intend establishing a Credit Foncier with a capital of ten millions.

Train."

It is pleasant to know that Mr. Train is so flush. In tight times like these there is nothing like having a little sum of ten millions or so apout you; and if Mr, Train is going to lend out the money we can assure him a most enthusiastic reception on his arrival. Only let him publish the fact beforehand, and more friends than he ever imagined will crowd about his landing-place.

RAILWAY SPEED.

The London Engineer states that the highest railway speed in the world is attained in England, and that the highest of all is reached on the Great Western railroad—the speed on the latter being given roundly as fifty miles an hour. Instances are given, however, of sixty five and seventy miles an hour, and the Engineer thinks it would be possible to lay permanent way so well, and to maintain it in such excellent order, that trains might travel on it with perfect safety at one hundred miles an hour—indeed miles upon miles of such track are now to be found on most of the great main lines, but nowhere can one hundred consecutive miles of permanent way in perfection be found; and, as a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, so a few hundred yards of back track would spoil, for the purpose of traveling one hundred miles an hour, a whole line. The really important question, argues the Engineer, is, Given the line and the cars fit for it, what shall the engine be like, and is it possible to construct an engine at all which, a moderately heavy train, will attain and maintain a velocity of one hundred miles an hour, on a line with no grade heavier than say one in three hundred? After a thorough examination of the question in all its bearings, the Engineer's figures prove that it is absolutely impossible to obtain a speed of one hundred miles an hour on railway if the resistance is anything like one hundred and twenty pounds per ton.

[illegible] and broker's advocates that the election of Mr. Greeley would give rise to such a want of confidence among capitalists that a general financial crash would ensue. Greeley's exposure of the Credit Mobilier alarmed them.—They feared a further exposure of the rottenness of the present money system. The disgraceful exposure of the past winter and and the subsiding of Ames, Colfax, Bingham & Co., vindicated the correctness of Mr. Greeley's views and the recent failure of the Cookes, Clews and other heavy dealers in fancy bonds shows that their fears were but too well founded—for even the countenance of the administration and the support of the national treasury could not preeent failures entailing losses of hundreds of millions. Even the election of Grant could not hide their nakedness and prevent the bubbles from bursting. The people would not heed, when these swindles were exposed last year; now that the facts have proved the prediction, will they not heed the warning?

THE CLOUDS THAT LOWER UPON THE HOUSE OF COOKE.

All hopes of solvency of either Jay Cooke & Co., orthe First National Bank are gone. The Secretary of the Treasury said yesterday that he did not think the latter would pay twenty five cents on the dollar. A gentleman well informed says that Jay Cooke & Co.'s liabilities will exceed their assets by at least four million dollars. The same gentleman says that he was told by a President of a New York bank that when it was reported that Jay Cooke & Co., had failed he was one of a committee of bank Presidents who waited upon Jay Cooke and asked him how much he needed to carry him through. Cooke replied ten millions would be amply sufficient. They offered him the money, and asked for his security, He produced Northern Pacific bonds which they of course refused. He had no others, and had to go by the board. It is certain that if the true condition of the affairs of the First National Bank could be found out, some startling things would be revealed. But the appointment of young Stanton as Receiver was made for the very purpose of preventing the truth being made public. He has been intimately associated with Cooke and Shepherd in all the Ring rascalities in this District, and there is no doubt that his appointment was secured by Shepherd.

THE FINANCIAL PROSPECT AND THE FUTURE.

The Cincinnati Enquirer says, whatever may be the temporary distress of bankers and business men, no one can doubt that the country as a whole is in a sound and safe condition. The panic, therefore, can not last long before there will be a renewal of prosperity. Our reasons for this belief are these. There will be, to all acconuts, at least 4,000,000 bales cotton in the South, which will be worth at least $90 a bale. Here is a crop worth $240,000,000, two thirds of which is exported to Great Briton. Our bread stuff and meat caops will olso be very large. The country is full of wheat, corn, hogs, beeves, butter and cheese. Of these products we sell annually $100,000,000 worth to Europe. Our petroleum wells are not exhausted, and of that article $15,000,000 has a foreign consupmtion. We have large quantilies of tobacco, rice and sugar. Will Europe, which needs and must have its share of those crops, allow them to perish or remain unconsumed because, perchance, our banks might not have the requisite money to loan? No, its gold will come here and buy them, and that will put business on its feet again. This country will never break upon such crops as were vouchsafed to us this year. There was not a particle of suspension in Nature's operations, ane she honored entirely every draft which was made upon her by those who had a right to expect that she would cash their checks. As long as the farmers, granaries are full, we are not to be ruined by the recklessness and dishonesty of railroads, bankers and extortionists.

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL.—Just arrived, a large invoice of dry goods, of the latest and most beautiful styles. Messrs. Miller & Casebeer, are now opening another fine stock of new goods, which have been received this week. In fact they manifest such good taste and judgement in their selections, that they have been compelled to go east the second time this fall. Another reason for their large trade is, they keep no shoddy, but handsome and desirable goods of every shade and style. Go and see them.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A little boy of Mr. Isaac Ditmars, residing a short distance south of town, was instantly killed by a fall from a hickory tree last Thursday· He had ascended the tree once, and came down on account of dizziness, and the women who were with him, urged him not go up again. After resting awhile he tried it again, and when up in the tree, lost his hold, it is thought, by becoming dizzy, and fell, striking his side on a log, and living but a few moments afterward. It was a sad bereavement, and should serve as a warning. He was buried on Friday.

Under the new law taxes can be paid in two installments. That is, one half becomes due and can be paid by the third Monday of April, without penalty. The other half must be paid on or before the 15ts day of November. The first installment, however, must include the entire amount of the road tax. Should any taxpayer fail to pay the first installment, including all his road tax, by the time specified, then and in that case, the entire amount of his tax becomes due, with penalty and interest attached. It is important then, that every tax-payer should bear in mind that to save penalty, he must pay one half his tax on the duplicate of 1873, by the third Monday in April.

The editor of the Steuben Republican has been visiting Butler, and he says:

Butler in DeKalb county has taken a new lease of life, and building is going on rapidly, and the buildings are of the most substantial kind. The new passenger depot and elevator are the largest between Chicago and Toledo, and the Round House and Machine shops are to be of brick.

Stiefel & Ochs are erecting a large store building on their old site, and in the mean time have removed a few doors further north. This firm are doing the leading business in the merchantile line.

S. J. Moore has leased the Sargent House, and is keeping up the reputation the house attained while under the administration of Ed. Sargent.

The DeKalb county Teachers' Institute, will be held in Auburn, commencing on Monday, November 10th, 1873, and continuing in session five days. Accommodations will be provided for all who come.

Let us have the largest attendance ever witnessed in Northern Indiana. No teacher can afford to be absent from the county Institute.

Death of C. C. Clark.

We regret to announce the death of C. C. Clark, County Surveyor, which took place last Saturday morning near Leo, Allen County. The deceased lingered for a long time at the verge of the grave, with that terrible affliction typhoid fever. He was, at the time of his death, in his 23d year, and gave much promise of a future useful life. He had taken great pains to educate himself under trying circumstances, only to be cut off in the flower of his manhood. He possessed a genial disposition, was quiet and unassuming, and had the respect and well wishes of all who knew him, as the family have now their sympathy.

This is not dun says the Laporte Herald but a little piece of advice for the good of the community—payees and payers. Now that crops have been gathered, and grain is being marketed and the proceeds in the form of greenbacks are filling up a great many lank pocket-books, the following, which we clip from an exchange, is especially applicable:

"Let debts be cleared off as rapidly as possible, and if the dry goods merchant, the groceryman or the professional man has been "carrying you through till after harvest," by all means, if the thing is possible, square your accounts now, and thus enable those who must make their payments evere thirty days, to escape from possible embarrassment. This is only just, and should make an honest effort to meet these demands."

The Dedication.

The occasion of the Dedication of the Odd Fellows Hall at this place next Wednesday, promises to be a grand affair. Responses are being received from various lodges, signifying their intention to be present. Fort Wayne, Bryan, Ohio, Maysville, Freemont, Angola, and lodges along the Eel River Road will be here· Special trains will run on both roads to this place. The trains run just right for those along the Air Line west, and no doubt Kendallville and Ligonier will be well represented.

We give the following as the programme for the occasion:

At 10 A. M.—Meeting of all Lodges and Members at the Hall.

11 A. M.—Forming Procession, according to to the rules of the Order, and the march to the Court House.

11½ A. M.—The following exercises will be observed:

- 1st. Singing by the Choir.
- 2d. Prayer by the Chaplain.
- 3d Singing by the Choir.
- 4th. Address by Rev. A. Marine of Fort Wayne.
- 5th. Singing.
- 6th. Music by the Band.

RECESS FOR DINNER.

At 12½ P. M.—Public Services of Dedication of the Hall, by Grand Master Platt and J. Wise, of Fort Wayne.

4 P. M.—Address by Grand Secretary B. F. Foster, of Indianapolis.

BENEDICTION.

The prospects are that we will have a large attendance here that day, and we hope our citizens will do all they can for their entertainment. It is designed to give a grand public dinner to the fraternity, and there will have to be a liberal donation of eatables upon the part of all. The fraternity have struggled hard against adversity, and a little assistance of this kind will be of incalculable benefit. A committee will wait upon our citizens for that purpose, and we trust there will not be one to refuse. The Rev. Mr, Marine, of Fort Wayne, will deliver the regular address, and from what we know of his ability, it will be a fine one. The public are cordially invited to be present at the ceremonies.

BEYOND THE MISSISSIPPI.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colordo, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine day coaches and Pulman Sleepers from St. Louis to points in the west, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Mississippi, and its connections with roads further west are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is so complnted and passengers are offered a first class, all rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R· via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Tompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

LOVE AND MONEY.

A Medley.

"When love and all the world were young,"
Oh! golden age by the poet sung;
For though it exist but on mythic page,
'Tis a fiction pleasant, this golden age;
Now love and the world are grown cunning and old,
And the golden age is the age of gold!
And, oh! the blue,
That deep, clear blue,
In the eyes of the Cupid whom once we knew
Happy, careless, sunny and true,
Is tinged by the prevalent aureate hue.
There is something wrong with this gossamer wings,
Which hang like wretched bedraggled things;
There rests a cloud on his visage fair,
A golden cloud—but gold is care;
And as for the heart, that symbol old
Of love he carried—'tis turned to gold!

A ring is made, let the fight begin,
Who are the combatants? Which will win?
And well-bred speculation is rife
As to the genuine odds in the strife.
Money-bags versus the lady's pet,
That is the match; now, who will bet?
A curious crowd
Is gathered there,
And the champions, too,
An ill-matched pair;
One all buoyant with hope and youth,
Fondly dreaming that love and truth
Can outweigh half a million;
The other a strange, mishappen weight,
But looking as if he meant to fight,
Void of each possible manly grace,
With yellow eyes and jaundiced face,
Like a liverless Indian civilian.
But, oh! for the hopes of the youthful knight
Whom daughters love and duennas slight,
But whose purse has scarcely a stray "bob;"
'Tis weight and substance carry the day,
And naught will avail in the coming fray;
Or love or beauty, or youth or health.
'Tis the longest or odds on the man whose wealth
Is the wealth of a Bengal nabob.
And she, the lovely, expectant fair,
The prize of battle, sits calmly there,
Like the bride of classic story,
What time in famed Æolia's land
There fought, by the river's gold strand,
'Gainst the river-god's strength and glory,
Alcmena's son,
Who conquering, won
The Princess Dejanira.
Yes; there she sits, the insouciante fair,
With unflushed brow, and with golden hair,
And, as to her whole attire, a
Girl of the period, skilled in the art
Well to dissemble each throb of heart.

A few more rounds and the battle is o'er;
Money-bag victor—would you more?
And the social critics of the fray
Forejudged aright the fate of the day;
As for the girl of the period, she
Bows to society's just decree.
Does she see, through a mist of tears,
The buried hopes of her girlish years?
Or do her eyes grow heavy and dim
The while her heart flies back to him?
Murmured sadly her lips his name?
Bodes her bosom of sin and shame?
Trembles her soul, that thought beside—
An unloved husband, a venal bride?
What of it? girls of the period sing,
"Mammon is Hymen, and Moneybag king."

A ROMANCE IN A NUT-SHELL.

[From Cassell's Magazine.]

A. Berton? Who can she be? Surely I ought to remember her, since she seems to recollect me so well; for it is an awkward thing, this, to get a letter from a lady, written in a familiar sort of way, talking of "old times" and "years ago," asking my advice, and wanting me to go and see her, and I unable to remember.

By the bye, I suppose it is a lady. Let me look again at the letter; yes, it must be. The handwriting is certainly not a man's, neither is the composition. Listen to this for instance: "I am emboldened to write to you on the strength of old times, and because, if you are as kind-hearted, generous, and indulgent as you used to be, you will readily forgive an old friend, whose recollections of you are so happy and so pleasing. Do you remember the time we spent at that most primitive of all villages? how you taught me German? Young lady, did I say? Well, of course, it must have been a young lady. I wonder what she was like—tall or short, dark or fair? What was her name, too? She signs herself, "A Berton." Let me see, what names begin with A—Annie, Arabella, Alice, Avice, Adele—ah, wait—I have some faint notion of some one, very long ago—twenty years, and perhaps more, and I think she was called Adele—Adele Berton; yes, that sounds like a name I have heard before. But where did I see her? Primitive village, sea-shore, and I a young fellow of one or two and twenty? Yes—I have it; surely I went to Vignelles once, when it was nothing but a collection of fishing huts, long before it became a fashionable watering-place? Of course I did, and it was there I saw Adele Berton. How could I be so stupid as to forget it? How could I forget Adele? Who was she? Why, simply the loveliest girl I ever saw. I wonder what she is like now? Describe her to you? tell you all abopt it? With pleasure, as far as I can, only let me collect my thoughts a little, and think how it all came about—it was so long ago. Yes, I begin to recollect now; I dare say it will come back to me as I tell you. Shall I begin at the beginning?

It must have been at least twenty years ago that I received a letter from a friend, asking me to join him in Algiers, where he had gone for his health, and giving me such a description of the place as he thought would tickle my artistic fancy. I did not care much about going, but I wanted a change; so I wrote and told him that perhaps I would come; and I did actually set out, and got as far as Calais. There I ran against an old acquaintance, who persuaded me to remain a day or two, and there, as Calais and Algers were equally indifferent to me, I came to a halt at the commencement of my journey.

Eventually I might perhaps have gone on, if I had not taken a long walk to a charming, unsophisticated little village, called Vignelles, buried in a valley close to the sea-shore. Everything was so picturesque that I immediately said to myself, "This is a thousand times better than Algiers or Calais, and here I'll stay."

I had been walking nearly all day, and was hot, tired, and dusty, and the place seemed intensely inviting. As it was nothing but a cluster of fishing-cottages, it seemed to offer but small chance of accommodation; but luckily I did succeed in making arrangements for bed and board in one of them, and the next week found me quite settled down as an amateur fisherman in the most rustic and patriarchal little spot you ever saw.

I have seldom seen handsomer women than the fish girls of Vignelles, with their broad, full chests and muscular limbs, bright black eyes and thick, wayward hair, to say nothing of their rich brown complexions and glowing cheeks, that would have shamed many a young lady whose hands have never touched anything rougher than silk, and whose notion of work is crochet or Berlin wool.

I had spent two or three weeks at Vignelles, and was fast becoming accustomed to its rough, almost savage life, when fortunately I made acquaintance with a brother artist, who, though much older than myself, was most sympathetic in taste and feeling, and with whom I quickly became friends. Unluckily, he did not live in Vignelles, but about two miles distant, in a solitary little house on the cliff, commanding, however, a view of the sea.

It was there I first saw Adele. She was his only child, and the idol of his heart. I seem to see her now, as I saw her then for the first time. I thought her the most beautiful girl upon the face of the earth. I can't tell you the color of her hair and eyes, for they were a mystery to me. I think her eyes must have been brown, but they often looked quite black—as black as her eyebrows and eyelashes; and as for her hair, it was all shades of gold, red, russet-brown and black. I really do not recollect about her features, except that they were beautiful; nor how tall she was, except that I was taller; nor whether she was plump or thin, but only that she was perfect. She was perfect, too, in disposition, as amiable and unselfish as she was lovely. She was clever, too, without being highly accomplished. She used to sing to us of an evening, in her sweet girlish voice, quaint old ditties or simple ballads; she could draw and paint, cook a little, row a boat—in fact, do almost anything. She helped her mother in the house, and yet was her father's constant companion. She was always thinking for others—never for herself—and was withal as light-hearted and blithesome as a girl of sixteen or seventeen ought to be.

She was friends with me at once, and before many days were over, it seemed to be a settled thing that the little house on the cliff was open to me—I was free to come and go as I pleased.

The days glided away very quickly. Six weeks or two months had passed, and at the end of that time I was obliged to acknowledge to myself that I had done a very foolish thing. I had fallen terribly in love with Adele.

It was a very foolish thing, for I was poor and entirely dependent on my own exertions, and at that time my professional talents were by no means appreciated. Monsieur Berton was, I knew, far from rich, and Adele was little more than a child. Still, the fact remained, and I was helpless to extricate myself.

The worst of it was that she herself seemed quite unconscious of it, and by her very innocence only made matters worse. During all this time we had grown very intimate, and it seemed quite natural that we should be together nearly all day; neither Monsieur nor Madame Berton made any objection, but allowed us to walk and talk as much as we pleased. I suppose they completely trusted Adele—as Adele completely trusted me; indeed, I very soon discovered this, partly from her manner, and partly through intuition. She would talk to me quite openly, and even confidingly, asking my advice and opinion on various subjects, and she treated me with familiarity that showed her unsuspicion by its very openness. Of course, I treated her in the same way. I could not do otherwise. To have been formal or indifferent was impossible; to have ventured to make love to her would have seemed to me like abusing a privilege and betraying a trust. I am very glad now to think that I never allowed myself to say anything to her that from our intimacy was not perfectly excusable.

In the meantime the days passed on, and I grew more and more in love with her. I felt that something ought to follow. But what? Of course, the wisest thing I could have done was to go immediately away; but that was far easier said than done. The fascination was too strong for me. I could not resolve to voluntarily say good-by to Adele. I seemed to see her sweet face looking up sorrowfully and pleadingly into mine, and to hear her soft musical voice, as she begged me to stay, even for a little longer. "No, no," said I to myself. "I can't go—at least, not just yet." So I stayed on, and put off the evil day, and gave myself up entirely to the pleasure of Adele's society. How long this might have lasted it is impossible to say, if suddenly the end had not some.

This was how it was. One morning I went as usual to the Bertons. I found nobody in the garden, so I pushed open the door of the house and went in. All was silent, there was no trace of any one. This was very unusal; Monsieur Berton was generally in the garden, and Madame Berton or Adele in the little room dignified by the name of parlor. I was puzzled, and was just going to call out when I remembered a little back room which Madame Berton sometimes used as a work-room. I looked in, and saw Adele lying huddled up on the couch, weeping bitterly. I sprang forward, and kneeling by her, entreated her to tell me the cause of her grief. At first she only shook her head, and continued to cry; but after a time she grew calmer, and tried to speak.

"Tell me what it is," I urged; "perhaps I can help you; you may trust me, indeed you may."

"I know, I know," answered she; "you are so kind, but in this you can be no help."

"At least, tell me," repeated I—"is your father or mother ill? What is it?"

I placed myself at her side on the sofa, and stole my arm around her waist. It was an irresistible impulse, but I am glad to remember that she did not notice it, her mind seemed quite absorbed by her trouble. I could not imagine what it was, and certainly never suspected that it would so nearly affect me, so I continued to persuade her to confide in me.

"Do not be afraid, Adele; if you only knew how it grieves me to see you so unhappy? Tell me, my——" I was going to say something much tenderer, when she stopped me by putting both her hands on my shoulders, and said:

"Dear friend, I will tell you, for I know you will pity and be sorry for me, as I should be for you if you were in trouble. My poor Rudolph is very ill, dying perhaps; he prays to see me, and we have not got the money to go to him. He is in Rome, you know, a long way from here, and it would cost a great deal of money to get there. We would sell anything, I would give anything to go to him. Oh! to think he is so far away, dying even, and I so helpless here. And I would give the world to see him, to touch him, to hear his voice, only once again before he dies. It is cruel, cruel—I shall go mad. Oh, Rudolph, my dear, dear love!"

She bursted into a passion of crying, and starting up, walked up and down the room, wringing her hands piteously.

I sat stupefied, as if I had been struck by a blow. This was the end of my dream; she had no brother; this Rudolph was—well, I had been an idiot.

I don't remember what I said or did after that, but I believe I muttered some sympathizing words and then walked mechanically out of the house, and back to Vignelles. When I got there I examined my little store of money, and deducting only what was absolutely necessary, put the rest in an envelope, and sent it to Monsieur Berton with a few lines of regret that I was suddenly obliged to return to England, and begging him to accept the money as a loan, if he would not do so as a gift, in token of my friendship and sympathy. Then I went straight away from Vignelles without leaving any address, and from that day to this I have heard nothing more of the Bertons. I tried hard to forget Adele, and after a time I succeeded.

Aut I do wonder if she is as charming now as she was then; let me see, she must be how old? Seventeen and twenty make thirty-seven; and I am forty-two. I suppose that poor fellow Rudolph died, or anyhow she could not have married him, as her name is still Berton. He might have been her cousin, you say, or some other relation of the same name? Very true; but if she is not married, and is as nice as ever, perhaps—well, however, I may as well go and see her. And I did.

It may interest some people to know that she is looking over my shoulder as I write this, and that she thinks no more need be said on the subject.

Extirpation of Banditti.

One of the most ferocious and successful of the brigand chiefs who had been for many years the terror of Sothern Italy has at last been hunted down and his band dispersed. This company of marauders does not appear to have been very numerous, being only nine persons, but their chief, Manzi, had pursued his depredations so long and with such uniform good fortune that dread of power gave him the population of entire villages as passive, if not active sympathizers. Fortunately he had lately to do with a Prefect who found out the safest and the readiest way of dealing with such men. The Prefect or Salerno did not encumber his movements with a formidable military force, so as to give warning of its approach whenever it went; he treated Manzi as a wild beast to be tracked to its lair and shot down by any sportsman lucky enough to get within reach. The brigand and his followers, after various doublings, were fairly caught in the toils, when that happened which has so often occurred to experienced tiger or bear hunters in India and elsewhere. Manzi and his men, brought to bay, turned fiercely on their pursuers and sold their lives as dearly as they could. They killed one gendarme and wounded three others, six of themselves and their leader perishing in the struggle. With the extirpation of this scourge the province of Salerno is now free from the incubus of brigandage, and the worst legacy of its former vicious and corrupt rule has been cast aside.

Keeping Faith.

Sir William Napier was one day taking a long country walk, when he met a little girl about 5 years old sobbing over a broken bowl. She had dropped and broken it, in bringing it back from the field to which she had taken her father's dinner, and said she would be beaten on her return home for having broken it. As she said this, a sudden gleam of hope seemed to cheer her. She innocently looked up into Sir William's face and said: "But you can mend it, can't you?" He explained that he could not mend the bowl, but the trouble he could overcome by the gift of a sixpence to buy another. However, on opening his purse it was empty of silver, and he promised to meet his little friend on the same spot at the same hour next day, and to bring sixpence with him; bidding her meanwhile to tell her mother she had seen a gentleman who would bring her the money for a bowl next day. The child, entirely trusting him, went on her way comforted. On his return home he found an invitation awaiting him to dine in Bath the following evening to meet some one whom he especially wished to see. He hesitated for some little time, trying to calculate the possibilities of giving the meeting to his little friend of the broken bowl and still be in time for the dinner party at Bath, but finding this could not be, he wrote to decline accepting the invitation, on the plea of a "previous engagement," saying, "I cannot disappoint her; she trusted me."

A Penetrating Splinter.

The Carson (Cal.) Appeal relates the following singular accident: Henry Charron, a Canadian Frenchman, was working over the anvil of the round house the other day, when the man who was working with him struck with his sledge-hammer upon a piece of red-hot steel, from which a splinter flew up and pierced Charron in the neck just above the collar-bone, sinking half an inch below the surface. He had fortitude enough to attempt the only relief possible under the circumstances. He seized the red-hot steel and tried to pull it out with his fingers; but he failed to extract it then, and had to make a second endeavor, which was more successful. He drew the steel out and took away its form burnt on the line of his hand where he had grasped it. The artery under the collar-bone (sub-clavian) had been reached and burnt into by the hot steel, and as this was removed the blood flowed profusely. During the afternoon Charron was lying in bed with no sign of the puncture on his neck except an inflamed spot, where the steel had entered. He seemed to feel no pain from it except when he exerted the muscles of his neck in moving, or when he breathed heavily.

Dr. Whitmore, the medical officer of the parish of Marylebone, London, where typhoid fever has recently broken out, has suggested the propriety of enjoining the milk companies from selling milk at present, as it is almost certain, from evidence in hand, that the disease has been occasioned by impurities in the water with which the companies diluted their milk. There is no objection to adulterating milk in London, but the adulterating fluid must not be of a kind which gives rise to typhoid fever.

How to Approach Strange Dogs.

In approaching strange dogs, it is best to notice the eyes. The highest authority we know of states that when a dog is angry or excited the pupil is always dilated, and that with ordinary animals this sign may be implicitly depended on, and that by waiting till the pupil is again contracted they may be approached in safety. Some breeds, however, such as the bull-terrier and St. Bernard, are of very uncertain temper, and will sometimes snap without any warning. With all such it is well to be cautious; but when approaches become necessary, coolness without presumption is the best policy. If you are afraid, do not appear to be so if you can help it, and the probability is that the brute will submit. But it is best never to approach a large strange dog till you know his disposition; we have known sad results from want of caution in this respect. Savage dogs are best killed and out of the way. But they are the exception; the rule is affection the most unbounded, devotion the most absolute, fidelity the most inviolable, obedience most perfect; and all this, if you will, you may have in your dog.—Cassell's "Household Guide."

Infant Mortality.

During the year 1868, 23,198 children under one year of age died by convulsions in England, the number of births being 786,858—one in thirty-four. In the same year the births in Scotland were 115,514, and only 312 infants under one year—one in 370—fell victims to convulsions. This striking difference in the mortality statistics of the two countries is accounted for in a report of the Scottish Registrar-General by the difference between the English and the Scottish modes of rearing infants. "The English," he writes, "are in the habit of stuffing their babies with spoon-meat almost from birth, while the Scotch, excepting in cases where the mother is delicate, or the child is out nursing, wisely give nothing but the mother's milk till the child begins to cut its teeth." The statistics of infantile deaths from diarrhea may also be adduced as an argument in favor of the Scottish system. In England more than twice as many infants die of this disorder than in Scotland.

On comparing these statistics with those of the last United States census, it will be seen that the chances of life for infants in their first year are far more favorable in this country than in England, though not so favorable as in Scotland. In the year ending May 31, 1870, there were born in the United States 1,100,475 children. Of these there died, during the same year, 4,863 by convulsions, and 1,534 by diarrhea, or one in 236 from the former cause, and one in 724 from the latter. In England the deaths from diarrhea amounted to 138 in 100,000 infants, and in Scotland to 66 in the same number. It will be seen, on computation, that the proportion of deaths from this cause are by a very small fraction less in the United States than in Scotland. But now are we to attribute these very creditable results to our more rational system of rearing children, or to the better social condition of the population here?—Popular Science Monthly.

The Great St. Louis Tunnel.

One of the grandest undertakings ever begun in St. Louis is the construction of the railroad tunnel from the western approach of the great bridge along Washington avenue and Eighth street to Clark avenue. The tunnel from Third street to Clark avenue, to connect our Eastern and Western railroads, is to be 4,000 feet in length, with an open approach of 900 feet walled in. Work was begun on this gigantic enterprise last November, but owing to an inclement winter very little progress was made until about the middle of March, at which time actual work seems to have commenced, and the work done from that time to the present has been satisfactory to the most sanguine friends of St. Louis and the tunnel. The span of the arches of the tunnel, of which there are two, is fourteen feet clear, and the height seventeen feet. The arches have a depth of five length of brick springing from a wall of solid stone, whose foundation is six feet thick; the side walls are five feet thick to the spring line, above which the thickness of the line is four feet; the center wall is three feet in thickness. All the brick work and masonry is set in hydraulic cement. Ten barge loads of Grafton stone are consumed every week, and forty thousand brick each day. The various labors connected with the construction of the tunnel give employment to not less than fifteen hundred men and over two hundred teams.—St. Louis Republican.

Stephen Girard's Memory.

"Stephen Girard," says a writer in a Philadelphia paper, "had a remarkable memory, seldom forgetting anything to which his attention had once been called. As an instance, when, in 1793, his ship Voltaire was built, laborers were scarce, on account of a fever raging at the time, and Girard personally assisted his favorite carpenter, 'Jimmy Humphries,' in driving in the copper bolts which held the breast-hook fastening in the bow. In 1812, during the war, the Voltaire required repairing, and it was overhauled at Kensington. It was necessary to remove the copper bolts which held the fastening, in order to replace some wood work, and it became necessary to know whether the bolts had been riveted from the inner or outer side. The same carpenter, Humphries, was assisting in the repairing of the vessel, but was unable to find the bolt heads. Girard, who was standing near, smiled quietly, noticing which, Humphries asked, rather jokingly, 'Perhaps you know something about them, sir?' The old man laughed, and said: 'Why, Jimmy, don't you remember that hot afternoon in '93, when you and I put in those bolts? The starboard ones are riveted from the outside, and the larboard from the inside. Through all the whirling memories of that wonderful head, the old man's mind had gone back to the simple incident of nineteen years before, with perfect accuracy."

Dead Shot for Insects.

Strong alum water is a sure death to bugs of any description. Take two pounds of pulverized or of crystal alum, and dissolve in three quarts of boiling water, allowing it to remain over the fire until thoroughly dissolved. Apply, while hot, with a brush, or, what is better, use a syringe to force the liquid into the cracks of the walls or bedstead. The pulverized alum is worth 50 cents a pound, and that in crystal from 15 to 20—a cheap remedy. The latter requires a little longer time to dissolve. Of course an experiment to verify the claim above made can be made by employing a mere fraction of the quantities above named. A less perfect cure for insect pests is to scatter the powdered alum freely in places where they abide. Powdered borax scattered thinly where croton bugs and cockroaches travel or abide, will expel them at once. It is a sure expulsion for the croton insect. Almost all strong saline solutions are efficacious in the destruction of these household pests, which are both destructive and annoying, and the mixture of alum or any other material need not necessarily be hot.

The Firm of Jay Cooke & Co.

The firm of Jay Cooke & Co. originated in Columbus, Ohio. It received its consequence in the early years of the war as agent of the Government under Secretary Chase for the sale of public securities. Under Secretaries McCulloch and Boutwell, this confidence was continued. Mr. McCulloch, after his retirement from office, became a member of the London branch of the house under the name of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. Under the present Administration, it has continued to enjoy all the advantages of its connection with the Government. To it was committed the first, and subsequently the second, Syndicate, by which large profits were given for exchanging 6 per cent. bonds into 5 per cents. That the firm has enjoyed a large credit because of its actual and supposed connection with the Treasury Department, is unquestionable. It is strongly suspected that this credit was abused in the sale of "7-30 bonds" of the Northern Pacific railway.

THE AGED PILGRIM'S STORY.

BY MRS. M. A. KIDDER.

I will not enter in;
I'll sit me down outside,
And tell you, if you'll listen, friend,
About my foolish pride,
And how my only son was lost
For the want of one true guide.

We had as fair a child
As ever blessed man's lot—
A noble, loving, truthful boy,
But willful, sir, and hot;
A bright and blooming "passion-flower"
That beautified our cot.

I, in my blindness, cried:
"The child shall choose his way;
I will not have his spirit curbed,
Or cloud his youth's fair day;
Whate'er he asks, that to him give,
Nor force him to obey."

The swift years glided on;
Our darling grew apace;
But, ah! the loving child was gone,
And had in his place
An uncurbed tyrant, all equipped
To run a lawless race.

He has nearly run his race,
And gone we know not where,
With base companions, long ago.
His mother died of care;
And now, my friend, all I can do
Is to follow him with prayer.

The old man ceased to speak,
And raised his eyes above,
Only to meet his listener's gaze
Bent on him full of love,
And the look of anguish on his face
Did the pilgrim's spirit move.

"My father! oh, my father!
Your pilgrimage is done!
The heart-felt prayers you offered up
Have heavenly answer won;
In me, rescued by saving grace,
Behold your long-lost son!"

The sire then entered in
To the cot with comforts rife;
He took his grandchild on his knee,
And kissed his son's young wife,
And remained an honored, happy guest
All the rest of his peaceful life.

Whisky and the Weed.

Intelligent physiologists and pathologists admit that all so-called medicines containing alcohol—whether they emanate from the regular pharmacopœia and are called tinctures, or from the Empirical Rum Mills, and are labeled "Tonics"—are essentially dangerous and destructive. The only way in which drunkenness can be arrested is by restoring the integrity of the nerves (especially the nerves of taste and the great sympathetic nerve), and purifying the animal fluids, and these objects are more certainly and swiftly accomplished by the use of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS than by any other means. Hence, probably, the opinions now so generally expressed, that this pure preparation is a sovereign remedy for the evils referred to. Should it be clearly ascertained that VINEGAR BITTERS is not only a specific for indigestion, liver disease, nervousness, scrofulous ulcers and eruptions, and a host of other disorders, but also for inebriety, thousands will rise up and call the discoverer blessed.—[Com.

A PRIVATE letter from Vienna says that the difference between the actual and anticipated receipts of the Great Exposition, as it affects all classes, will be at least 20,000,000 florins, or about $10,000,000.

THE National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America is in no respect affected by the recent suspension of the large banking house of Jay Cooke & Co. Its securities are such as are proper to a conservatively conducted Life Insurance Company, all being of the most substantial description. It holds, invested in mortgages and in Government bonds, a much larger amount than its total liabilities, and all of its other assets are worth all that they are claimed to be. It has not, and never had, a dollar of its funds invested or secured by the Northern Pacific railroad bonds or stock. It did not even have deposits with the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., or any other private banking house. The policy-holders and friends of the company need entertain no shadow of apprehension as to its permanent ability and of its future prosperity and success.—[Com.

THE SUPERIORITY of the stock used in making the Elmwood and Warwick collars, and the edges folded all around, are the reasons why they are liked better than any others.—[Com.

Symptoms of Liver Complaints and of Some of the Diseases Produced by it.

A sallow or yellow color of skin, or yellowish brown spot on face and other parts of body; dullness and drowsiness with frequent headache; dizziness, bitter or bad taste in the mouth, dryness of throat, and internal heat; palpitation; in many cases a dry teasing cough, with sore throat, unsteady appetite, raising of food, and a choking sensation in throat; distress, heaviness, bloated or full feeling about stomach and sides; pain in sides, back or breast, and about shoulders; colic, pain and soreness through bowels, with heat, constipation, alternating with frequent attacks of diarrhea; piles, flatulence, nervousness, coldness of extremities, rush of blood to head, with symptoms of apoplexy, numbness of limbs, especially at night; cold chills, alternating with hot flashes; kidney and urinary difficulties; female weakness and irregularities, with dullness, low spirits, unsociability, and gloomy forebodings. Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time. All who use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for Liver Complaint and its complications are loud in its praise. Sold by all Druggists everywhere. 659

A BRITISH officer, writing from Teheran, Persia, to the London Times, remarks: "A Cathartic Pill, manufactured by 'an American Chemist' (DR. J. C. AYER, of Lowell, Mass.,) has cured the Shah of a Liver Complaint that threatened his life. This simple fact, as might be expected, renders the Americans immensely popular here, while we English are overlooked. Doubtless our own scholars made the discoveries which he employs, and thus it is in everything; we do the labor, then the mousing Americans put their mark upon it and take the reward. DR. AYER is idolized by the court and its retainers here, which will doubtless be reflected to him on a gold snuffbox or diamond-hilted sword, while not the name even of Davy, Christison or Brodie—the great lights by which he shines—is known."—New York Sunday Paper. 52

THE Milwaukee Monthly Magazine for October reaches us in advance of the other monthlies. It is an excellent number of this sterling and popular magazine. The finely illustrated article on Africa is followed by attractive and entertaining stories and poems, while a practical and profusely illustrated fashion article, and readable editorials on many different topics make the book complete. This is no cheap rehash of trashy stories, but is a first-class original magazine, for one dollar a year. Send three-cent stamp for prepayment of postage, and receive a specimen copy free. Address T. J. Gilmore, Milwaukee, Wis. *

The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria visited the American Agricultural Hall, at Vienna, August 22d, and was much interested in the display. The Eclipse Steel Gang Plows, exhibited by Collins & Co., of New York, particularly attracted his attention. Pointing to the seat for the driver, he said, smiling: "The American farmer is a happy individual; he knows how to get the most labor accomplished at the least possible expense of money and power. We have much to learn." The highest prize at Vienna, the Medal of Merit, was awarded to Collins & Co. for their Gang Plows.—N. Y. Herald, Sept. 17.

OUR READERS should be careful to notice that PROCTER & GAMBLE'S Stamp is upon the bars of their Mottled German Soap, as all good articles are imitated, and this Soap being so popular, other manufacturers have copied their stamp.

THERE is no disease flesh is heir to more troublesome to manage than rheumatism. It comes when you least expect it, and generally remains till it gets ready to go away. The most conspicuous remedy for this complaint is Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.—[Com.

BASE-BALL is undoubtedly good exercise and capital amusement, but it often occasions bunged eyes, broken skins, and blistered hands. We can tell you that in all such cases, if Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is resorted to, it will reduce the swelling and stop the pain.

WE would not recommend the frequent or constant use of any medicine. It is important to take even a good article judiciously. Parsons' Purgative Pills are safe, prompt and reliable as a laxative or cathartic.

Two or three doses of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders will cure a horse of any common cough or cold, and the very worst cases may be cured in a few weeks. We know this from experience.—[Com.

Natural Decay—Protect the System.

The human body is a machine, and therefore cannot endure forever; but, like a watch or a sewing machine, it will last much longer if properly regulated and duly repaired, than if no pains were taken to keep it in order. The great object of every one who desires a long and healthy life should be to put his body in a condition to resist the life-threatening influences by which we are all more or less surrounded; and no invigorant and corrective at present known so effectively answers this purpose as the vitalizing elixir which, under the unpretending name of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, has been for more than twenty years the standard tonic of America. In crowded cities, where the atmosphere is contaminated with the effluvia inseparable from large populations; in marshy regions, where the soggy soil reeks with miasma; on the prairies and in the forests, where every fall the air is tainted with exhalations from rotting weeds and grasses or decomposing leaves—in short, in every locality where malaria exists, this powerful vegetable antidote is urgently needed. Fever and ague, bilious fevers, dysentery, congestion of the liver, jaundice, rheumatism, and all diseases which are generated by infected air, impure water, or sudden changes of temperature, may be averted by strengthening and regulating the system in advance with Hostetter's Bitters. Autumn is always a season of peril, especially to weak, susceptible organizations. Even the more vigorous are apt to be in some measure depressed by the humid atmosphere, loaded with deleterious gases produced by vegetable decay. The fall is a period of the year when the renovation and regulation of the living machine is peculiarly important, and the Bitters should therefore be taken daily at this critical season.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS,
For all the purposes of a Family Physic,
CURING

Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach and Breath, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and Purifying the Blood, are the most congenial purgative yet perfected. Their effects abundantly show how much they excel all other Pills. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. They purge out the foul humors of the blood; they stimulate the sluggish or disordered organ into action and they impart health and tone to the whole being. They cure not only the every day complaints of everybody, but formidable and dangerous diseases. Most skillful physicians, most eminent clergymen, and our best citizens, send certificates of cures performed and of great benefits they have derived from these Pills. They are the safest and best physic for children, because mild as well as effectual. Being sugar-coated, they are easy to take and being purely vegetable, they are entirely harmless.

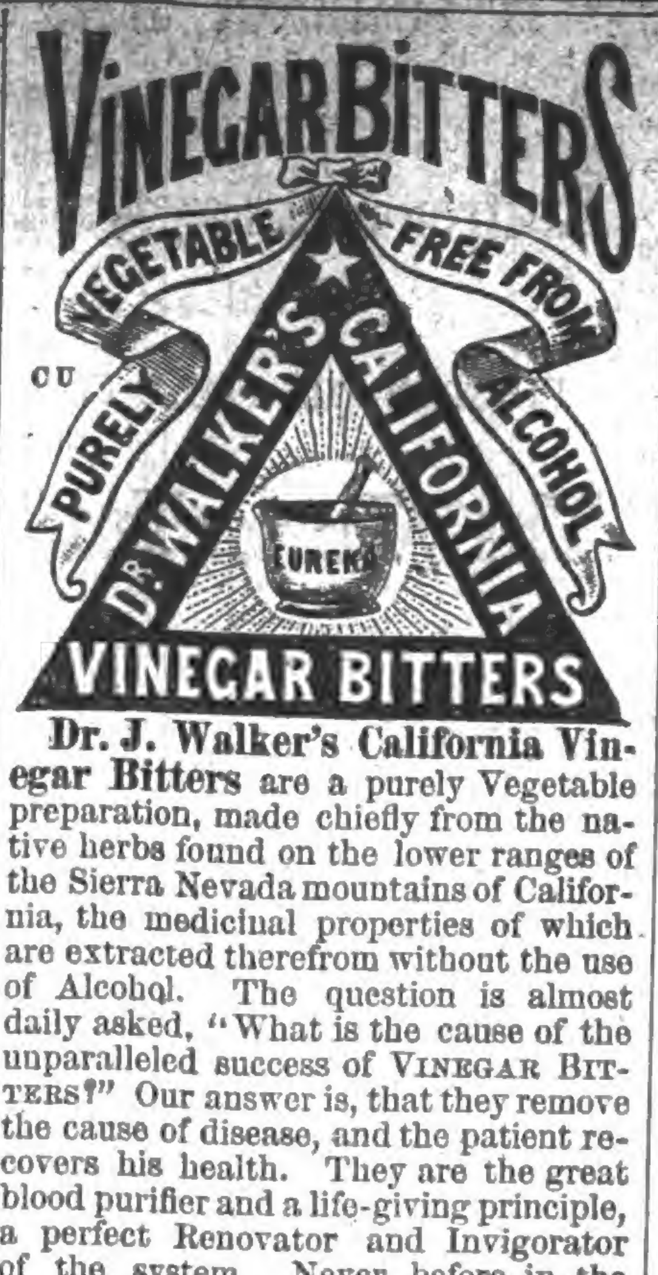
LEE & WALKER, 922 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA. LEE & WALKER'S Musical Almanac, free to any address.



Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

This truly wonderful Liniment was discovered by HOMER ANDERSON, A.M., late Professor of Chemistry and Mathematics in the Clinton Liberal Institute, of Oneida County, N.Y. In experimenting for the purpose of making Prussic Acid, by uniting the independent gaseous bodies of which it is composed, a residuum was left, which, on being applied to bruises and inflamed parts, by the students of the Institute, was [illegible] to possess the remarkable property of cool[illegible] and carrying off the inflammation and soreness at once, and restoring the parts to soundness and health in a few hours without pain or irritation.

It is not a heating Liniment, but acts by its peculiar specific or chemical qualities in dissolving and scattering the soreness and inflammation of the injured part. By a free application, the red surface soon becomes cool, moist and natural, and is restored to natural health without suppuration or destruction.

As a Liniment for Horse Flesh, for the cure of all the ailments named above, we challenge the world to find its equal.

Price 25 & 50 cents per bottle.

CONSUMPTION
And Its Cure.
WILLSON'S
Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by

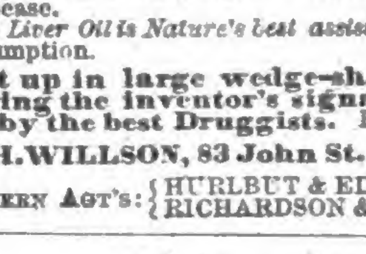
A NEW IDEA.



It is now an established fact that Chills and Fever or Fever and Ague and all kindred diseases caused by malaria or miasmatic poisons can be cured without the use of Quinine, Arsenic, Zinc, Copper, or other poisonous material. Dr. A. H. Smith was the first to make the Great Discovery, and hence the world-wide reputation of Dr. Smith's Ague Cure. This standard remedy immediately destroys and removes from the system the disease-producing cause upon a new and correct scientific principle, therefore proves itself a positive cure, and never has been known to fail in a single instance. We warrant every Bottle. Dr. Smith's Ague Cure contains no Quinine, Zinc, Copper or other poisons. It is therefore perfectly reliable and harmless, yet powerful to cure. Beware of counterfeits. Remember, the genuine is put up in square bottles and has a portrait of Dr. Smith on the wrapper. For sale by all Druggists.

Beaty's Hair Tonic is the best restorative on the market. It cleanses the Scalp, and produces a healthy growth of Hair. For the ladies' toilet it is indispensable.

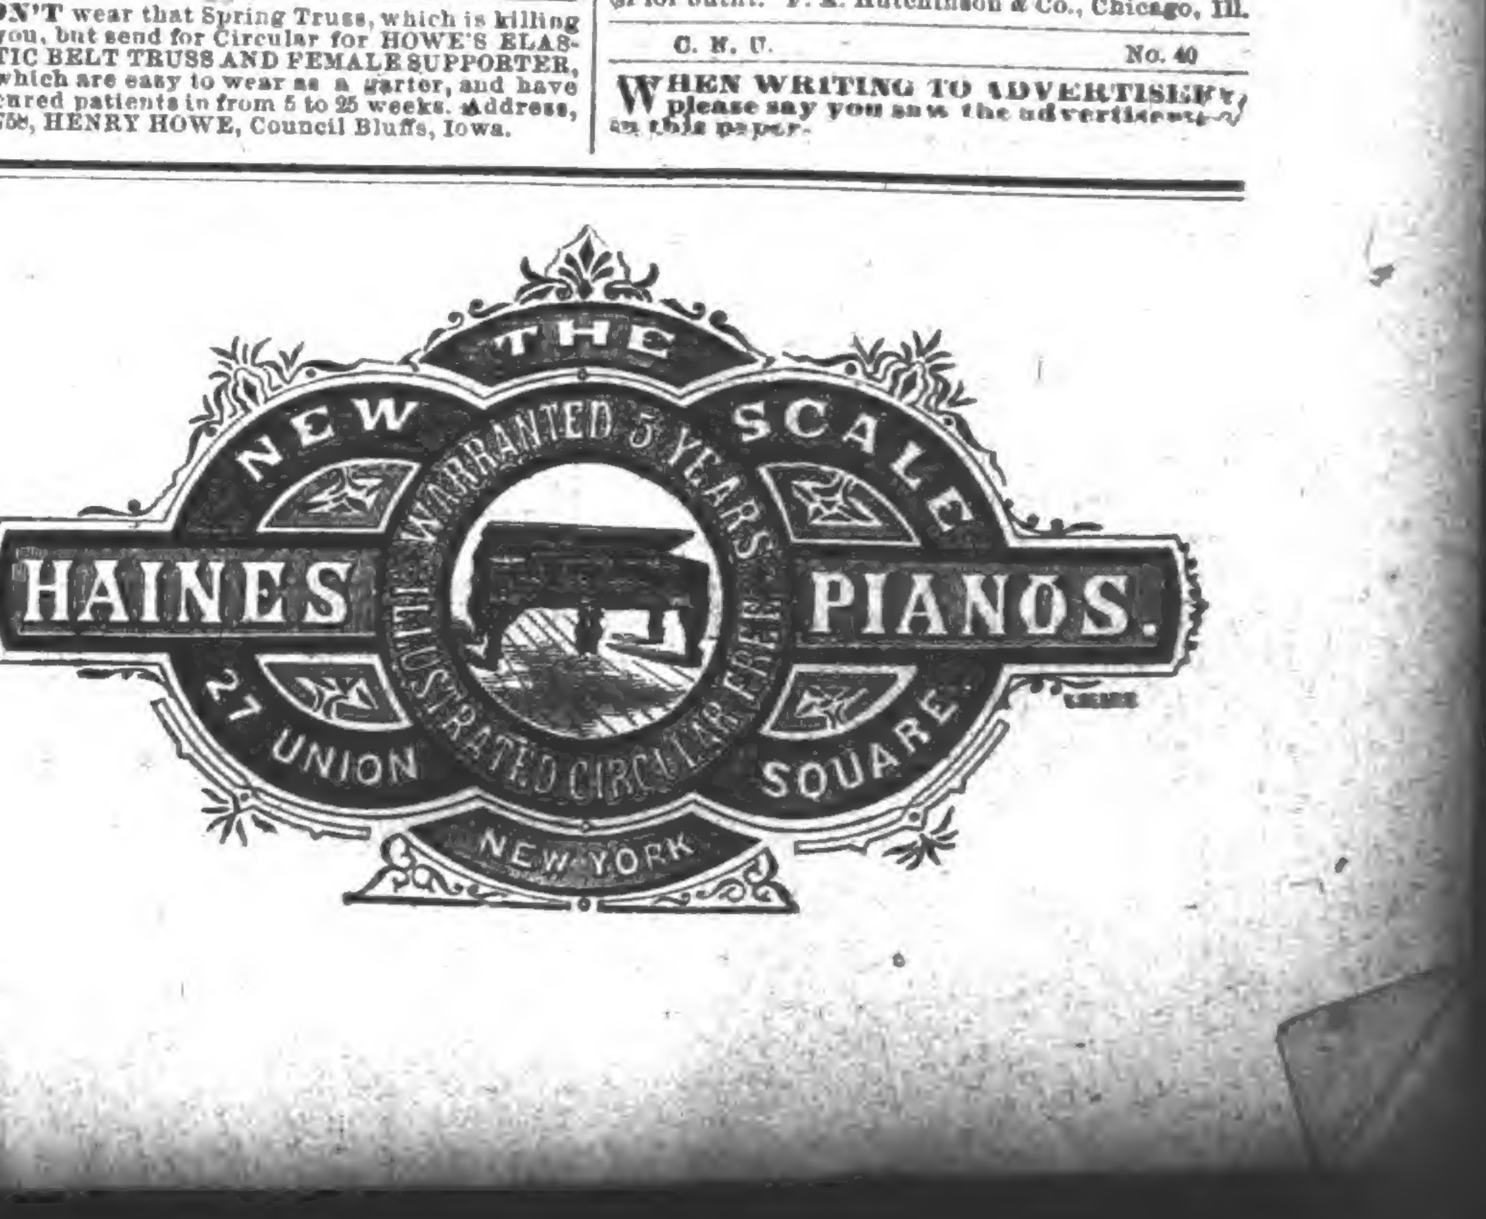
WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.



The Atlantic balloon voyage has proved a gigantic swindle, as expected. The material of which the balloon was made, was not strong enough to withstand the pressure of the gas and it collapsed when about a quarter full. Prof. Wise. who seems really to have intended to start, accuses the Graphic of mismanaging the whole affair vilely.

An Essex street man bought a pig Saturday. "What do you feed your pig on?" asked a neighbor. "Corn," he said. "Do you feed it in the ear?" asked the friend. "Do you think I am a fool?" said the Essex street man, sarcasticically.—Danbury News.

* * *

Mr. Morton, in the speeches he has made in Ohio this year, has taken a most roseate hue of the condition of the country, and especially dwelt upon the remarkable financial strength and prosperity of the people. Before Mr. Morton's words had ceased vibrating the "financial strength" he talked of has been broken like a reed, and the cob-houses built in a spirit of speculation have tumbled about the ears of their proprietors, and caused a monetaro panic throughout the country. This fact, we should think, would rather dampen the ardor of Morton, and destroy his usefulness as a prophet. More than that, it exhibits either his ignorance as to the real financial condition of the country, or else he has purposly attempted to mislead the people into the belief that our prosperity was a healthy and judicious one, in the hope to secure to his party all the honor for the seeming prosperity. But, unfortunately for his theory, and to the great damage of his pretentions, the tumble of stocks. and breaking up of old and wealthy firms, the derangement of money matters everywhere, and the depression of prices give the direct lie to the senator's assurance to the people that all things were lovely. financially. The very causes which have led to the present condition of our finances have had their origin in the policies of the Radical party. The house of Jay Cooke & Co., was the creature of the government, and upon government patronage it has fattened and thriven until it stood at the head of the financial world. It was so closely allied to the treasury at Washington that people come to look upon it as a part of the financial being of the government; but in a day it tumbled to pieces, leaving nothing but a mass of wreck and rubbish and precipitating a financial crash throughout the country. This is the result of stock gambling, and no one knows it better than Mr. Morton. If it will end this evil the panic will have its blessing, but in no other sense can it result advantageously to the people.

"And Peter's Wife's Mother," etc.

Gen. Sam. Cary, in his speech, on Tuesday evening, illustrated the "war tune," in which Republican orators indulge, to keep alive old predjuices, by an anecdote which was very appropos. He said the continual hammering away at the war, for which Messrs Morton and the thirteen thousand dollars Noyes were noted, put him in mind of a young minister, the promising son of a doting father, who had stinted himself on his farm to bestow the proper educational advantages. The son graduated with honor and came home to delight his father with a masterly ability in the ministerial service. He came home with a considerable flourish, in a pious way, was announced to preach at the little church 'round the corner. The house was not half large enough to hold the crowd, and the old man was happy. The young man took for his text; "And Peter's wife's mother lay sick of a fever," and the way he went for that fever and Peter's wife's mother, astonished the world and the rest of mankind. The old man overflowed with pride, and at the end of the sermon clasped his son to his breast, and wanted to know if he wasn't a chip off the old block, or several of them. No Credit Mobilier or Salary Grab about that boy, thought the old man, and he no doubt tore up an old hat to celebrate his great and exceeding joy. The old man swore—he was a good christian, but couldn't help swearing, after his boy got through, that he never saw a fever so raging, nor an old woman so sick; that Peter's wife was a model, and that Peter was another. The young man was the cynosure of all eyes—we believe that's the way to put it—and the old man lived over again the days of his early manhood. The young man was famous, and, as a matter of course, call to preach, were not like angel's visit few and far between. He was announced at another point, about twenty five miles distant, and the old man couldn't think of losing an opportunity to hear his talented and remarkable son. He was on hand like a thousand of brick and twice as natural, radiant with smles and willing to shell out a half for the heathens. His boy ascended the pulpit and read his text; "And Peter's wife's mother lay sick of a fever." The old man looked in a northeasterly direction; listened attentively, but couldn't for the life of him get into his mind that Peter's wife's mother was as terribly afflicted as she was the Sunday before. The fever didn't scare him quite as much as it did, but still he was proud of his boy. The following Sabbath there was another appointment; this time about sixty miles from the homestead. Nothing daunted, the father made time, and sat in front of his boy, who still insisted that "Peter's wife's mother lay sick of a fever." Frantic with peculiar emotions—you know how it is yourself—he rose to his feet, and demanded of his boy minister, "if the old thing wasn't dead yet." He could have killed a dozen old women in that time with not half such a fever. Says he, "my son, we must have perfect harmony—nothing to mar the pleasure of the occasion, and for God's sake either kill the old woman, or start her in the milinery business."

Morton, Noyes and Republican stumpers generally, are still under the impression that "Peter's wife's mother lies sick of a fever" and that nothing will cure her but the recollection of bloody war.

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and rectifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Conductor and Vice-President.

At a certain period, some six or eight years ago, the officers of one of our principal railroads had good reasons for believing that some of the conductors upon a particular section of their road were in the habit of render- inaccurate returns of their receipts from "way-passengers," and as they were unable to fix the defalcation upon the particular individuals, Pinkerton was employed to investigate the matter, and test the accuracy of their suspicions. For the execution of this delicate service he selected a sufficient number of his best men to furnish four for every car in a train, one to be seated at each door and two in the centre of the car, the latter facing to the front and rear, so as to see every person who went in or out. These men were directed not to recognize each other, but to pay their fares, and otherwise deport themselves like ordinary travelers. Each one was provided with pencil and paper, and instructed to keep an accurate record of every person that entered or left the cars, noting the stations to and from which they traveled, etc., so that if at the end of the trip their notes were in accord, it would be good evidence of accuracy. In this manner the Major was enabled, in the course of a few days, to make a detailed report, which showed exclusively that nearly every conductor upon the section of road under surveiliance had been guilty of swindling. He also ascertained that one of these delinquents owned property to a large amount in Philadelphia. Whereupon, as I was informed, Col. S ——, the Vice-President, sent for the man, and the following dialogue ensued:

"Mr ——, how long have you been employed as conductor on our road?"

"About seven years, sir."

"What pay have you received during that time?"

"Eight hundred dollars a year."

"Do you own the house No.— upon —— street?"

"I do sir."

"What is its value?"

"Well, sir, I can't tell precisely, but it is considerable."

"What estimate do you place upon your entire assets?"

"Something like $40.000"

"Were you the owner of any portion of this property when you entered our service?"

Not a dollar's worth, sir."

"You have a family to support, I understand?"

"I have a wife and three children."

"Will you do me the favor to inform me how you have been able in seven years to support your family and accumulate a fortune of forty thousand dollars upon a salary of eight hundred?"

"I have not the slightest objection to answer you question, Col. S——, provided you will suffer me first to propound a few pertinent interrogaries to you.

"Very well, sir, I've no objections. What are they?"

"Will you, then, be so kind as to inform me how long you have been connected with the—— railroad?"

"Something like ten years."

"What, allow me to ask, has been, your salary during that time?"

'I suppose it may have averaged about $5,000 a year."

"You have a family to support, if I am not mistaken?"

"Yes, sir, I have a family.

"If it is not an improper question, Col. S——, will you suffer me to ask what is the amount of your fortune?"

"Well, sir, I don't know precisely, but it is something handsome"

"Would you estimate it at $500,000 Colonel?"

Yes, I dare say it is."

"That being the fact, sir, if you will do me the favor to disclose to me the secret of the process by which you, in ten years, have been able to transmute $50,000 into ten times that amount, without any visible means outside your salary, I will most cheerfully tell you how I have managed, by turning an honest penny now and then, to amass the comparatively insignificant amount I have named."

"That is all very well, replied the imperturable Vice President, "but you seem so have forgotton that there is a slight difference between your status and mine upon the——Railroad, in that you are responsible to me for stealing the Company's money, whereas I am not accountable to you for my transactions. In view of this fact, it now becomes my duty to inform you that your services are no longer required upon our road."

The facetious conductor probably anticipated this result, and with his characteristic coolness remarked. "In that event, sir, it may at some future time become necessary for me to seek employment upon another road. Would it be asking too much for you to give me a letter setting forth your estimate of my ability, to perform the duties of conductor?"

'If you desire it, I certainly have no objection to giving you a testimonial to the effect that I look upon you as the most unscrupulous and unblushing knave that has ever disgraced the catalogue of our employes, and that any company having anything to do with you will be morally certain to be robbed."

Fighting a California Snake.

One of the fiercest conflicts that we have ever heard of was that between a man of the name of Meegan, who recently settled on the Vidos range, in the Panoche, and a snake of the dorsalis glutus species, Meegan had gone at an early hour on Monday morning last to fell some young trees, when he felt a peculiar motion beneath his right foot, on removing which he was thunderstruck at seeing a snake raising his head and body rapidly, and in a perpendicular direction, with eyes glaring fiercely Without a moment's hesitation, and almost without thought of the consequences Meegan grasped the body of the snake at a distance of about sixteen inches from the head, and held it firmly as his only chance of escape or thought what was to be done, Meantime the snake was coiling the lower part of Meegan's body in circles, and pressing him so acutely as to lead him to believe his bones would give way to the pressure. The snake was now moving his head to the right and left darting at Meegan's head, while the latter was compelled to dodge his head so as to avoid the snake's attack. Meegan at this time, finding himself losing ground while the snanke was gaining strength and vigor recollected that he had a jack knife in his pocket, and, after much trouble and nerve, succeeded in getting hold of it, and by a vigorous effort he cut the body of the snake across, about an inch from the spot where he held it. It was, perhaps, the greatest relief he ever experienced to find the snake's body relaxing and ultimately failing from his (Meegan's) body. The head and upper part of the snake, although still active, was evidently getting weaker, and Meegan ultimately succeeded, by means of his knife, in slaying the snake altogether The latter measured nine feet eight inches in length, and was of the black species. Meegan has preserved it in spirits, with the view of forwarding it to San Francisco.—Hollister Advance.

How She Takes the Train.

She comes down to the depot in an express wagon three hours before train time. She insists on sitting on her trunk, out on the platform, to keep it from being stolen. She picks up her riticule, fan, parasol, lunch-basket, small pot with a house plant in it, shawl, paper bag of candy, bouquet (she never travels without one,) small tumbler, and extra veil, and chases hysterically after every switch engine that goes by, under the impression that it is her train. Her voice trembles as she presents herself at the restaurant and tries to buy a ticket, and she knocks with the handle of her parasol on the door of the old disused tool house, in vain hopes that the baggage man will come out and check her trunk. She asks everybody in the depot and on the platform when the train will start and where it will stand and looking straight at the great clock asks, "What time is it now?" She sees, with terror, the baggage-man shy her trunk into a car where two men are smoking, instead of locking it up by itself in a large, strong brown car with "Bad order, shops," chalked on the side, which she has long ago determined to be the baggage car, as the only safe one in sight. Although the first at the depot she is the last to get her ticket, and once on the cars she sits to the end of her journey in an agony of apprehension that she has got on the wrong train and will be landed at some strange station, put in a close carriage, drugged, and murdered, and to every last male passenger who walks down the aisle she stands up and presents her ticket, which she invariable carries in her hand. She finally recognizes her waiting friends on the platform, leaves the car in a burst of gratitude, and the train is ten miles away before she remembers that her riticule, fan, parasol, lunch basket, verbena, shawl, candy, tumbler, veil, and and bouquet are on the car seat where she left them, or in the depot at Peoria, for the life she can't tell which.—Peoria Review.

A miser grows rich by seeming poor an extravagant man grows poor by seeming rich.

HOW EIGHT BOSTON WIVES HAD A DINNER.

The Boston Post tells the following story about a dinner at a famous Boston restaurant:

"Such a fame as Taft's makes dinner parties as innumerable as they are inviting, and it would be unaccountable on the doctrine of chance alone if there did not now and then [illegible] a funny incident to give piquancy as well as substancial delights to the Point Shirtey entertainments. Taft tells one that has just occurred at his cosy quarters, but a sly wink given after the whispering was over enjoined the preservation of the strictest incognition of all the parties concerned. It happened on the brightest and most delicious cool day of the week, when the atmosphere and the skies themselves seemed attuned to the event which was celebrated. Eight married gentleman of eminently epicurean tastes came together and set their minds upon having a dinner. There were four Englishmen and four Americans all of whom had tested the skill of cooks the world over. They wished to have everything complate, and going to Taft they gave him carte blanche for serving them up such a feast as they wanted.—Preparations began forthwith, and all the resources and appliances of Taft's cuisine were brought into requisition.

But meanwhile the wives of the eight gentlemen got wind of the affair They learned to their just indignation that their husbands were preparing for a grand feast for their sole edification, and that eight plates only were to be laid at their table. Without waiting for an explanation they dispacked a messengea to Taft's and duplicated their husbands' order, to be served in a separate dining room. The bills of fare were to be identical with the exception of cigars, and the strictness silence was enjoined. Not even a hint or a whisper was to pass between the husbands and the landlord. The hour appointed for the two dinners came, and the husbands sat down to their dinner, and the wives to theirs. The tables bore the results of Taft's unrivaled skill, and nothing was omitted to make it complete in every detail. Fish, birds, and all yielded their delicious mouthful, while the shining glare and excellent service was tickling to every sense.

"Not a word passed between the two spic-and-span-d ning rooms. All unsuspecting, the husbands drank a bumper to their wives at home, while the wives sipped the health of their husbands, who never dreamed of their presence under the same hospitable roof. Dinner over, the wives ordered their bill added to that of their unsuspecting husbands, and so the [illegible] was discovered. There is a pretty moral to all this, Taft thinks, and perhaps one hasn't far to search for it, either."

WHY MAN SHOULD MARRY.

It is not to sweep the house, and make the bed, and darn socks, and cook the meals chiefly that a man wants a wife. If this is all, when a young man calls to see a lady, send him into the pantry to taste the bread and cake she has made, send him to inspect the needle work and bed making or put a broom into her hand and send him to witness its use. Such things are important, and the wise young man will quietly look after them.

But what the true man most wants of a true wife is her companionship, sympathy, courage and love. The way of life has many dreary places in it, and a man needs a companion to go with him. A man is sometimes overtaken with misfortune, he meets with failure and defeat; trials and temptations beset him, and he needs one to stand by and sympathise. He has some stern battles to fight with poverty with enemies and with sin; and he needs a woman that while he puts his arm around her he feels that he has something to fight for, and will help him to fight; that will put her lips to his ear and whisper words of counsel, her hand to his heart and impart new inspirations. All through life, through storm and through sunshine, conflict and victory, through adverse and favoring wind, man needs a woman's love. The heart yearns for it. A sister or a mother's love will do much to make the path of life more happy, but the love of a true wife is like one part of the body sympathising with other parts. And the man who does not love his wife neglects to love himself and he that loves not himself has little hope to be loved by others.

Most of the shadows that cross our path through life are caused by our standing in our own light.

THURSDAY, OCT. 16, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention has adopted a section providing for the punishment of Legislative bribery....A quarantine inspection in New York has elicited the fact that there has been yellow fever in the lower harbor ever since June 1....The National Trust Company, of New York, has resumed....It is announced that the firm of Jay Cooke & Co. will soon make a proposition to its creditors for the purpose of enabling it to resume business. The members of the firm have pooled their private and personal assets, and will place it at the command of their creditors in liquidation of their indebtedness.

THE firm of Jay Cooke & Co. have made a proposition of assignment in trust to E. H. Rollins, late United States Revenue Commissioner, of all the property, real and personal, of every member of the firm, and of all the interest their wives have therein, the property to be appraised at its real value, converted as rapidly as possible, and turned out to the creditors in installments of 5 per cent. as fast as realized, the creditors also to have the privilege of taking the property, at individual option, for its appraised value. It is said that the proposition has been favorably received, as likely to occasion less delay in settlement than a proceeding in bankruptcy....Cortlandt Sprague, ex-City Treasurer of Brooklyn, and Marion T. Rodman, his deputy, have been indicted for embezzlement....The New York Grand Jury has indicted Kate Stoddard for the murder of Goodrich....Albert Garnier, having defeated Maurice Daly for the four-ball billiard championship, in New York, the other day, is now double-champion of the world—at the three-ball and the four-ball games.... The Buddington party of Polaris survivors arrived at New York last week, and proceeded at once to Washington. Capt. Buddington was arrested by order of the Secretary of the Navy, immediately on the landing of the steamer, and confined at the navy-yard. His arrest is savagely denounced by the New York press and people as a high-handed outrage.....The Evangelical Alliance, now in session in New York, is a noteworthy occurrence. It is a gathering of orthodox Protestant denominations, through representatives from Great Britain, France, Holland, Germany, Italy, the United States, India, Africa, and minor countries not necessary to enumerate. In short, it is a sort of Ecumencial Council of the orthodox Protestant churches. With reference to the representatives now in session, it very fairly represents every country of consequence in the world. Rev. Dr. Rigg, of London, says it is the most wonderful Evangelical Alliance that has ever been held..... The New York Herald prints a letter from Dundee, Scotland, stating that an important statement relative to the death of Capt. Hall, of the Polaris, has been made by Second Mate Morton, given to the United States Consul there, and been forwarded to the American Government. Morton was Hall's attendant in his last illness, and he has made a statement, so says the Herald, implicating Dr. Bissell in the death of Hall....Peake, Opdyke & Co., heavy New York dry-goods dealers, have temporarily suspended. Their liabilities are $2,500,000. The firm will continue business, paying their indebtedness in installments, all within eighteen months, with 10 per cent. interest. The firm of Paton & Co., who failed for $1,400,000, have made a similar arrangement with their creditors....There has been a general reduction in the prices and hours of labor in the large Eastern manufactories. Many of them have discharged a portion of the working force, while others are working on half time.

CONNECTICUT has finally decided to make Hartford the sole capital of the State by a majority of from 2,000 to 3,000.....The Graphic balloon made another attempt at New York, the other day, to mount the much-talked-of "easterly air-current" and sail across the broad Atlantic. The effort proved quite as abortive as the first. The air-ship was caught in a storm in the northeast corner of Connecticut, and descended near enough to the ground for the occupants to jump out, leaving the unruly craft to pursue its journey alone....By the explosion of a blast furnace in Smith's pipe foundry, in Pittsburgh, last week, two workmen were fatally and two seriously burned....A step toward the resumption of specie payment is being made in Philadelphia. Several firms of that city are now paying their employes in gold, with an abatement of ten per cent.

EIGHT inches of snow fell in Delaware county, N. Y., on the 7th inst....Another bank defalcation is reported—that of John W. Pierce, Cashier of the Merchants' National, of Lowell, Mass., whose "irregularities" will reach some $50,000. Speculation and fast living, of course....Charlestown, Brookline, Brighton and West Roxbury have voted in favor of annexation to Boston. By these acquisitions that city gains 50,000 population. ....Pittsburgh manufacturers have agreed to pay their employes half their weekly wages, and credit them with the remainder until financial matters look up, instead of discharging one-half of their hands.

The West.

FORTY thousand people visited the Indianapolis Exposition in one day, recently.....The Chicago police made a raid on the low variety theaters of that city, the other night, closed them up, captured all the inmates, 165 in number, and marched them to the calaboose. ....An immense multitude, variously estimated at from 40,000 to 70,000, assembled at Lansing, Mich., on the 2d inst., to witness the ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of the new State-House....The Cheyenne Indians in Colorado are slaughtering the cattle of the settlers by the wholesale, and committing other depredations. The Indians say the white men killed the buffalo last winter, and let them rot on the plains, and now they are going to kill all the cattle of the whites. There is great excitement, and the whites are organizing for defense.

A [illegible] named Jacob Stripe, whose parents reside at Van Wert, Ohio, the other day vomited up a garter snake eighteen inches long and half an inch thick....The Cincinnati Exposition proved a brilliant success. The total number of admissions was 508,000.... Near Schuyler, Neb., a few days ago, a young wretch named Fahey murdered his father by beating his brains out with the butt of a gun, and knocked his sister senseless, leaving her for dead. The murderer was arrested.

THE statement of the condition of the Union National (Coolbaugh's) Bank, of Chicago (in liquidation), is a most gratifying one to its creditors. Their total assets are $3,468,504.94; liabilities, $2,203,326.02; excess of assets, $1,255,178.92....Over $16,000,000 in currency was received at Chicago by express between the 25th of September and the 2d of October. ....The new Michigan State House will be one of the finest public edifices in the country....An unsophisticated gentleman hailing from New York city, was swindled out of $6,000 in Chicago, last week, by two gamblers....The Chicago Board of Trade gave $1,000 to the Shreveport sufferers....The amount of bullion received at San Francisco from the mines during the quarter was nearly $10,000,000, and for the last nine months $24,000,000.

THE St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette has been sold at auction to Joseph A. Corby for $25,000.

THE Third National Bank of Chicago, which suspended during the late financial unpleasantness, has resumed business.....The survivors of Capt. Jack's tribe have been sent to Fort Russell, Wyoming Territory.....Ex-Congressman John Law, of Evansville, Ind., is dead, aged 77.....Mrs. Horton, of Van Wert, O., the other day left her infant in a cradle near the fire-place, and went out to witness a circus procession. When she returned her child was burned to a crisp.

THE Union National Bank of St. Louis has gone into liquidation....A farmer named William H. Brown, while eating his dinner at a Fort Wayne hotel, the other day, was choked to death by a piece of meat which lodged in his throat....The Constitutional Convention of Michigan has declined to admit the eligibility of women to any public office whatever, excluding them even from the school boards. ....Wisconsin has 225 Granges....A colored man named Price has sued the school directors of a district in Morgan county, Ill., for $10,000 damages, because they refused to admit his children into the school....Chicago's death-roll for August was 1,423; for September, 1,008.

The South.

YELLOW FEVER is raging as badly as ever at Shreveport, La., and Memphis, Tenn. At the former place the scourge is abated, if at all, only by the frightful depopulation it has already caused. The citizens of Memphis have issued an appeal for aid, addressed to the whole country, and begging for the co-operation of the mayors of the various cities to secure it. Money is most needed to buy food, bury the dead, and shelter the orphans....The town of Lampasas, Texas, was recently inundated by the overflow of a creek which runs through the village. Twenty houses, including the postoffice and several stores, together with their contents, were swept away, and six or eight persons drowned....A horse ran away with a street-car in St. Louis, last week, and, colliding with another car, killed one of the passengers, and seriously injured four or five others....Joseph H. Fore, of St. Louis—who some time ago murdered his brother-in-law, who made three unsuccessful attempts to kill his wife, and who the other day came near murdering an attorney in court—has been sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.

THE tobacco crop now being secured is the best that has been raised in Virginia for years past....President Grant has ordered 5,000 army rations for the suffering and starving people of Shreveport....The De Soto Bank, Memphis, has resumed.

THE ravages of the yellow fever at Memphis are frightful to contemplate. A dispatch of the 6th inst. says: The number of deaths in the infected district yesterday was so great that the undertakers were unable to bury the bodies, and to-day in two or three instances whole families were carried to the burying-ground at one load. Scenes in that part of the city are beyond description. Those not afflicted are so demoralized that they can be of no assistance to the sick, but seem chained to the locality, and make no effort to get away.

THE South was visited by the first frost of the season on the 7th inst....During the height of the yellow fever scare a number of citizens of Little Rock, Ark., chartered sleeping-coaches on the railroads, in which they slept, going out several miles on the railroad in the evening, and returning next morning. ....An old Italian padrone, with fourteen boys, who arrived at Little Rock a few ago, was taken in charge by the Italians, his money taken away from him and divided between the children, and he was ordered to leave the city. ....The bagging factory of Richardson, Henry & Co., of Louisville, has been burned. Loss, $70,000.

Washington.

CHARLES WILLIAMS (colored) is to be hung at Washington on the 14th of November for the murder of Frank Cohn, a Virginia drover. ....The railroad lobbyists and land-grabbers are organizing for the coming session of Congress. A Washington correspondent states that Ben Holliday, the Oregon railroad magnate, has taken a house at the capital for the session, in order to press the indorsement of his railroad bonds on which the interest was repudiated last winter. The Northern Pacific interest also boasts of its ability to get a Government indorsement on the ground that its bonds are so well diffused, through the constituencies, that enough members can be got to vote for their relief....It is reported from Washington that a majority of President Grant's Cabinet are in favor of restoring the franking privilege to the departments. The Postmaster-General will oppose the restoration, however, in his next annual report.... The Chicago Tribune's special Washington correspondent gives some gossip about the vacant Chief Justiceship. Senator Conkling is said to desire that Judge Ward Hunt should have it. Judge Pierrepont and Mr. Wm. M. Evarts are also prominently mentioned, the only objection to the latter being the fear that he will not keep the place for any length of time. Butler's opposition to Judge Hoar is thought to be sufficient to defeat the latter's prospects, while Justice Miller, of Ohio, and Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, are reported as ahead in the race.... The President has declared he will call no extra session of Congress. While he thinks that the financial situation does not demand an extra session, he still makes the announcement that he will put out the $44,000,000 "reserve" as rapidly as is consistent with the Treasury's interest....Fant, Washington & Co., bankers, have resumed business.

THE Attorney-General apprehends a repetition of the Louisiana political troubles in Mississippi....The Solicitor of the Treasury adheres to his decision that unnaturalized foreigners cannot act as steamboat officers, even as pilots or engineers. Declaration of intention to become citizens will not answer. They must be fully naturalized....A petition in bankruptcy has been filed in Washington against Jay Cooke & Co., by a creditor, to the amount of about $10,000.

MORTON, ROSE & Co. have been appointed fiscal agents of the State Department in Europe....A reliable Washington correspondent says: "It seems to be agreed all around that as soon as Congress meets innumerable measures affecting the finances will be brought forward, including the project for free banking, which came near going through last winter." ....Simon Cameron was at the capital last week, and predicted that the coming session of Congress will be chiefly accupied in discussing the repeal of the Salary bill and the financial and cheap transportation questions.

A COMMISSION has been appointed by the Secretary of War for the erection of a military prison at Rock Island, Ill. The prison is to be kept exclusively for the confinement of military offenders against the army regulations and laws....Appointments by the President: Samuel L. Glasgow, of Iowa, to be Consul at Glasgow, and John A. Bridgeland, of Indiana, to be Consul at Havre.

Foreign.

THE political atmosphere about Paris is gradually lowering, and the public need not be surprised at any future announcement. Thiers has been called to the metropolis to assume the leadership of the Liberals....The friendly relations between Russia and Japan are about to be ruptured. The cause of the difficulty is a misunderstanding concerning the ownership of an obscure island....The German naval Capt. Werner, who seized the steamer Vigilante in the harbor of Cartagena, is to be court-marshaled....The Afghans have been badly defeated by the Persians in a battle fought near Balkh, in Central Asia....Two Swiss explorers have been murdered by the natives in Central Asia.

ADVICES from Spain represent the cause of the Republic as gaining ground rapidly..... Five persons were killed and a dozen maimed by the fall of a chimney in the village of Northfleet, England, the other day.....Sir Samuel Baker, the African traveler, and his wife will visit this country next summer..... The Echo de Parlement of Brussels has advices that a Monarchy will be declared in France upon the convening of the Assembly. ....The Pope declines the various polite invitations he has had to emigrate from Rome. In an address to a delegation of 300 of the faithful, the other day, he said: "Confusion has entered the enemy's camp. They strive to induce me to leave Rome, but I never will."....Central Asia is in a terribly disturbed condition. A civil war is raging in Khokan; the Turcomans of the desert around Khiva are obstinately fighting the Russians; the Afghans are warring on the Persians; and the Bey of Trashir is fighting the Chinese. Bokhara seems to be the point of contention.

MATTERS in France are growing decidedly interesting. The Republican members of the Assembly are hastening to Paris for consultation. Thiers has written a letter, in which he says the Left must defend the Republic, the principles of 1789, and the tri-color, without which the counter-revolution would be an odious and revolting lie. The London Observer has a report that 350 members of the Assembly have pledged themselves to support a restoration of the monarchy. It is also rumored that Thiers has consented to an alliance with the Imperialists to defeat the restoration....Many of the white settlers in the Fejee Islands refuse to pay their taxes, and a state of anarchy prevails.....Owing to the failure of the crops, a famine prevails in some sections of Hungary.... The ancient city of Alexandria, Egypt, is having a financial panic....The announcement that the "Old Catholic" Bishop Reinkens, who has been recognized by the German Emperor, will take the oath of allegiance to the Empire, foreshadows a step in the direction of the disestablishment of the Pope's spiritual rule over the Catholics of Germany.

THE French Monarchists are taking time by the forelock. They have already selected a Cabinet in anticipation of a change of government. The veteran Changarnier is named for Secretary of War, and is the only one of the prospective Cabinet who is known in this country as prominently identified with French politics....The trial of Marshal Bazaine was commenced at Versailles on the 6th inst. Nearly all the witnesses who had been summoned were present, and the court-room was filled with the most distinguished men of France. Bazaine appeared in the full uniform of a Marshal of France, with the ribbon and Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor on his breast. He took his seat in an arm-chair by the side of his counsel, and was courteously addressed by the President of the Court as "Monsieur le Marechal" throughout the proceedings. The Duc d'Aumale is credited with the positive assertion that Bazaine will be condemned to death and then pardoned.

THE Spanish Carlists have received a terrible drubbing in the Province of Navarre. The insurgents of Cartagena recently made a sortie, and were also badly punished.....There have been 1,500 deaths from cholera in Vienna since July 16.

A DUBLIN dispatch says the Irish Agricultural Laborers' Union, in the event of Government failing to settle the question of waste lands in Ireland, have decided to emigrate to the United States, en masse....The French Government, in opening the prosecution, makes out a very bad case against Marshal Bazaine. It claims to have evidence that he was chiefly engaged in plotting for the restoration of the Empire, and, to this end, was in secret negotiation with the enemy. If the Government can produce the evidence it claims to have, it will go hard with Marshal Bazaine. Death is the penalty of the crimes of which he is accused.

Political.

THE New York State Democratic Convention, at Utica, which was presided over by Horatio Seymour, adopted the report of the Committee on Credentials, which favored the admission of the Tammany Hall delegation from New York city, whereupon the Apollo Hall delegation withdrew to their hotel, prepared a formal protest, charged that the Committee on Credentials was packed, and resolved to "calmly and confidently appeal to the ballot" in New York city "to rebuke the arrogance of Tammany Hall." The convention held out the right hand of fellowship to the Liberal Republicans as worthy coadjutors in the work of reform. A resolution was adopted to exclude from the State Committee any member of Congress who voted for or accepted the back pay. The following nominations were made: Diedrich Willers, Jr., Secretary of State; Asher C. Nichols, Comptroller; Daniel Pratt, Attorney-General; Thomas Raines, Treasurer; Sylvanus S. Sweet, State Engineer and Surveyor; James Jackson, Canal Commissioner, and George W. Millspaugh, State Prison Inspector....Henry L. Pierce, Mayor of Boston, has been nominated by the Republicans of the Third Massachusetts District to succeed Mr. Whiting (deceased) in Congress.

NAVAL-OFFICER KING and Surveyor Gilpin, of the Baltimore Custom-House, are charged with levying assessments upon their employes, and the matter is to be investigated.

THE Apollo Hall Democracy, who were excluded from the New York State Democratic Convention, and threatened to contest their rights at the polls, have wheeled into line, and now announce their intention of supporting the regular ticket.

THE New York Liberal Republican State Convention, which met at Elmira last week, reaffirmed the principles set forth in the Cincinnati platform last year, and nominated a full ticket for State offices, as follows: Secretary of State, Diedrich Willard; Comptroller, Nelson K. Hopkins; Attorney General, Daniel Pratt; Treasurer, Thomas H. Raires; Canal Commissioner, James Jackson; Engineer, Sylvanus H. Sweet; State Prison Inspector, M. K. Platt....In regard to the Chief Justiceship, the Indianapolis Journal (Republican) says: "We are enabled to state, on private information of a trustworthy character, that the President has not tendered the office of Chief Justice to Senator Conkling, nor in any way committed himself to that gentleman on the subject."

General.

THERE has recently been a grand council, at Toronto, of all the Indian tribes in Canada. ....The flow of specie from England to this country continues....The First National Bank of Denison, Texas, and the First National of Parsons, Kansas, it is stated, are the only banks in the Southwest that have not failed or suspended.

EX-PRESIDENT JOHNSON lost $60,000, comprising the bulk of his fortune, by the failure of the First National Bank of Washington.... The Mint at Philadelphia, under orders from Washington, is coining double-eagles at the rate of $10,000,000 per month. The California Mint is running at its full capacity on gold coinage and trade-dollars.

SENATOR ANTHONY, who is a member of Senator Morton's Committee on Privileges and Elections, which has the subject of electoral reform under consideration, predicts that the committee will not report in favor of electing the President by a direct popular vote, for the reason that such a proposition could not receive a two-thirds vote....If it is true, as reported from London, that the crops have failed in Hungary, which is one of Europe's important granaries, American breadstuffs will be in even greater demand this year than has been anticipated, and the effects of the late panic will be the more speedily dissipated in this country.

MONTREAL is building a female prison, to cost $200,000....The New York Tribune, of the 8th inst., prints an important document relating to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Some two years ago that corporation endeavored to negotiate its bonds in Europe. Two Commissioners, one from Berlin and the other from Vienna, were appointed to visit America, and report on the prospects of the enterprise, prior to the admission of the bonds on the market. The two reports, one made by Herr Haas, a Government Director of the Prussian railways, and the other by Herr Foltz, of Vienna, agreed, after personal inspection, in advising the European capitalists not to invest. The Tribune publishes the report of Herr Haas in full. One of the most notable points of the whole affair is that the European Commissioners foresaw, two years ago, that Northern Pacific was an unprofitable and unsafe investment.

MANITOBA has another excitement, and at present seems to be on the verge of a civil war, growing out of the arrest of Louis Riel and Lepine, his Adjutant-General, for their connection with the insurrection against the Canadian Governor, McDougall, in 1869.... The annual report of President Orton, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, shows the capital stock to be $40,073,410, of which $7,395,235 is held by the company; the debt, $6,038,410; gross receipts for the year, $9,333,018.51, and net earnings, $2,757,962.69. The company were operating July 1, 1873, 65,757 miles of line, 154,471 miles of wire, and 5,740 offices. During the year 14,456,832 messages were dispatched.... The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections have decided to report favorably on Senator Morton's plan for electing the President and Vice-President by popular vote. The plan is substantially as follows:

First—To abolish the electorial colleges.

Second—That the President and Vice-President be elected by the people voting directly for the candidates.

Third—That each State shall be divided into as many Districts as the State is entitled to representatives in Congress, to be composed of contiguous territory compact in form and as nearly equal in population as may be, and the person having the highest number of votes for President in each District shall receive the vote of that District for President, which shall count one Presidential vote. That each State shall be entitled to two Presidential votes at large, which shall be counted for the person having the highest number of votes in the whole State.

Fourth—The person having the highest number of such Presidental votes in the United States shall be President.

Fifth—These provisions shall be applicable to the election of Vice-President.

Sixth—Congress shall have power to provide for holding and conducting elections for President and Vice-President, and to establish tribunals for the decision of contests as to the vote in any District or State, and make regulations governing the proceedings of these tribunals.

Capt. Hall's Death—Statements of the Buddington Party.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune sends from Dundee, Scotland, under date of Oct. 1, some interesting details of the adventures of the rescued crew of the Polaris. Buddington and Schumann tell the story of Capt. Hall's death as follows:

SCHUMANN'S STATEMENT.

Schumann, first engineer, says that after his return from the Northern sledge journey, on coming into the cabin the Captain turned sick, and after lying down vomited a great deal. He would not taste anything at first, but afterward asked for a cup of tea. He got tea, but he had no sooner partaken of it than the vomiting returned more violently than before. About six hours afterward he took delirium and contined in this condition three days. On recovering his senses, however, he grew better, got up, and wrote up his journals He also attended to his other duties as if he had been in his usual health; but he never went out. In about ten days afterward he was again seized, and got worse and worse until the night of the 7th, when he became calm. Seeing Dr. Bessel near, he called him and said: "I am very much obliged to you for the kindness you have shown to me, Doctor." After uttering these words he relapsed, and in the morning he was dead.

BUDDINGTON'S STATEMENT.

Capt. Buddington gives a brief account of Hall's death. He says: On the 24th Capt. Hall returned, having reached a bay which he named Newman's Bay. Not long after his return Capt. Hall was taken seriously ill, and Dr. Bessel said his disease was apoplexy. For two weeks he continued in bad health, but now and again he would rally and appear well, and then relapse suddenly. On the morning of the 8th he died, and on the 10th we buried him half a mile to the south of the observatory.

How the Indians are Swindled.

The St. Paul Dispatch exposes one of the largest pine-land swindles ever developed. It consists in the sale of all the timber lands on the Leech Lake Indian Reservation, in Northern Minnesota, for $1.50 per 1,000 stumpage. This sale was made last November by P. P. Smith, present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who was the Agent for the Chippewas of Minnesota. A. H. Wilder, of this city, who represents the pine-land ring, was the purchaser. The Dispatch publishes the contract in full between Smith and Wilder, which was made in Washington, D. C. The contract gives Wilder all the timber which does not measure 14 inches in diameter 25 feet above the ground without any charge whatever. He is to pay $1.15 per thousand for all over 14 inches in diameter.

The extent of this swindle can be partially realized when it is understood that Minnesota lumbermen pay from $2.50 to $4.00 per $1,000 for lumber which measures 12 inches in diameter, 24 feet from the ground. The contract intimates that there are 200,000,000 feet on the reservation. There is probably more, but if this is all it could be sold to-day for $400,000 advance on Wilder's contract.

The Indians were not consulted, and when they learned during the summer that their timber had been sold, they were so enraged that the Agent called on the commander at Fort Ripley for troops to prevent an outbreak. The Indians are in a terrible state, being almost naked, and many must starve and freeze to death the coming winter unless something is done for them.

Visible Supply of Grain.

The visible supply of grain, including the stocks in granary at the principal points of accumulation at lake and seaboard ports, in transit on the lakes, the New York canals, and by rail, was, Sept. 20, 1873:

ACCORDING to a report made at the late session of the Wesleyan Conference, that body numbers 348,580 members, with 20,844 persons on trial. They have also 5,869 Sunday schools, with 666,766 scholars, an increase of 77 schools and 12,189 scholars during 1872.

THE MODOC EXECUTIONS.

Hanging of Capt. Jack and his Fellow-Murderers.

[Fort Klamath (Oct. 3) Cor. San Francisco Bulletin.]

Boston Charley and Black Jim were led on the scaffold first, and Schonchin next. They trod it with apparent indifference and iron nerve, having evidently resolved to die as brave as they have lived.

Capt. Jack's thin lips were tightly compressed, and bearing himself erect, without trace of fear, he turned his deep-set, glittering eyes toward the spot where the remnant of his people, with their wives and papooses, stood, with a glance firm and proud, though sad. He had grown a little fleshier during his captiviiy. But with his large, well-formed head, firmly poised on hard, sinewy shoulders, his clear-cut features, deep-set, piercing black eyes, and commanding carriage, even on the scaffold his appearance was striking.

Boston Charley looked the same lithe, muscular savage, cunning, daring, and cruel, that he was the morning of the massacre, when, having breakfasted with good old Dr. Thomas, he treacherously shot him, and kept firing until his pistol was empty, though the first shot was fatal. He cast his eyes over the scene with furtive glances, but showed no signs of blanching.

Black Jim, who assaulted Mr. Dyar, and who was a leader of the band that committed the massacre at Lost River, Oregon, maintained an air of stolid impassibility. Jim was only about 30 years of age, and physically was a splendid looking fellow, muscular and trim built.

Schonchin, who shot and mutilated Meacham, and though over 40 years of of age and wounded in the first fight, proved one of the most formidable of the band, was last on the scafford. He had evidently made up his mind to die boldly, and displayed no evidence of the least discomposure. Jack walked easily up the scaffold stairway, but looked wretched and miserable.

The manacles had been struck off, but their arms were securely pinioned with cords.

At precisely 9:45 a. m., the interpreters, Capt. O. C. Applegate and David Hill, explained to the culprits the nature of the order to be read to them by the Adjutant, and at 10 a. m., Adjutant Kingsbury read the orders promulgating the sentence of the commission and the President's order therein, with the orders of the Secretary of War and the Department Commander on the premises.

The two reprieved prisoners, Barncho and Slotuk, yet stood on the ground in front of the scaffold, shackled and under guard. During the reading the pinioned victims were seated on the platform of the scaffold, which consisted of uprights about seven feet high, surmounted by a cross-beam thirty feet in length. The platform was set on pine poles, eight feet below the beam, solid at the back, and with a hinged drop on which all were seated, with their feet on the drop, listening anxiously, but, of course, not understanding a word of it. The reading occupied ten minutes.

Then the Adjutant read the order of commutation in the case of Barncho and Slotuk, which was issued on the ground that they were merely acting under Capt. Jack's orders in what they did. The poor fellows were taken back to the stockade, evidently happy at not accompanying the others to the happy hunting grounds.

The coffins, six in number, had been placed directly in the rear of the gallows, two of them destined to be unoccupied, as the order commuting the sentences of Barncho and Slotuk only arrived at 10:30 last evening, and preparations had been made for them likewise.

The chaplain then offered up earnest and fervent prayer for the souls of the culprits, which was listened to attentively.

At 10:15 the fatal nooses were placed around their necks, under direction of Capt. Hoge. It was necessary to cut off a little of Jack's long hair, which was in the way of the rope. Capt. Hoge then bid farewell to the prisoners, and the black caps were placed over the heads of all the culprits. It must have been an awful moment.

At 10:20 they stood on the drop, the rope was cut by the assistant at a signal made by Capt. Hoge's handkerchief. The bodies swung round and round, Jack and Jim apparently dying easily, but Boston and Schonchin suffering terrible convulsions. Boston and Schonchin repeatedly drew up their legs, but the two others seemed to die almost instantly.

As the drop fell with a terribly deadly thud four poor human beings fell into eternity, and a half-smothered cry of horror went up from the crowd of over 500 Klamath Indians who witnessed the awful spectacle. Wails of deep and bitter anguish went up from the stockade where the wives and children of the poor fellows had a fair view of the shocking scene.

Hydrophobia Cured.

We find in the Medical Record an account of cure in a case of hydrophobia. A little girl was bitten by a mad dog who tore out of her right cheek a piece the size of a silver dollar, and also bit her right arm and leg. She was treated by immediately cauterizing the wound with a saturated solution of carbolic acid, and keeping it wet constantly with a weaker solution of the same, while two drops of liquor ammonia fortis were given her every two hours in water. Three days afterward the wound was cauterized a second time with nitrate of silver and the dose of ammonia was increased to three drops. This treatment was continued till Aug. 9, the wound not being allowed to be dry a single instant during the whole period, and it was healed without leaving a scar. As two years have since elapsed without symptoms of the poison, it is believed that the patient is entirely out of danger.

Forestry.

It is a matter of general knowledge that vast reaches of land once luxuriantly fertile are, to-day, waste deserts. Great tracts of Persia, Syria, and Greece, for example, the gardens of antiquity, now lie arid and desolate under kindless skies. But if a curse have fallen on these regions, as superstition holds, it is the curse of man's stupidity and greed, not of God's anger. They are deserts because great droughts bake and calcine them. And these droughts befall because the whole land is disforested.

When the mountains of the East were clothed with trees from base to summit, and groves of oak and willow sheltered the little streams, grain fields and orchards, olive and fig abounded, and hillside vineyards ripened almost on the topmost rock. Husbandmen prospered. Cities grew and multiplied. Day and night the trees exhaled fertility, sheltering the little vines and rootlets at their feet that held the soil together, and hid innumerable tiny reservoirs of water; shading the brooks from the fierceness of the southern sun; drawing the moisture for their own roots through natural aqueducts of far-off springs; tossing into the heated air from every lifting leaf a vaporous coolness to be re-distilled into life-giving rain.

Dead to their usefulness, however, and careless of their beauty, greedy men took counsel together how soonest to clear away those stately cumberers of the ground. For the little money that they brought, and the little area that they covered, those wiseacres cut off their splendid forests. As man destroyed his shelter the desert crept on him step by step, and destroyed his works. Without the protection of the trees all the luxuriant undergrowth perished. Then, when the rains fell, they soaked through the powdery soil to swell the rushing streams, making an instant deluge to be followed by a hopeless drought. Crops died. Husbandmen starved or begged. Cities crumbled into ruin. As the rainfall dwindled more, famines came that consumed whole tribes of innocent men. And fever and pestilence, following after famine, gleaned what human harvest that evil reaper left.

Terrible as is this retribution, however, those ancient barbarians were not much guiltier than are we modern Goths. The average American holds that the providential destiny of a tree is to be cut down. The pioneer's ax would almost find its way alone to the woods, there, automatically, to hew and hack till the most innocent sapling fell, so used is its brute strength to that destruction. Every summer tourist shudders to recall the endless miles of parched road blistering in the sun, the staring schoolhouse at the cross-roads seeming to crackle with heat, the bare farm-houses white-hot in their unsheltered yards, which everywhere distinguished his dear, his native land. And if some late relenting woodman spare his tree, or if the forests of half-barren wastes escape the ax, is there not a rushing locomotive ever ready to drop its fatal spark into the tindery underbrush?

While this destruction sweeps on, swift-paced, under the name of land improvement or of accident, almost no reparation is made. Our temperate climate and vast territory will long defy the famine and pestilence which we ignorantly invite. But they cannot postpone the sterility which even now threatens vast sections.—Christian Union.

A Charcoal Sketch.

A good example of the value of even slight work by artists of distinction, is afforded by a charming little charcoal "frotte," by Rosa Bonheur, which has been recently imported by Mr. Schaus. It is about fourteen by twenty-four inches in size, has not yet been put into the public exhibition, but is privately shown to persons fond of art.

The drawing is very sketchy, and the light and shadow are scarcely graduated at all, though the subject—a flock of sheep and their shepherd, with his dog—is rendered with all the spirit and feeling that characterize her most elaborate paintings of animals. The sheep, about twenty in number, are grazing in an upland meadow, in the background of which low hills are slightly defined against the sky. The flock is scarcely indicated more than by the fresh outlines of the artist, yet each individual in it has its own expression and motive; and the man and the dog in the foreground are developed only one step further than the rest.

No one can, of course, tell precisely the time required to execute such a work as this, for every separate part of it may have been the result of direct study from nature, but, with the facility acquired by great practice, and the slightness of the outlines, it would seem as if two or three hours should have been sufficient to complete it, and yet, for this little picture, $1,500 in gold was paid in Europe as the lowest price at which it could be obtained.

Wendell Phillips' Repartee.

The following anecdote is related of Wendell Phillips: During the sitting of a Methodist Conference in Boston, Mr. Phillips entered a horse-car in which there were a number of clergymen. Immediately he was pointed out to them as the great agitator, and one, bolder than the rest, who did not sympathize with the anti-slavery movement, addressed him, asking if he was Wendell Phillips, and upon receiving an affirmative reply he said, "You preach up the doing away with slavery in the South, don't you?" "Yes," answered Phillips, "I preach in favor of the abolition of Southern slavery." "Well," said the minister, with a critical accent, "don't you think you had better go down South and preach it?" "No," replied Phillips, "I think it is well to preach my doctrine in the North;" and then surveying the clergyman's person, he said, "You are a minister, I presume, from your appearance?" "Yes, I am a minister," said the other. "Well, you preach for the salvation of souls from hell, I presume," said Phillips. "I do," answered the clergyman. "Well," retorted Phillips, "don't you think you had better go to hell and preach it?"

THE FARMERS' MOVEMENT.

Illinois.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of farmers of Kankakee county was held at Kankakee on the 30th ult., at which a full ticket for county officers was nominated. The President, on calling the convention to order, delivered a lengthy address, embracing the principal features of the progress, etc., of the farmers' anti-monopoly movement. He said:

Gentlemen: In calling you to order to-day, it gives me pleasure to be able to report progress all along the farmers' lines. From Maine to California, and from Minnesota to Florida, organization is going on rapidly in nearly every State in the Union, and if we make as rapid progress the ensuing year as in the past, we can certainly make our power felt in the land. There are now over 6,000 granges in working order, with a united membership of nearly half a million, and it is estimated that the membership of farmers' clubs greatly exceeds that number. What has caused the spontaneous uprising of the farmers all over the country, and especially in the West? I answer, it is the iron rule of oppression and extortion of the great railroad corporations of the country, and special or class legislation which is grinding us into the earth. In the terse language of Gov. Booth, of California, if a corporation turns its determination to direct and debauch legislation, manipulates the machinery of both parties, which controls all the great lines of inter-communication, endeavors to override and crush out every interest it cannot control; that makes bribery a trade, corruption a system; defies the State to collect taxes; openly acts upon the principle that it will make the avenues to justice so expensive that no private party can afford to seek legal redress against its wrongs; openly or secretly whispers away the good name of every public man who will not do its bidding. Instance the fact that 224,000,000 acres of public lands have been given to railroad companies, and that they ask 189,000,000 more; that the Southern States have been robbed to the verge of bankruptcy under the suspicious guise of railroad building; that all through the the West, towns and counties are groaning under taxes to pay interest on bonds issued ostensibly for railroads, but really for the benefit of contract and finance companies. This is a constantly growing power. It is rapidly centralizing, becoming more and more a political element, to the detriment and danger of a republican government. We are by far the most numerous industrial class in the United States, and as we represent an enormous capital and an immense wealth, let us combine, and I believe we shall be able to carry everything before us in all the Western States. As a class we are scarcely represented in Congress, and but meagerly in the State Legislature. We have allowed agents of corporations to monopolize legislation, to set up candidates, to propose laws, to bargain and intrigue for special privileges, and we have blindly voted at their dictation. It has debauched a score of the most eminent men in Congress, to say nothing of a multitude of minor politicians whom it owes body and soul. I believe it has debauched both political parties to such an extent that there is no hope of their reformation.

The Committee on Credentials reported 25 clubs and granges represented, with a membership of about 1,200. A committee reported the following platform:

1. We believe in the protection of honest industry in all the various associations of life, and are opposed to the encroachment of aggregated capital.

2. We are in favor of controlling by law the railroad corporations of the State.

3. We submit to taxation and duties to meet the necessities of the Government, but denounce as unjust and oppressive all taxation for the benefit of special classes.

4. We are opposed to all salary grab and other Government steals.

5. We are opposed to all future grants of land to railroads or other corporations, and believe that the public domain should be held sacred to the actual settler.

6. We are in favor of rigid economy in all departments of the public service.

7. We are in favor of honesty and capability as the only tests of official position.

The following resolutions were adopted by the farmers of Jo Daviess county, Ill., in mass convention assembled:

We, the undersigned, working farmers of Jo Daviess county, Ill., assembled together this day in convention, to discuss our political duties in relation to the anti-monopoly movement now being inaugurated throughout a large portion of our country, after serious deliberation do conclude as follows:

That the interests of all workingmen, whether farmers, laborers, mechanics or manufacturers, demand united political action to protect themselves against the continued encroachments of the monopoly power;

That our former political differences originated chiefly with questions we believe now to be finally settled.

That the existing Republican and Democratic parties are calculated to perpetuate these differences, and thus present stumbling blocks to effective political co-operation.

That resolutions of censure against monopolits and corruptionists will avail nothing unless promptly followed by appropriate voting; therefore,

Resolved, That we respectfully invite our fellow-citizens, without regard to past political associations, who sympathize with these views, and are willing to co-operate with us at the polls, to meet with us in mass convention at Elizabeth, on Saturday, Sept. 27, at 1 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of perfecting an organization to be called "The Farmers' Anti-Monopoly Party of Jo Daviess County," and for the transaction of such other business as may be deemed appropriate to the occasion.

Kansas.

The following is a syopsis of the resolutions adopted by the recent farmers' and workingmen's convention at Lawrence, Kansas:

1. Legislative control of railroads.
2. Treats of finance and the national banking system.
3. Demands a sound and safe currency.
4. Asks for a revision of the tariff laws.
5. Demands that other methods of taxation be devised, and that the wealth of the nation pay its proportion.
6. Asks for increased transportation facilities.
7. Demands that the public domain be reserved for actual settlers.
8. Denounces the back-salary steal.
9. Discusses the Credit Mobilier and other giant swindles, and asks for a united effort to reform.

Missouri.

The following resolutions were adopted by the recent farmers' mass meeting at Jefferson City, Mo.:

Resolved, That, as the products of our labor as farmers and the exchange of commodities of our class constitute so large a proportion of railroad profits, and the construction of such railroads has been achieved by taxation, we have thought to insist upon the lowest and fairest rates of transportation, and that we demand of the General Assembly the arrangement of pro rata rates of all railroads in our State.

Resolved, That we demand of the approaching General Assembly the reduction of the taxes now imposed, to the lowest point compatible with the support of the State Government.

Resolved, That we demand and expect from our public servants the exercise of honesty and integrity in the discharge of their several duties, and we pledge ourselves to carry out the purport of this resolution.

Resolved, That the recent financial pressure has demonstrated the peril of placing so much power with any set of moneyed institutions, and that more caution should be observed in the future concession to them of chartered privileges.

Resolved, That the recent action of Congress in voting to itself the compensation of back pay and increased salary deserves the censure of all honorable men, and the immediate repeal of the law is demanded by every consideration of justice and common honesty.

Resolved, That simple justice demands that all United States bonds issued in the future be taxed as other property, and that Congress should provide for the earliest possible retirement of such bonds as, by their terms, are exempt from taxation.

Resolved, That the system of universal education should receive the hearty support of the farmers of Missouri.

Resolved, That justice to the tobacco growers demands a repeal of the present onerous regulations with regard to the sale of that commodity in an unmanufactured state.

Resolved, That we urge upon Congress the importance of sufficient appropriations for the improvement of our navigable streams, and especially the improvement of the Mississippi river.

Michigan.

The occasion of the annual meeting of the Kalamazoo County Agricultural Society, occurring this year on Oct. 1, 2 and 4, was improved by the Michigan State Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry to hold a mass convention for Southwestern Michigan, and Oct. 3 was selected as the day, and Kalamazoo the place. There was an unusually large attendance, over 7,000 people being present. Hon. W. C. Flagg, of Illinois, addresed themeeting. He commenced by stating the origin of the movement, and described the difficulties encountered in the initiation, saying that the several monopolies with which the farmers had to contend were sharply watchful and aggressive as to their rights and interests, and these several monopolies had conspired together to defeat the farmers in this movement. He declared that all the railroads and steamboat lines of the country were monopolies, as in the beginning they had cost little, had earned vast amounts that had been divided in money or in stock, and were so far masters of the situation as to impose their own terms, which were, without exception, so high as to deprive the producing class—the farmers—of the profits to which they were legitimately entitled. Of this proposition several illustrations were given. Mr. Flagg denounced middle-men, as he termed the commission merchants, who secur large profits that ought to go to the farmer, and they were in the railway and steamboat conspiracy, using their best efforts to keep farm produce as low as possible, themselves realizing handsome profits from consumers. He asserted that the middlemen were crushing the farmers and poorer classes of consumers to the earth, and reform must commence by destroying this class of men. The present system of patents and copyrights were cited as monopolies of the most dangerous and oppressive character. Extension of patents should be denied, the public interest requiring that labor-saving inventions should be produced as cheaply as possible. Sewing-machines could be bought in Great Britain for one-half their price in America, while agricultural implements are sold here at extravagant prices. The trouble was that too many corporations were being created by State and national authority without proper limitations, the result of which is the continued oppression of the people. He charged that the railways were not economically managed, it being the interest of some managers not to be economical; and claimed that under proper management the rates might be largely reduced for freights, and still handsome dividends be realized. The Northwest raised most of the produce exported to Europe, and yet the farmers of the Northwest remain poor because of the enormous freight tariffs of the railways. The remedy for all this was State and national supervision of the railway and steamboat lines; also, the assuming of the control of the telegraph system, as in Europe, claiming that State and national Boards would be the means to reach the evil. Mr. Flagg declared free trade to be the true policy of this as well as every country. It might be necessary for a time to have a revenue tariff, but it should be done away with as quickly as possible, and the free trade theory put into operation. Heavy taxes had been imposed upon the public by many enterprises of a private character, which had soon grown beyond the reach of legislation. The vast donations of land to railway corporations had not been limited to Congress, but had been limited by State Legislatures, county, township and city authorities. The present monetary system of the country was an inflated and consequently a dangerous one, and should be remedied at once; the other evils of excessive freight tariffs were of the most importance to the farmer, and should be remedied first. The farmers should see to it that men were sent to the Legislature who would see that their rights should be protected in the future, as well as their present wrongs righted.

Mr. Flagg's address was listened to with great attention. He was followed by Hon. Mark D. Wilbur and Congressman Burrows. Resolutions were presented embodying the points made in Mr. Flagg's speech, and were unanimously adopted.

Postal Telegraphy.

There is no subject of greater importance to the public, where a reform is more imperatively required or so easily effected, as in the telegraph.

It is now a monopoly with rates so high as to prevent the public from using the telegraph, and reserves it as a luxury to the rich or to the speculator, while only the large daily papers in the largest cities can afford it, and these form an alliance offensive and defensive with the Telegraph Company in opposition to every plan of reform.

Two systems have been proposed for remedying these evils—one by the Postmaster-General, who desires to buy and operate all the lines of telegraph. This plan is opposed by many friends of a reform on account of the great outlay required for the purchase and extension of the lines, and of the great increase of power that it would confer on the Executive.

The other plan was proposed by Gardiner G. Hubbard, and adopted by committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, to which both plans were referred at the last Congress. By this system telegrams will be received and delivered through the postoffice as letters are everywhere, and as telegrams are abroad, transmitted to their place of destination by telegraph, by parties owning and operating lines of telegraph, at rates fixed by Congress—as letters are now transmitted over the railroads. This plan requires no outlay by the General Government, involves no liability for buying, building, or operating lines, and will not increase the powers of the Executive.

The rates proposed are 25 cents for a telegram of 25 words each 500 miles if it is transmitted by day, and each 1,000 miles by night—a reduction of over 50 per cent. on the present rates, and an increase of 80 per cent. in the length of the telegram. The press rates are equally reduced, and are so low as to permit every weekly paper to receive a telegraphic summary, bringing its news down to the hour of its issue.

This plan proposes as great a reduction as the other can afford, and gives a cheap telegraph to the people without cost to the Government. Competition has been tried and abandoned, and, by the failure of the independent and competing companies, has resulted in placing all the important lines in the country under the control of a single interest, of which Mr. Vanderbilt is the representative.

It remains for Congress to say whether the telegraph shall be made an auxiliary to the postoffice, freely used by the people, or the ally of the railroad monopoly, wielded only for its own interest.

Condensed History of Steam.

About 280 years B. C., Hero, of Alexandria, formed a toy which exhibited some of the powers of steam, and was moved by its power.

A. D. 540, Anthemius, an architect, arranged several cauldrons of water, each covered with the wide bottom of a leathern tube, which rose to a narrow top, with pipes extended to the rafters of the adjoining building. A fire was built beneath the caldrons, and the house was shaken by the efforts of the steam ascending the tubes. This is the first notice of the power of steam recorded.

In 1543, June 17, Blasco de Caroy tried a steamboat, of 200 tons, with tolerable success, at Barcelona, Spain. It consisted of a caldron of boiling water and a movable wheel on each side of the ship. It was laid aside as impracticable.

The first idea of a steam-engine in England was in the Marquis of Worcester's "History of Inventions," A. D. 1663.

In 1710 Newcomen made the first steam-engine in England.

In 1718 patents were granted to Savery for the first application of the steam-engine.

In 1736 Jonathan Hulls first set forth the idea of steam navigation.

In 1764 James Watt made the first perfect steam-engine in England.

In 1778 Thomas Paine first proposed this application in America.

In 1781 Marquis Jouffroy constructed one on the Saone.

In 1785 two Americans published a work on it.

In 1789 William Symington made a voyage in one on the Forth and Clyde canal.

In 1802 this experiment was repeated.

In 1782 Ramsey propelled a boat by steam at New York.

In 1783 John Fitch, of Philadelphia, navigated a boat by a steam-engine on the Delaware.

In 1793 Robert Fulton first began to apply his attention to steam.

In 1793 Oliver Evans, a native of Philadelphia, constructed a locomotive steam-engine to travel on a turnpike road.

The first steamboat that ever croseed the Atlantic was the Savannah, in June, 1819, from Charleston to Liverpool.

A French provincial paper has been sentenced to pay 50 francs each to 17 persons whose names it published on a list of pilgrims. The publication was true and harmless, but French law forbids journals to meddle with the private affairs of individuals.

A Danbury Cock-Fight.

Rev. Mr. Pinkney, of Slawson, bought a game rooster from a Danbury dealer, Saturday. Mr. Pinkney informs us that he was not aware the fowl was of the game species; he bought it because of its shapely appearance. We believe this statement, and are confident that the good people of Slawson will acquit him of all blame in the unfortunate affair of last Sunday morning, the particulars of which are as follows. At the time the trouble commenced, Mr. Pinkney was engaged in arranging his neck-tie preparatory to putting on his vest and coat. Happening to look out the window he saw his new rooster and a rooster belonging to the Widow Rathburn, squaring off in the street for a fight. Surprised and pained by this display, he immediately started out to quell the distubance, but was too late. When he got there, a half dozen young ruffians with cigars in their mouths and evil in their eyes, had surrounded the birds, which were already in the affray. They would thrust their heads out at each other, and ruffle their necks, and then dance around and strike out with their spurs, and jump back and thrust out their heads again. And when the boys saw him they shouted out: "Hurry up, baldy (Mr. Pinkney is a little bald), or you'll miss the fun." Mr. Pinkney was inexpressibly shocked. It was Sunday morning; the homes of two of his deacons and several of his most prominent members were in sight, and here were those roosters carrying on like mad, and a parcel of wicked and profane boys standing around, shouting their approval and noisily betting on the result. He made an effort to secure his fowl, but it eluded him. The perspiration streamed down his face, which burned like fire, his knees trembled, and he felt, as he saw his neighbors gathering, that if the earth would only open and swallow him he never could be sufficiently grateful. Just as he attempted to catch his rooster, a rough-looking individual, with his pants in his boots, and a cap with a drawn-down fore-piece, came up, and, taking in the scene at a glance, sided in with the other rooster. "Fair play," shouted the new-comer for the benefit of the crowd, and "Don't step on the birds, old codger," for the particular benefit of Mr. Pinkney, who, crazed beyond reason, was jumping about, swinging his arms, and muttering incoherent things, to the great danger of stepping on the combatants. "Good for old Pinkney's rooster," screamed the boys in delight, as that fowl knocked a handful of feathers from his opponent's neck. "The Parson knows how to do it," said a one-eyed man, gleefully. Mr. Pinkney could have swooned. "I'll go you five dollars on the Widder," said the rough man, earnestly, winking at the clergyman. "Take him, Pinkney; take him, Pinkney," chorused the crowd of ragamuffins. "My friends," protested the unforuntate minister in a voice of agony, "I cannot, I cannot—" "I'll back you, sir," said an enthusiastic man with a fish-pole. "I'll put up for you, and you can let me have it from your donation." The clergyman groaned. "Catch the Widder," shouted the rough man to Mr. Pinkney, indicating that lady's bird by a motion of his finger. Mr. Pinkney clutched it, dropping on his knees as he did so. At the same time the rough man by a dexterous move, caught the clergyman's bird, and also dropped on his knees opposite. Just then Mr. Pinkney looked up, and there saw two of his deacons and several of the members staring down upon the scene with an expression that brought the blood to his face, and with a groan of intense pain the unhappy man dropped Mrs. Rathburn's fowl and darted into the house. As soon as he recovered from his mishap, he sent in his resignation, but a critical examination had been made in the meantime, and it transpired that as far as the worthy man was concerned there was not the least blame. The resignation was not accepted.—Danbury News.

The First Lynch Law Trial.

In the autumn 1789, the settlement in Ohio, at Columbia, contained less than a score of log cabins. Most of them were near the bank of the Ohio, a short distance below the mouth of the Little Miami. The most prominent of the settlers were Gen. John S. Gano, Rev. Stephen Gano, William Goforth, John Reilly, Francis Dunlevy (afterward President Judge), Jacob White, Ephraim Kibby, Luke Foster (afterward Judge), Rev. John Smith (afterward United States Senator), John Brown, James Flinn, Thomal Hubbell, Col. Oliver Spencer, Maj. Benjamin Stiles, Hezekiah Stiles, Elijah Buxton, Peter Sken Smith, James Seward, Thomas C. Wade, Benjamin Shoemaker, Evan Shelby, Allen Woodruff, Joseph and Benjamin Cox. One of the most useful men in this colony in the wilderness was Peter Sken Smith. A shrewd and skillful artisan, he only among them all could repair and keep in working order the only hand-mill in the settlement, used almost constantly for grinding Indian corn. This he did by softening the steel, filing it sharp, and then hardening it again. A trader from Redstone Old Fort (now Williamsport) on the Monongahela, arrived with a small Kentucky boat laden with flour and other produce, of which the pioneers in their new settlement were much in need. So welcome was his arrival that they lent him willing aid to carry up his dozen barrels of flour and pile them between two trees, that they might be safe from the perils of the river. Next morning it was found that one of the barrels had mysteriously disappeared during the night, much to the surprise of the trader and the indignation of the villagers. They speedily assembled together, and were not long in coming to a conclusion. It was immediately determined nem con. that a general search should be made, some of the principal citizens proposing that their own domiciles be examined first. This was speedily done, but not until the fourteenth house was searched was the lost barrel found in the cabin of Peter S. Smith, who proved to be the Achan of the village. They unhesitatingly arrested him. He submitted with a very bad grace. When informed that they would proceed to try him for the felony, with provoking sang froid he demanded their warrant, well knowing that from want of civil organization there could be none. Having no leader with supreme authority, like Joshua of old, they formed themselves into a lynch law court, and, after a fair trial, found him guilty of larceny, and sentenced him with forty stripes save one, according to Hebrew law, and that he make the restitution of the stolen flour to its owner. Smith dared them to inflict so ignominious a punishment without authority of the law. They procured a stout cord, with each end of which they tied his thumbs, and then carrying the line over a heavy thorn bush, proceeded to execute the sentence of their own court with a good will; each of the thirteen giving him three stripes with a hickory withe. With this degrading punishment all boldness and daring forsook him. He repaired to his cabin, but was never afterward seen in the settlement. It was supposed he found his way to the falls of the Ohio, and there enlisted in the United States army. This statement is made on the authority of one of the most respectable members of that primitive court, the late Judge Foster. It has been revised by the venerable Maj. Daniel Gano, a native of the place where it occurred, now in his eightieth year.—American Historical Record.

Hints to Buyers of Horses.

If all the little black cups or hollows are still in the teeth of the horse's lower jaw, the horse is not over six years of age; when those in the corner teeth only are left, the horse is under nine. If the cups are all gone in the under jaw, but are still left in the teeth of the upper jaw, the horse is probably not older than ten, but this is not a certain rule. The shape of the teeth tells much to the experienced observer. In youth the cutting surface of the tooth is long from side to side; in old age long from front to rear. When the cutting surfaces of the teeth in the upper and lower jaws are all worn smooth, and so long from front to rear as to resemble in shape the nail on your little finger, the horse is probably not less than 15, and perhaps 20 years of age. If a horse stands with his legs stretched out, front and back, he is probably badly used up; neither should he stand with his feet all drawn together under him.

If you know but little about the horse, ascertain if the seller is a responsible man, and make him warrant the horse in whatever respect you desire; if he misrepresents in the least, you can collect damages in a suit at law. The disposition of a horse can to a great extent be determined by the expression of the eye, and by the manner of holding the head and ears. Take hold of the halter, face the horse, and give the strap a sudden little jerk; if the horse throws his head up, holds his neck stiff, and his ears rigid, and his eye assumes a glassy look, straight out from either side, you may look with confidence for him to have him put his hind feet through the dash-board, and his fore over the other horse's neck three times in four minutes, the first time you hitch him up. When you hitch a horse to a wagon, and he turns his head around flat on one side and looks at you with a meek, lamb-like expression as you take your place in the seat, then if you haven't a temper that is lamb-like, "child-like and bland," watch him closely.

The Art of Hanging.

As long as capital punishment is the law of the land and hanging the mode of accomplishing it, there is satisfaction in the thought that men are to be found who, regarding it as a scientific process, or an art, if you will, are ready with advice to make it perfect. An English clergyman, Rev. S. Haughton, who is also a Fellow of the Royal Society, has been publishing a work on the "Principles of Animal Mechanics," in which he does not disdain to devote a portion of the space to this subject. He says that the method in use is unworthy of the present state of science, and the long drop, which causes instantaneous death by the fracture of the vertebræ, is recommended, the length of the drop to be obtained by the following rule: Divide 2,240 by the weight of the "patient" in pounds, and the quotient will be the required length in feet. This rule is simply obtained by supposing (as was found to be actually the case in one instance) that 2,240 foot-pounds of shock is sufficient to cause fracture in any case, no allowance being made for differences of age, weight or sex; thus, by this rule, the lighter the criminal or "patient" the longer must be his drop, and the longer the time of his agony in the air. Besides an immense number of measurements, of dissections and experiments on the bodies of animals in order to obtain data for his calculations, Dr. Haughton has made experiments on the living subject, sometimes of a somewhat amusing character. But the above is the practical result at which he has arrived, and we would suggest that there is ample means in this country for testing its value.

Ruling Passion Strong in Death.

An old farmer, up to all methods for making a good bargain, was very ill, and friends were expecting an early demise. His nephew and a man hired for the occasion had butchered a steer which had been fattened; and when the job was completed the nephew entered the sick room, where a few friends were assembled, when to the astonishment of all, the old man opened his eyes, and turning his head slightly, said, in a full voice, drawling out the words:

"What have you been doing?"

"Killing the steer," was the reply.

"What did you do with the hide?"

"Left it in the barn; going to sell it by-and-by."

"Let the boys drag it around the yard a couple of times; it will make it weigh heavier."

And the good old man was gathered into his fathers.

There are now in the United States sixty thousand Federal office-holders. In the force used to operate the American railways one hundred and sixty-three thousand men are employed, including workmen and officials. Taken in connection with the suggestion that the Government assume control of the railways the latter statement has a national interest.

An Irishman, explaining the workings of a savings bank to a friend, said: "If you put your money in the bank to-day, you can draw it out again to-morrow by giving a fortnight's notice."

How to be Handsome.

Most people would like to be handsome. Nobody denies the great power which any person may have who has a good face and attracts you by good looks, even before a word has been spoken. And we see all sorts of devices in men and women to improve their good looks—paints and washes, and all kinds of cosmetics, including a plentiful anointing with dirty hair oil.

Now all cannot have good features. They are as God made them; but almost any one can look well, especially with good health. It is hard to give rules in a very short space, but in brief these will do:

Keep clean—wash freely and universally with warm water. All the skin wants is leave to act free, and it will take care of itself. Its thousands of air-holes must not be closed.

Eat regularly and sleep enough. The stomach can no more work all the time, night and day, than a horse; it must have regular work and regular sleep.

Good teeth are a great help to good looks. Brush them with a soft brush, especially at night. Go to bed with teeth clean. Of course, to have white teeth it is needful to let tobacco alone. Every woman knows that. And any powder or wash for the teeth should be very simple. Acids may whiten the teeth, but they take off the enamel and injure them.

Sleep in a cool room, in pure air. No one can have a clear skin who breathes bad air.

When the mind is awake, the dull, sleepy look passes away from the eyes. I do not know that the brain expands, but it seems to. Think, read—not trashy novels, but books that have something in them. Talk with people who know something; hear lectures and learn by them.

The Bad Boy and the Good.

There was a young and lovely boy, whose mother parted his hair down the middle, and occasionally hit him in the back with a flatiron. There was also a bad, wicked and depraved boy, about whom I, at the moment, do not recollect any further particulars. These two were brought up together, and simultaneously received a present of a sovereign apiece. Oh, how that bad, wicked and depraved boy kicked up his heels! the good boy smiled the while seraphically and slobbered. The bad boy then went straightway and laid out his good money in all manner and kinds of nasty and indigestible messes—hardbake, cocoanuts (he bought fourteen of these), bulls' eyes, stick liquorice, tamarinds and Australian beef. The boy fell to and gorged hideously upon these things, and so exhausted his little capital, coming to the good boy, when it was all gone, with a long and pitiful face. "Ah!" said the good boy, "had you not spent your sovereign thus foolishly, you would have it now as I have mine. Instead of buying hardbake—a thing I myself never touch, except when it is given to me—you might have bestowed five shillings upon the Society for Supplying Wooden-legged Infidels with worsted slippers. Instead of buying cocoanuts, you might have dropped another five bob into the donation box of the Hospital for Paralyzed Shakers; and, instead of wasting the other ten shillings in the way you have, you might have done I don't know what that was good and kind, and generous and noble." The bad boy, confused and confounded, turned away his head at this, and wept bitter tears. Then the good boy went out out for a stroll, feeling ever so much gooder for having said what he had, and on his way accidentally dropped his own sovereign down a sewer grating.—Punch.

New Applications of Paper.

Singularly enough, the Iron Age argues that paper is to become the general, if not the universal, substitute for wood, leather, and India-rubber, as also, to some extent, for copper, tin and zinc, and that even iron is not adapted to uses so widely various—it being practicable, indeed, to bring paper pulp to such a state of toughness and solidity, by pressure, as to be almost as fire-proof and indestructible as iron; and thus our railroad cars may be made of paper, instead of iron, thereby preventing the dangers now incurred in case of accidents. It is claimed that, in proportion to weight, paper is, probably, the strongest material of construction known, combining more perfectly than any other substance the qualities of strength, lightness, flexibility, durability, and cheapness. So many and various, too, are the articles of which it can be made, that it can be manufactured in quantities practically unlimited in every civilized country, and, so long as plants continue to grow, paper manufacture can be sustained. It is, also, under all circumstances, an easy material to work and handle. The fact is probably well known that the paper wheels which have been used with success on some of the palace cars are formed of compressed paper fitted into a steel tire; iron plates are then adapted to each side of the paper, and bolted together to prevent any displacement of he filling.

Overheated.

In warm weather, children need little covering at night. Yet comparatively few parents know that a child, with his warm, fresh, young blood, does not need the same clothing that a person of middle life must have. On a moderately warm night a child is put to bed with a covering over him sufficient for a cool October night. Of course he throws it off, when he would lie quietly under lighter clothing. Then, when the mother looks in to see that all is right before retiring herself for the night, she pulls up the covering and tucks it snugly in. How long is it before the little one has thrown it off and lies exposed to a chill from the falling temperature toward morning? It is with reference to this point that caution is required. About two or three o'clock in the morning there is frequently a very rapid fall in the temperature, and if persons could form the habit of then rousing and providing additional covering for themselves and the children of whom they may have the care, much sickness might often be saved.

"Bear and for-bear" has long been the trouble in Wall street.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Oct. 16, 1873.

The banking-house of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., has been designated as the fiscal agent of the United States, vice Clews, Habicht & Co. The selection is peculiarly and conspiciously a bad one. It is no answer to say that the house is sound; the senior member has visited a calamity of incalculable dimensions upon this country, by a course of business that is dishonest in its very essence, and infinitely mischievous. To reward such a man with new evidences of the favor of the government, and to assign him to a position of so extreme delicacy and responsibility at this time, is a proceeding altogether characteristic of Mr. Grant.

A correspondent writing the New Era at Albion, says. About noon on Wednesday, Gust Fisher, son of the proprieter of the Three Rivers House commmitted suicide by taking 2¼ ounces of laudanum. The opiate caused death in a few houres.

This is the third case of suicide in the same house during the year—the first being a young lady employed in the hotel, who "cast off mortality" with a dose of strichnine. Next(about two months ago) was Ed. Fisher—twin brother of Gust—who also took laudanum.

These boys were about twenty three, years of age, and became very intemperate, and had entered into a mutual compact to commit suicide in this manner a short time before Ed. put the fearful threat into execution.

The father of these unfortunate victims has kept a saloon in his house for years, and continues to do so still.

Truly, the "way of the transgressor is hard," and it ought to be.

And what is most note worthy is the fact that the bankers who got up and headed the circular, who stood forward as the impersonation of the new system, who controlled the Treasury, who had the entire confidence of the President, who dined him and wined him, who subscribed to his bonds, his houses, and his goods, and who supplied his cellars at Washington and Long Branch with the best that money could procure, were the first to fall and bring on the crash. About that there is no mistake. Tens of thousands stricken suddenly with ruin and misery, poor women who worked with their needles, helpless children, failing old men, farmers, with their slender savings, orphans almost destitute, and multitudes like them scattered far and wide, have been engulfed by this awful collapse of the President's friends and bankers. God help them!

That is what Grantism has done. Look at it. Study it. Think of it Is it not time there should be a change and that the country should be rescued from the hands of robbers; no matter what their disguise?

The Fort Wayne Sentinel relates the following curious snake story, and as the Sentinel relates it in downright earnest we believe the statement, except that the length of the critter might be exaggerated. It says; "For over two years a son of Jacob Stripe, a farmer living a mile and a half north of Van Wert, has been ailing and subject to severe convulsions. Physicians were called to attend him from time to time, but not one of them could divine the cause of his continued sickness. On Thursday the boy was taken with a pain in the stomach and he took some lobelia and went upon the porch where his father was sitting and began vomiting violently. His father looked up and saw his son with both hands to his mouth pulling something out of it. He went to the boy's assistance and aided him in pulling out a about eighteen inches long and a half inch thick. The snake was seen by Mr. Isaac Wetz, of this city, who says it is perfectly formed, with the exception of being blind. It's eyes are of a reddish cast. The snake is alive and active.

From the moment the snake was expelled, the boy felt well, and has up to this time experienced no return of the terrible convulsions which have afflicted him for the last two years. The case is a most curious one, few or none of the like ever having been observed It is highly probable that the snake was swallowed by the boy while drinking at some spring while small.

A YEAR AGO.

Twelve short months have barely passed away since the country was in the midst of the heat and passion of the Presidential election. The principal events of that exciting period are still fresh in the memory of millions who participated in the memorable contest.

Gen. Grant was supported by a formidable combination of banks, railroads, and other corporate agencies independent of the partisan machinery by which the whole army of office-holders was marched in solid column to the polls. On the other hand, Mr. Greeley had mainly to rely upon the Democratic organization which had adopted him, materially enfeebled by a disaffection procured and purchased by the adminstration, and the Liberal Republicans without a party organization, who had refused to longer tolerate the frauds and corruption at Washington.

One of the most effective appliances employed by the friends of Gen. Grant was a concentration of the money power in his behalf. To bring it about, a circular was issued from this city, signed by twenty one bankers and others, mostly known for their intimate relations with the Treasury, and then supposed to represent a large amount of capital and wealth. This circular was sent to all the banks in the United States, and to almost every private banker, commercial firm or merchant of recognized standing or influence. The design was to create a political panic on the eve of the election, and to excite the alarm of the vast interests engaged in commerce, manufactures, and banking.

It was represented by the signers of this paper that they had no confidence in the principles which Mr. Greeley advocated; that his policy would be ruinous, and that his election would inevitably be attended by a financial crash, which must bring distress on the country and involve a repetition of the consequences of 1857. They held up Gen. Grant and the system of which he is the incarnation as a sovereign panacea for these threatened evils The success of his administration in reducing the public debt by political figures prepared at the Treasury, and by the endorsement of these financiers was one of the greatest arguments in his favor. The influence which this circular exercised in consolidating the mighty corporations and intimidating individuals and companies of less ostensible strength, is well understood by everybody. It requires no illustration or argument. The result is known. Gen. Grant was reelected President through the aid of this vast centralization of capital, actual and supposed wealth, and its ramifications.

Among the persons most energetic in this political financiering, and in exciting the fears of the timid, were Jay Cooke & Co., Henry Clews & Co. (both financial agents of the Government abroad), Fisk & Hatch, Howes & Macy, and others of like standing. They threw all their strength against Mr. Greeley. They rallied all their depositors and clients for Gen. Grant. And yet the very state of affairs which they combined to predict as inevitable should Mr. Greeley be elected by the people, came to pass recently, although Gen. Grant was chosen according to their programme.

From the Kendallville Standard.

Last Wednesday the sad news of the sudden demise of Richard Billman reached this city. Mr. Billman resided two and one half miles west of Wawaka, and on that morning, as was his custom, took his gun and started out to drive the cows to pasture. The report of a gun was heard in a short time, and soon after he was found dead, where it seems he had crossed the fence. The unfortunate man had been shot through the heart, and it it supposed met his death by the gun lock coming in contact with a rail while he held the barrel in his hand and attempted to cross the fence. An inquest was held by William Roberts and a verdict rendered in accordance with the above facts. Mr. Billman was sixty five years of age at the time of his death, and had resided in Noble county nearly a quarter of a century. His large circle of acquaintences and friends have always known him as a good citizen and an affectionate husband and father.

Indianapolis dispatches are to the effect that the second week of the Ind. Exposition closed in a blaze or glory. The attendance throughout the week was much larger than was anticipated ranging out to nearly or quite 100,000 A still larger crowd is expected here after, as the live stock exhibition opened on Monday evening, continuing through the remainder of the Exposition, two weeks. A large number of cattle, horses, hogs sheep and poultry already have arrived. The show will excel any similar exhipition heretofore held in the State. The enterprise, so far, is a gratifying success being the first State Exposition ever held. The result is watched with much interest. The managers appear to have no fear as to the final result.

Sometimes since a mob in Niles "chiveried" James Skinner, a newly married gentleman. The bridegroom not appreciating such boisterous attentions, and being insulted by some of the roughs, "fired into the crowd" and broke up the entertainment. He was tried for assault and battery with intent to kill, but the jury "promptly acquitted him." This is as it should be. Any man who joins in the barbarous demonstration of "belling" is not to be pitied if he gets a taste of lead. There is nothing which so nicely and quickly cools off a fellow who is beating an old skillet, or playing a horse fiddle, as to see a flash of powder and feel himself sprinkled with a few buck shot.—Laport Herald

Clerk.

STATE OF INDIANA, }
DeKalb County. ss. } Sct.

In the DeKalb Circuit Court, December Term, 1873, Bernard Trentman, August Trentman, versus Jacob M. Shutt, Complaint No. 57.

Now comes the Plaintiff, by McBride & Morlan their Attorneys, and files their complaint herein, together with an affidavit that said defendant, Jacob M. Shutt is not a resident of the State of Indiana.

Notice is, therefore, hereby given said defendant that unless he be and appear on the first day of the next term of the DeKalb Circuit, to be holden on the Second Monday of December, A. D. 1873, at the Court House in Auburn, in said County and State, and answer or demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in his absence.

Witness, My name and the seal of said Court affixed at Auburn, this 16th day
SEAL. of Oct. 1873.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court in a case wherein Jacob B. Casebeer is plaintiff and George W. [illegible] & Mary [illegible] Gordon and Stephen B. Ward are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of seven hundred and four dollars and sixty four cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M., and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits, for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

Saturday, the 8th day of November, 1873

Commencing at the north-[illegible] corner of lot number one hundred and forty-two, (142) running thence south sixty-six (66) feet, thence west sixty-six (66) feet, thence east sixty-six (66) feet, to the place of beginning, all in the original plat of the town of Auburn, DeKalb co. Ind.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs, I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

W. L. MEESE Sheriff D. C.

City Editor Thomas, of the Indianapolis Sentinel, and Bro. Wesmer, of the Angola Times were in attendance at the dedication, yesterday.

The dances last night were not gotten up under the auspices of the Odd Fellows. They were an entire separate affair.

Those Waterloo chaps that are boasting so loudly about the relative merits of certain horses, had better look a "leedle out" The Pony wont stand it. If you mean business, all right. Auburn means business and will fight it out on that line.

REMISSION.—Through the exertion of W. H. Dills, Esq., the Governor of this State, has remitted unto Conrad Miller three hundred of the five hundred dollars, in which he was bail for John P. Gestenslager. All the circumstances in the case justify the act of Execution clemency.

Remember that large stock of Boots and Shoes just received by Vordermark & Sons, Odd Fellows building. The ladies will find handsome styles for their special wear.

The construction train ran over two cows, throwing off several cars, injuring three men, one dangerously, and the other two severely, at Grand Rapids crossing last Thursday. All right again.

SOLD.—I. M. Thomas and E. L. Casebeer by their attorney W. H. Dills, sold and transferred their interest one day last week, to the Fort Wayne Jackson and Saginaw R. R. Company. The purchase money was about three thousand dollars. Mr. Thomas still retains the agency as before, and no change is looked for at present.

The sensational writer for the Fort Wayne Gazette, from Huntertown, wields a prolific pen. The appalling news of the finding of a body, partly eaten by hogs of one Ferguson, in the south part of this county, made a splendid item, but then there is no Ferguson missing, and the hogs did not eat the body, and there was no cold corpse to eat, so the bottom has dropped out, and showed the ass-ertions of some correspondent to be not well authenticated. Try again.

The Hop Again.

The second in the series of the Hop at Rainiers hall, came off last Thursday evening, and although not so many bridal companies made their appearance, nor the numbers in attendance as great as the former one, yet it was an exceedingly pleasant, entertaining and sociable party. The evening was made very attractive by the entrance of Mr. Medany Lamb, of this place, with his rosy-cheeked, accomplished and beautiful bride, nee Miss Laura E. Bodine. The gratulations were kindly long and numerous, and many, whether manageable or not, mentally sighed, "I wish it was I."

Our devil, as usual, secured the cake—the sweet, delicious plumb cake, sweet cake, jelly cake, wedding cake, and all sich, and while crunching it down, in a dark corner of the office, was heard to exclaim: "I wish I had such a sister-in-law," and when digestion commenced, his poetical faculties were aroused and thus he sorrowfully sang:

"Now Dora is stolen by a big growed-up Lamb,
His hair was vite like wool,
And every place dat Dora went
Dat tam pig sheep was pound to go dare too;
All de vile, any me 's still."
Chorus—
"Oh de Lambs, de Lambs, de Lambs," etc.

Teacher's Institute.

The DeKalb county Teachers' Institute, will be held in Auburn, commencing on Monday, November 10th, 1873, and continuing in session five days. Accommodations will be provided for all who come.

Let us have the largest attendance ever witnessed in Northern Indiana. No teacher can afford to be absent from the county Institute.

DEDICATION.

Immense Attendance of Odd Fellows.

An Interesting Occasion.

We only have time this week to briefly note the splendid success of the dedication of the new Odd Fellows' Hall at this place yesterday. The attendance was very large from all directions. North Manchester, Fort Wayne, Angola, Fremont, Metz, Kendallville, Maysville, Pleasant Lake, and a number of lodges from other points were in attendance, making as fine a procession as has been seen in the county. The delegations were well supplied with music, there being four bands in attendance, Keints band of Fort Wayne, the Angola band, Maysville band, and the Auburn band, giving our town a feast of music long to be remembered. Mr. Marine arrived from Ft. Wayne at noon, having missed the morning train, and delivered a splendid address, full of fact and humor strikingly original, to which the most rapt attention was given. The singing by the choir was particularly enjoyable, and well recieved. The grand dinner was an elaborate and extensive affair, and the ladies and Committee were particularly complimented upon the excellent taste displayed in the rare feast so amply provided.

Attempted Murder.

A most brutal attack occurred in our town last night, in which Mr. W. Humes was dangerously stabbed. Mr. Humes is foreman of the Boot & Shoe house of Vordermark & Sons, at which the fracas took place. Frank Strebe and a German named Ernest Manstoffer, having some ill feeling towards Humes in regard to a hand Mr Strebe had in his employ, but who had left him and was then working under Humes, was the cause of the contention. Mr. Strebe being in the Boot & Shoe business also. Mr. Humes finally told them them to go away, that he did not want any more words about the matter. Mr. Vordermark ordered them away, and pushed them beyond the building. Manstoffer threatened to throw a brick, and was warned not to do so. They came back again, when Mr. Humes pushed them away and here a knife was used, Mr. H, receiving two ugly wounds, one on the inside of the left shoulder, and the other on the right side of the neck close to the collar bone. It is said he knocked the man down after he was stabbed.

The general impression is that Strebe had nothing to do with the stabbing. Both of the men were drunk. Mr. Humes was promptly cared for, several doctors being present, among them Dr. Rosenthal, of Fort Wayne. Hopes are entertained of his recovery. The two men were promptly arrested and held to bail in $2000 before justice Widney. Manstoffer went to jail.

THE FAIR.

UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS.

IMMENSE ATTENDANCE.

Fine Display and Splendid Weather.

The second annual fair of the North Eastern Indiana Agricultural Association closed last Friday, after a four day's session with most flattering results. Could it have been in the power of a committee before hand to have ordered the kind of weather we should have, during the fair, they could not have made it more favorable. The sun rose on Tuesday morning in a cloudless sky, and from that day till Friday, Old Sol seemed to regard it as his particular office to put a prompt appearance every day. It might not happen so in an age, that a fair held so late in the season, would find such pleasant, sombre weather.

THE DISPLAY.

The number of entries increased to three times that of last year, the increase being principally confined to the agricultural department. The display of apples and pears was first class, and that of grain by the Burlington & Missouri Railroad Company most excellent. Hundreds of specimens of what corn, oats, rye, etc., both in grain and on the stock, made up one of the finest exhibitions ever seen in this part of the country.

STOCK.

There was a fair increase in the stock entries, and the display was very fine. We are glad to notice that a few of our enterprising farmers are introducing some very fine blooded stock in the county, something we stand much in need of. Mr. A. D. Moore, purchased a fine thoroughbred bull from the celebrated stock of John Comstock, at Liberty Mills, Ind., and we regard this acquisition as a valuable one. Hogs and sheep were well represented.

FLORAL HALL

Was moderately filled, there being room to spare in this department. A little more attention here will not come amiss next year. There was quite a good display of farm implements and other machinery on the ground. The auction business was represented, a fact that gives us but little pleasure to record. Merchants of the county are of much more material advantage to an institution of this kind than this class of venders, and we believe their interests ought to be protected to the exclusion of the others.

THE MANAGEMENT

With but one or two exceptions, the fair was excellently managed, no accidents or trouble occuring throughout the session. The programme for Thursday as far as the racing was concerned, did not come up to the expectations of the crowd. There was a loud clamor among the horsemen, in regard to the action of the Executive Committee prohibiting the selling of pools on the races, and yet betting was allowed without interference. But these are of minor importance to the general success of the fair.

THE ATTENDANCE

Wednesday brought an increased crowd over that of last year, but Thursday was selected as the day for a rush, and the streets and roads were crowded with long lines of vehicles during the greater part of the day. The crowd on that day was variously estimated from 10,000 to 12,000, there being nearly 7,000 tickets sold, while children, horsemen, exhibitors and officers were admitted free. The last day was well patronized, the programme being by far the best.

THE RACES.

Wednesday afternoon came the first races, on trotting and pacing. The pacing race took the lead, the following being the score:

	1	2	3	4
Hoosier Dick, C. R. Furay, Logansport, Indiana,	2	2	1	1
Grey Frank, Dr. Chamberlain, Waterloo, Ind.,	1	2	3	4
White Stocking, G. P. Rowell, Goshen, Ind.,	3	3	2	2
McDonald, Mr. Bullock, Pleasant Lake, Ind.,	4	4	4	4
Brown Billy, Fred'k Briel, Fort Wayne, Ind.,	5	5	5

Hoosier Dick, $60; Grey Frank, $40; White Stocking, $20. Brown Billy withdrawn after third heat. Time—2:38, 2:34 2:36½, 2:34¼.

The following were the entries in the four year old trot.

	1	2	3	4
Mambrino Patchen, A. C. Fisk, Coldwater, Mich.,	1	3	1	1
Chief, J. C. Misner, Burr Oak, Michigan,	3	1	3	3

Mambrino Patchen, $50, Dio Lewis, $30 Chief, $20. Time—3:00, 3:06½, 3:02½, 3.10.

THURSDAY.

The awarding committees were busy during the forenoon examining stock on the track, and awarding premiums.

The programme for the afternoon consisted of a three minute and 2.50 trotting race. The following entries were made for the first:

Fred Sprague, N. J. Wilkinson, Kalamazoo; Reindeer, E. L. Berkey, LaGrange; Maggie Gould, F. Deyo, Jackson; Black Ann, C. Nicholson, Jackson; Novice, W. G. Davis, Coldwater, Mich., Billy Hotspur A. C. Fisk, Coldwater. Reindeer, Black Ann and Maggie Gould were distanced on the first heat, and Fred Sprague on the third. The following is the score:

	1	2	3
Novice,........................	1	1	1
Billy Hotspur,..................	3	2	2
Fred Sprague,...................	2	3

Time—2:45½, 2:42, 2:45.

For the 2:50 race, the entries were: Jennie Holton, Mr. Nelson, Kalamazoo; Black Ann and Maggie Gould. Black Ann took the race in three straight heats, time 2:55, 2;51½ and 2;55. The purse was withheld, none of the horses having made 2.50, as provided in the list.

FRIDAY.

This day opened with eager expectations for the races, some fine horses being entered. At 2 o'clock, the sweepstakes on trotting was announced, and the following horses appeared on the track.

Professor, by W B Percival, Logansport.
Novice, F Deyo, Jackson.
Membrino, Geo Deyo, Jackson.
Gen Sherman, A C Fisk, Coldwater.

Gen. Sherman was the favorite, against Novice, he taking the three first heats, Professor, second, Membrino third. Time—2;34¼, 2;36, 2;39½. First premium, $100 2d, $60, 3d, $40.

Next came the horses for the running race, best two in three:

First premium, $50, 2d, $30, 3d, $20.
Fearnaught, by L Atwater, Lagrange.
Young Pilgrim, P. Ringle, Kendallville.
Young Printer, S Simons, New Era, Ind.
Woodchuck, F Prough, Goshen.
Wild Indian, J Prough, Goshen.

Fearnaught took first heat and Woodchuck the next three, Fearnaught 2d, Wild Indian 3d. Time—56½, 57¾, 57.

And thus ended one of the most successful fairs ever held in this part of the State. The receipts this year will be about $700 more than last year. Last year a dividend of twenty-five per cent. was declared, but as $1000 must be paid this year on the indebtedness for the grounds, the dividend, if any, will not be so large.

Heartrending.

Sudden Death of one of our Citizens.

Last Friday evening a telegram from Delphi, this State, announced the startling intelligence that our highly-esteemed fellow townsman, W. A. Lowrey, Esq., had been drowned that day at one o,clock, while crossing the canal on a horse, at that place. The next day the body arrived, and there was no disputing the fact that our genial citizen had went out from our midst forever. How it must have torn the hearts of the poor wife and children when the terrible news that glanced along the line was made known to them. The peace and contentment of years swept away in one brief moment, in their place sorrow and trouble ever present and casting their shadows far into the future. No wonder the community feels the deep sympathy, so silently, yet eloquently expressed in the attendance at the funeral of the deceased, the largest ever known in the county. He was buried with Masonic honors, a large number of the fraternity being present from adjoining towns. The Auburn Silver band added much to the impressiveness of the occasion, by the excellent and appropriate music they discoursed.

"Down in the valley, the deep dark valley."

The funeral sermon was preached by Mr. Cone, at the M. E. Church, and was full of that pathos and eloquence that such a theme would suggest.

We have been known in Fort Wayne many years to be the most successful clothing house ever opened in the city. It is not only our liberal advertising that has made us popular but our fair and honorable dealings, with those who have stood by us since we have been in the business. In selling them nicely made clothing at reasonable prices they have advertised us. With the 20 years experience we have had since boyhood, we profess to know the wants of every one and what class of goods are wanted. Therefore we can say that we can fit a boy of the small size up to the largest man in the grade of goods, from the finest to the lowest grades. We caution those who are not acquainted in this place to enquire for us before you drop in some other place where they have been trying to imitate our well established place. It is to your own interest as well as to ours to come direct to us at the popular Red Front, No. 5 Keystone Block.

Good common suits for men from $6 to $10, Cassimere suits from $9 to $20, fine cloth suits from $12 to $25. Cloaks from $3 to $25, with or without saques, men's working pants from $1 50 to $2.50, children, boys and youths suits from $3 up. We also keep a large line of hats, caps, shirts, underwear, gloves and many articles too numerous to mention, at exceeding low prices.

BEYOND THE MISSISSIPPI.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada. Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine day coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to points in the west, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Mississippi, and its connections with roads further west are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Tompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered.

[illegible] a Vision.

Once upon a [illegible] dreary, while I floundered weak and weary
O'er the many rough, uneven tacks and pins upon the floor;
While I tossed with ne'er a napping, suddenly I heard a flapping,
As a thousand million gaping specters passed within the door.
'Tis some phantasy, I muttered. Strange returning answer uttered,
Only Blood, and nothing more.

Quite distinctly I remember, it was in the warm September,
As my body, and each member, healed, lay upon the floor;
Hopelessly I sooth'd my sorrow with the promise that to-morrow
I some antidote would borrow—borrow from magician's lore—
That would dissipate the demons that were ravening for my gore—
Blood, my heart's, and nothing more.

Yet the feeling dim, uncertain, that the morning's gilded curtain
From the night's mysterious terrors would arise for me no more,
Set my heart with madness leaping, while the demons, still unsleeping,
Their fierce watch upon me keeping as I lay upon the floor
Lost in anguish worse than weeping, sobbing, shrinking more and more—
Shrieked for blood, and nothing more.
Presently, with hope no longer, but with resolution stronger,
"Demons!" said I, "many millions that seek my true heart's gore, [illegible] that I'm no longer napping, but prepared to [illegible]some rapping,"
And at once began a slapping, sideways, backward, and before;
But, that dreadful climax capping, in there rushed ten million more—
Crying Blood, and nothing more.
Forward at their legions daring flew I madly, pillow bearing,
Vowing vengeance deep, destructive—vows no mortal breathed before;
Still their front evinced no token that their serried ranks were broken,
And the only order spoken by those trillions, less by more,
Was the same distractive mutter, uttered by them o'er and o'er—
Blood we'll have, and nothing more,
Those mosquitoes never quitting, still upon the walls are sitting,
On the whiten'd walls and ceiling, blackening my chamber o'er;
While their shrill and demon screaming sets my soul with frenzy dreaming,
As their eyes upon me gleaming fill my mind with terror sore,
And the chorus of their screaming, as I fly my chamber door,
Is Blood, and nothing more.

AMONG THE BULLS AND BEARS.

"Suppose we take a look at the menagerie?" suggested my Wall street friend.

"The menagerie? Where is it?"

Just up the street. We sometimes call it the bear garden, or the lunatic asylum, for a change.

By either of these names, it seems, the New York Stock Exchange is more familiarly known in the region of bulls and bears than by its proper one. A stranger, entering at a time of excitement in the stock market, would certainly consider the last name the most appropriate. At such a time, downright madness reigns supreme. The scene presented is one of such clamor, confusion, furious gesticulation, and wild surging and swaying of the crowds of brokers on the floor, that a person witnessing it for the first time might very naturally regard the roaring, hustling, bellowing throng as a mass-meeting of violent lunatics.

Standing in the gallery provided for the public, and looking down upon the three or four hundred men who struggle and shout and scramble below, the stranger may well wonder what all the tumult is about, and whether any real business can be done in the midst of such mad confusion. It seems impossible that these men can understand each other. They are scattered in swaying groups over the floor of the large chamber, and almost every man in each groud appears to be in desperate altercation with his neighbor. A hundred hands are shaking violently before a hundred faces; a hundred throats are roaring as though their owners were so many screaming dervishes; and, to make the deafening din still greater, squads of well-grown boys rush hither and thither between the groups, calling brokers by name in the highest and shrillest key their voices can command. Surely, no bedlam ever presented a more turbulent scene, or one more dazing or bewildering to an unaccustomed mind, than may be witnessed in the New York Stock Exchange when the excitements of a field-day stir up the spirits of the bulls and bears.

Strangers visiting the Stock Exchange always express surprise at the youthfulness of the men by whom the enormous business of the place is transacted. Hearing so often of the money kings of New York, and naturally picturing to themselves solid-looking men, well on in middle life, as the bulls and bears of the great stock market, they are astonished at finding merely a multitude of young men, most of whom have the appearance of clerks, and any one of whom will, on the slightest provocation, yell at an unknown visitor like a Comanche or Apache savage. The magnates of the street, who are the men we all read of in the newspapers, are hardly ever seen in the Exchange, and some even are not members of it. They generally remain in the background, concoct their plans in little private offices, and issue instructions to their various brokers as a General issues orders to his subaltern on a battle-field. One of these magnates may have half a dozen brokers employed in the Exchange at the same time, without one of the six knowing that five others are executing orders from the same man that employs him. It is by the secresy of their operations that the leading bulls and bears achieve particular success; and, in order that there shall be no leakage of information, they keep all their plans and purposes to themselves. The whole number of brokers who have the privilege of trading in the Exchange is about one thousand, while the number of operators recognized as leaders probably does not exceed twenty-five or thirty. These are the captains who organize and conduct campaigns; the others are the rank and file who do the fighting—bellowing and goring, or growling and squeezing, according to their classification under the signs of Taurus and Ursus.

A broker desiring to become a member of the Exchange is required to undergo a sort of inquisition before a committee, in order that his qualifications may be determined. He must also make a full statement of his business affairs, and satisfy the committee that he is in a proper financial condition. If he passes the examination successfully, he must then purchase a seat in the Board, or, in other words, pay for the privilege of membership. This privilege is an expensive one. At the present time a seat costs from eight to nine thousand dollars, which must be paid before the purchaser can do any business in the Exchange. A year ago the price was from four to five thousand. The value of seats varies according to the demand. If a broker fails in business, he can neither use his seat nor sell it until his affairs are settled; the seat is held as part of his assets, and may be sold for the benefit of his creditors. Taking the number of seats in the Board at one thousand ([illegible] by the way, is a misnomer, for seats would only be in the way during the daily battles on the floor), and the price of each at nine thousand dollars, the total value of membership in the Stock Exchange is found to reach nearly a million dollars—an increase of one hundred per cent. within a year.

It requires very stringent rules to keep the lively gentleman of the Exchange within any bounds of propriety. A stock broker, though he be thirty years old (and not many are much beyond this age), is just as sure to be in mischief as an irrepressible school-boy, unless business or the rules of the board deter him. He is a volatile and exuberant animal, who finds delight in pranks and peccadilloes, and looks upon the playing of practical jokes almost as a duty. Anecdotes innumerable might be told to illustrate his penchant for fun and frolic. When not engaged "bulling" or "bearing" stocks, he is pretty sure to be found indulging in some wild sort of capers with "the boys," this being the familiar and standard term for his associates. Now and then, when business is dull, he starts a war-whoop, in which he is quickly joined by fifty others; and presently he and the fifty are "skylarking" all over the hall. If the season be the end of the summer, when the time for discarding white hats is supposed to have arrived, and a member enters with one of these objects on his head, it is sure to come to grief immediately. Before he is fairly inside, a howl of derision is raised, and the hat knocked off and kicked in turn by every foot that can reach it. The owner takes all this as a matter of course, and seldom loses his temper over it, even though he himsilf be hustled all over the hall after his hat. Next day he may have a chance to retaliate, and he surely will not allow it to pass unimproved.

The entrance of a new member affords a gala-time to the boys. He must be initiated without delay, and, as he knows this beforehand, he prepares himself for the ordeal. The moment he enters, a signal that all understand is given by some one near him. It is no sooner heard through the hall than a wild, demoniac yell is raised, and the new-comer is instantly surrounded by a scrambling, screaming, shoving crowd. His hat is likely to be the first object of attack. The brokers seem to have a special antipathy to hats when the mood for frolic is on. If they do not crush the neophyte's felt or castor over his eyes, they are sure to send it flying to the ceiling, some sixty feet above, and each time it comes down it is returned heavenward with an exultant shout. In the meantime, its owner is receiving attentions not much milder than those bestowed on the hat. The boys have taken him in hand, and are hustling and hauling him all around the chamber. If he is not too heavy to be lifted, they have taken him up bodily, and are playing a queer game of pitch-and-toss with him, throwing him hither and thither, from one group to another, as though he were an effigy rather than a man. Presently, perhaps, they get him to the center of the hall, where there is a large table, and, despite his struggles to get away, he is laid on this, and subjected to a new process of jocular persecution. As many of the boys as are within reaching distance seize him by legs, feet, arms, and head, and pull and drag him over the table, now to one side, now to another, until the poor fellow, who generally preserves good nature all through, is almost breathless. When they finally release him his hair is all over his face, his collar and cravat probably have disappeared, his hat is battered utterly out of shape, his coat is either rent down the back or deprived of a skirt, one of his boots, if not both, has parted company with his feet, and his vest and linen are "mussed" in a way to make a proper housewife groan with despair. But the ordeal is now past, the new man has become a broker in good standing, and is ready an hour later to join his persecutors in new mischief, or contribute his share to the uproar of a struggle between bulls and bears.

But there is no delight so enjoyable to these mischievous merry-makers as that of catching a stray countryman on the floor. The Stock Exchange seems to have particular attractions for our bucolic friends coming to town on a visit. They have heard a great deal about it, and, being in town, they want to see what it is. It is against the rules for any person not a member to go upon the floor, but occasionally a gentleman from the "rural deestricks," equipped with carpet-bag and umbrella, and knowing nothing about this rule, slips past the door-keeper unnoticed. But, if the door-keeper overloooks him, the boys do not. The instant he is seen, two or three brokers move quietly between him and the door, and then elbow and push him forward, apparently by accident, until they get him a considerable distance from it. One of them then cries out:

"New Tennessees!"

The meaning of this is known by all. It is a signal that a stranger is on the floor. Instantly the whole business of the place is suspended, a terrific yell is raised—one that would do credit to any band of savages on the continent—and the frightened and bewildered countryman finds himself pitched and hustled hither and thither, up and down, across and around, by a surging, screaming, laughing crowd, and, if he looks upward, he may see his hat dancing through the air in one direction, his carpet-bag in another, and his venerable umbrella in a third. But, fortunately for the stranger, there is help at hand. One of the door-keepers dashes into the crowd, grasps him by the collar, and pulls him by main force to the door, whither his hat, carpet-bag, and umbrella, follow him, and he makes his way to the street as quickly as he can, hardly knowing whether he has escaped from a band of Indians or a lunatic aylum, but very glad to have escaped at all. It is very rarely that any one is injured in these sports of the brokers. The play may be somewhat rough, but there is no intention to hurt, and nerves and clothing suffer about the only damage that is done.

Of the thousands of practical jokes played in the Exchange, one—of a comparatively harmless character—may be related. The cloak-room connected with the hall is a receptacle for the overcoats, canes, and overshoes of members. One very disagreeable day last winter, when the streets were deep in [illegible] business was extremely dull, and the spirits of the boys were considerably depressed as well. Owing to the condition of the streets, most of the brokers had worn overshoes, chiefly of the kind known as arctics, when going to the Board, and all the shoes were, as usual, deposited in the cloakroom. When the dullness of the day had become almost intolerable, one of the boys conceived a bright idea to relieve it. Moving slyly to the cloak-room, he got a large cloak and spread it on the floor. Then gathering all the shoes within his reach into the cloak, he picked up his prize and moved quietly back into the hall, stationing himself in a corner, with the bundle at his feet. A minute later a shoe was seen whirling through the air, and then another, and another. The brokers, thinking some one was throwing their shoes out of the cloak-room, made a rush thither, but found no one there. Then, turning around, they found the air rapidly thickening with overshoes, which soon fell in a heavy shower on their heads. It did not take them long to find out the cause of the [illegible] The man with the bundle [illegible] discovered, and in an inst[illegible] of mischief had broken loo[illegible] the hall. The shower of [illegible] ened and thickened, unt[illegible] came actually dark with [illegible] and, when the sport fina[illegible] overshoes of two or thre[illegible] bers were so mixed and [illegible] that to sort and mate th[illegible] be almost impossible[illegible] boys had to return fro[illegible] day without the cust[illegible] for their feet, but th[illegible] enjoyed reconciled t[illegible] porary discomfort.

The readiness wi[illegible] street merry men [illegible] business to school[illegible] shown by a hundr[illegible] one will suffice he[illegible] curred recently, a[illegible] Exchange was [illegible] Some failures ha[illegible] hensions of m[illegible] minds. Su[illegible] was at its hei[illegible] culiar white [illegible] lery. A b[illegible] the groups, [illegible] sooner did his eye [illegible] chapeau than he faced the [illegible] roared:

"Take off that hat!"

Instantly the panic was forgotten, the whole business of the Exchange came to a sudden stop, and almost every man on the floor looked to the gallery and shouted at the top of his voice:

"Take off that hat!"

The order was not obeyed for some time, so the shrill cry went up again and again. Presently the man took off the obnoxious hat, made a mock bow to the crowd below, waving the hat at the time, and then retired. As quickly as the brokers had stopped business they were at it again, and a person going in a moment later, and marking the eagerness on each face, and the clamor raging all over the place, could hardly believe that such a scene as the one described had just been enacted.

Often the announcement of a failure has no other effect upon them than to elicit a thundering "B-a-a-h!" followed by a long, loud laugh. But it is not indifference to a comrade's misfortune that causes the boys to act in this manner when he gets into trouble. Wall street brokers are for the most part generous-hearted fellows, and as a class they are rarely behind in deeds of charity. But they must have their fun, and frequently they are rather careless as to whether the object of it be a suitable one or not. As an instance of their off-hand generosity, may be cited their subscription of a purse of three hundred dollars in the Exchange, for the boy who was saved from the wreck of the Atlantic. The boy was brought into the hall by a broker, and placed on a table where all could see him, and in a few minutes the purse was made up and given to him.—Appleton's Journal.

A Curious Card.

The suspension and subsequent resumption of business by David Preston & Co., Detroit, have been announced. The card in which Mr. Preston declared his purpose to resume is peculiar, but said to be characteristic. He starts out in this way:

"It's good. There's light ahead; there's help in God; there's wealth in Jesus; there's power in prayer. I landed in Detroit Nov. 4, 1848. I borrowed $12 to bring me here. I got a situation at $12 per month, and in less than two months I had paid this $12 from my wages. On the 4th of May, 1852, I married a good wife, and in less than one week thereafter I embarked in business under the style of David Preston & Co., bankers and brokers. My entire capital at that time, out of which I had to furnish a home and start my bank, was less than $500. In May, 1854, I had amassed a fortune of near $5,000, and with this increased capital I opened a bank in Chicago. In the month of August following, Mr. A. Klemm, our banker at No. 50 Wall street, New York, failed, with $6,000 of our money in his possession, which was all we were worth and a little more. We never realized but $15 out of this $6,000, and yet I did not commit suicide, run away, compromise, or resign. I prayed and worked and paid, and have been doing the same kind of business ever since, and I expect to fight it out on this line to the end of my journey."

Drinking and smoking put a good deal of money into the Treasury. From July 1, 1872, to May 1, 1873, the Government revenue from spirits of all kinds (not including beer) was $41,941,196, and from tobacco in various forms, $7,176,413.

Wilkie Collins and Charles Bradlaugh.

A New York telegram says: At the reception of Wilkie Collins at the Lotus Club on Saturday night a remarkable scene followed the introdutcion of Charles Bradlaugh, late in the evening, in the restaurant. He referred pointedly to the fact that class distinctions in England were so great that this American club had given him on foreign soil the first opportunity of his life to meet a countryman whom he was so glad to honor, and even to say a word in his praise. "There was no club in England," said he, "that would give me an equal privilege." The speech was received with wild outbursts of enthusiasm. Prolonged cheers were given, and even after Bradlaugh had turned to his seat at the table beside Collins the crowd continued cheering until he came forward and spoke briefly again.

A boy's tooth-ache generally commences at 8 a. m., reaches the highest altitude at a quarter to 9, when the pain is intense to an extraordinary degree; commences to subside at 9, and after that disappears with a celerity that must be very comforting to the sufferer. THE WHEAT CROP.

Returns for the Month of September from the Agricultural Bureau.

The average condition of the wheat crop for the entire country, according to the returns is 95. A comparison with the September average of last year will illustrate the crop prospects of the present, when the increased area of the present season is duly considered:

The present has not been a good wheat year in the South.

Ohio reports cover more than half the area in wheat, and indicate a very nearly average yield, of about average quality.

Michigan has nearly a full crop of wheat of very good quality, well secured, and generally exceeding the expectation in thrashing.

In Indiana this crop has suffered from winter-killing, the fly, chinch-bug, and heavy rains in the shock, causes which indicate a depreciation of sixteen per cent.

In forty-three counties in Illinois the average is ninety-three.

Wisconsin makes very encouraging returns, in no case below 100, and averaging 107 upon an increased area.

Minnesota is the banner State of the year upon wheat production. Increased acreage in new and old counties was returned in June, and the average for condition is 109. In several counties it is claimed to be the best crop for many years, both for quality and quantity.

Returns from two-thirds of the wheat area of Iowa indicate an average yield upon an increased area. The quality is generally superior, with some exceptions of injury from rain and blight. Most of it was secured in good condition.

Missouri has secured an average crop, mostly of good quality. Chinch bugs caused a reduced yield in some counties.

The crop in Nebraska is large and the quality excellent.

The crop of California is not so good as was expected; a large reduction from the yield of last year may be calculated upon.

In Oregon no county reports less than 100, the average being 107.

The reports from the Territories are generally favorable.

An Extensive Beehive.

"How doth the little busy bee?" inquires Dr. Rowe. It doth very much indeed at Los Angeles, where there exists at this moment the largest hive in the world. It is a fissure of a rock, the opening of which is seventeen feet wide, and the depth of which is 160 feet. Innumerable swarms of bees have made this cavern their home, and have accumulated enormous quantities of honey; it is calculated that there must be many thousands of tons of it. The inhabitants of the country have more than once tried, although the approach of the fissure is difficult, to drive away the bees and take possession of their treasure, but they have always been repulsed with loss. We cannot but think that the tame surrender of so magnificent a prize as the wax and honey contained in a hive of 160 feet deep shows a lamentable want of enterprise in the population of Los Angeles, and are disposed to suggest that they should call in foreign aid.

Growth of Wealth in Ireland.

Within thirty years the population of Ireland has declined to the extent of 3,793,838. This was between 1841 and 1871, according to the dates of the census. But the reduction of the population in this case does not indicate a diminishing degree of prosperity. On the contrary, it has gone on simultaneously with an increase of wealth. In live stock Ireland's riches grew during the same period from $105,529,040 to $187,576,055. The number of flax factories doubled. The number of spindles increased from 592,981 in 1862 to 916,660 in 1870. The flax power-looms were 4,666 in 1862, but ten years after they were 14,834. The cotton power-looms numbered 1,757 in 1862, and 3,437 in 1871. The total number of hands employed in the factories in 1862 was 37,872; now it is 63,952. The deposits in the joint-stock banks in 1841 amounted to $27,839,255, and in 1871 they had increased to $136,742,195. On the other hand, the business of the pawnbrokers has diminished. In 1867 there were 13,282,918 pledges for $9,252,755, and in 1870 only 11,608,444 pledges for $8,670,580.—New York Times.

THE OLD CANOE.

Where the rocks are gray and the shore is steep,
And the waters below look dark and deep,
Where the rugged pine, in its lonely pride,
Leans gloomily over the murky tide;
Where the reeds and rushes are long and rank,
And the weeds grow thick on the winding bank;
[illegible] the whole day through,
There lies at its moorings the old canoe.

The useless paddles are idly dropped,
Like a sea-bird's wings that the storm has lopped,
And crossed on the railing, one o'er one,
Like the folded hands when the work is done;
While busily back and forth between
The spider stretches his silvery screen,
And the solemn owl, with his dull "too-hoo,"
Settles down on the side of the old canoe.

The stern half sunk in the slimy wave,
Rots slowly away in its living grave,
And the green moss creeps o'er its dull decay,
Hiding its moldering dust away,
Like the hand that plants o'er the tomb a flower,
Or the ivy that mantles the falling tower;
While many a blossom of loveliest hue
Springs up o'er the stern of the old canoe.

The currentless waters are dead and still—
But the light wind plays with the boat at will,
And lazily in and out again
It floats the length of the rusty chain,
Like the weary march of the hands of time,
That meet and part at the noontide chime,
And the shore is kissed at each turning anew
By the dripping bow of the old canoe.

Oh, many a time, with a careless hand,
I have pushed it away from the pebbly strand,
And paddled it down where the stream runs thick
Where the whirls are wild and the eddies are thick
And laughed as I leaned o'er the rocking side,
And looked below in the broken tide,
To see that the faces and boats were two,
That were mirrored back from the old canoe.

But now, as I lean o'er the crumbling side,
And look below in the sluggish tide,
The face that I see there is graver grown,
And the laugh that I hear has a soberer tone,
And the hands that lent to the light skiff wings
Have grown familiar with sterner things,
But I love to think of the hours that sped
As I rocked where the whirls their white spray shed,
Ere the blossoms waved, or the green grass grew
O'er the moldering stern of the old canon.

Humorous.

When a lady stands at the hymenial altar with an intended, you may know she is about to draw her beau into a knot.

A Connecticut clergyman recently prayed for the absent members of his flock "who were prostrated on beds of sickness, and those who were sitting about on chairs of health."

"Why did Joseph's brethren put him in a pit?" asked a Buffalo Sunday-school teacher; and the reply he got was, "Because there was no room for him in the family circle."

A Boy-Hero.

A boy-hero has been developed in Nagy-Brezna, an obscure Hungarian village lately visited by the plague. Among the victims was a poor peasant woman, who left behind a son aged 15, but no property. In consequence of this latter circumstance, the parish priest and the rest of the villagers were in no haste to make arrangements for her interment, and, in spite of the prayers and tears of the poor lad, the body remained in the hut. Two days later a peasant woman of property also died, and a grave was immediately dug, to be ready for the funeral next day. When, however, the body was carried to the graveyard, it was found that the grave was already filled in. The superstitious villagers fell on their knees and crossed themselves, but the priest, guessing how the matter stood, sent two of the peasants to the hut of the poor parishioner to see if the corpse was there. They returned, having found the body had been removed, and bringing the boy with them. On being asked where the body of his mother now was, he pointed, sobbing, to the newly-made grave, saying that by exerting all his strength, he had dragged the corpse to the graveyard, placed it in the grave, and shoveled in the earth.

Tax-Ridden California.

The California State Board of Equalization has fixed the rate of taxation for State purposes for this year at 50 cents on the $100 of assessed value, so that San Francisco, having $206,000,000 on her own roll, will have to come down with $1,030,000 for her share. This is for the State purposes alone. The city tax will be three times as much, and the amount paid in duties and internal revenue taxes about $9,000,000, making a total of $13,000,000 of taxes to be collected in San Francisco next year. Of the duties on imports, about $5,000,000 are repaid to our citizens by the people of the coast outside of this city, leaving $8,000,000 to be paid by 27,000 voters, or about $300 annually of tax to every voter, on the average.—San Francisco Alta.

The Wonderful Virtues of Ammonia.

No housekeeper should be without a bottle of spirits of ammonia, for, besides its medicinal value, it is invaluable for household purposes. It is nearly as useful as soap, and its cheapness brings it within the reach of all. Put a teaspoonful of ammonia to a quart of warm soapsuds, dip in a flannel cloth, and wipe off the dust and fly-specs, grime and smoke, and see for yourselves how much labor it will save. No scrubbing will be needful. It will cleanse and brighten silver wonderfully; to a pint of hot suds mix a teaspoonful of the spirits, dip in your silver spoons, forks, etc., rub with a brush and then polish on chamois skin. For washing mirrors and windows it is very desirable; put a few drops of ammonia upon a piece of newspaper and you will readily take off every spot or finger mark on the glass. It will take out grease spots from every fabric; put on the ammonia clear, lay blotting paper over the place and press a hot flat-iron on it for a few moments. A few drops in water will clean laces and whiten them as well; also muslins. Then it is a most refreshing agent at the toilet-table; a few drops in a basin of water will make a better bath than pure water, and if the skin is oily it will remove all glossiness and disagreeable odors. Added to a foot-bath it entirely absorbs all noxious smells so often arising from the feet in warm weather, and nothing is better for cleansing the hair from dandruff and dust. For cleaning nail and hair brushes it is equally good.

Put a teaspoonful of ammonia into one pint of warm or cold water, and shake the brushes through the water. When the brushes look white rinse them in cold water, and put them in the sunshine, or in a warm place, to dry. The dirtiest brushes will come out of this bath white and clean. For medicinal purposes ammonia is almost unrivaled. For the headache it is a desirable stimulant, and frequent inhaling of its pungent odors will often entirely remove catarrhal cold. There is no better remedy for heartburn and dyspepsia, and the aromatic spirits of ammonia is especially prepared for these troubles. Ten drops of it in a wine-glass of water are often a great relief. The spirits of ammonia can be taken in the same way; but it is not as palatable. In addition to all these uses, the effects of ammonia on vegetation are beneficial. If you desire roses, geraniums, fuchsias, etc., to become more flourishing, you can try it upon them by adding five or six drops of it to every pint of warm water that you give them; but don't repeat the dose oftener than once in every five or six days, lest you stimulate them too highly. Rain water is impregnated with ammonia, and thus it refreshes and vivifies vegetable life. So be sure and keep a large bottle of it in the house, and have a glass stopper for it, as it is very evanescent and also injurious to corks, eating them away.

The Effects of Worry.

That the effects of worry are more to be dreaded than those of simple hard work is evident from noting the classes of persons who suffer from the effects of mental overstrain. The case-book of the physician shows that it is the speculator, the betting-man, the railway manager, the great merchant, the superintendent of large manufacturing or commercial works, who most frequently exhibit the symptoms of cerebral exhaustion. Mental cares accompanied with suppressed emotion, occupations liable to great vicissitudes of fortune, and those which involve the bearing on the mind of a multiplicity of intricate details, eventually break down the lives of the strongest. In estimating what may be called the staying powers of different minds under hard work, it is always necessary to take early training into account. A young man cast suddenly into a position involving great care and responsibility, will break down in circumstances in which, had he been gradually habituated to the position, he would have performed its duties without difficulty. It is probably for this reason that the professional classes generally suffer less from the effects of overstrain than others. They have a long course of preliminary training, and their work comes on them by degrees; therefore, when it does comes in excessive quantity, it finds them prepared for it. Those, on the other hand, who suddenly vault into a position requiring severe mental toil, generally die before their time.—Chamber's Journal.

The Stamina of Sound Horses.

In these days, observes the London Times, when inquiry is being made as to the breeding and usefulness of horses, it might be well to compare work known to be done by them, and it may be difficult to exceed the use and good endurance of a pair of light carriage horses owned by the Vicar of Gringley-on-Hill in Yorkshire. They were bought at three years old in 1863, and in 1864, without shoes and with long tails, out of the fields, trained at once, and have been at work ever since. Their work has been regularly calculated, and the distance they have run exceeds considerably 30,000 miles; and remembering that 24,000 is round the globe, so much more is no mean length. One mare, by Eon, is almost thoroughbred, the other, by Croton Oil, three-quarters, both under fifteen hands, both with all-black legs, light and sinewy. There never has been anything the matter with either a leg or a foot, and they have worn out five sets of wheels in the carriage. They are still running every day as if they were only six years old.

Shaking Hands.

There are many ways of shaking hands, and most of them are disagreeable ones. There is the fishy way, the snubbing way, the pumping way, and, worst of all, the hearty way. When a friend is so glad to see you that he crushes your hand in his joy, and renders you incapable of manual labor for eleven years, it is nearly time that friendship should become a lost sentiment. This is what happened to a poor fellow in New Hampshire, whose sad case should serve as a warning to the American people—the most inveterate and unreasonable hand-shakers in the world.

The editor of an Indiana paper has been presented, by admiring friends, with a lot in a cemetery.

Let Us Consider.—Since the introduction of distilled spirits in the sixteenth century, they have been habitually prescribed as remedies. We know that alcohol, in all its forms, is pernicious to health. Knowing these things, and that under the system of treatment which includes their use, the mortality among the sick is, and ever has been, enormous, is it not worth while to try the effect of a remedy which combines in their highest excellence the qualities of a Tonic, an Alterative and a Regulator; contains no mineral bane or murderous alkaloid or alcoholic poison; does its curative office without pain and with uniform certainty? Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters fulfills all these conditions, and is now effecting the most extraordinary cures, in cases where every "specific" of the faculty has ignominiously failed. Consider, in view of those facts, whether any sick person is justified by reason and common sense in declining to test the virtues of this undefiled and irresistible remedy. 11

The medicine—powdered human skulls—which Charles the Second's physicians commended to his lips on his death-bed, is surpassed in oddity by a New England remedy for consumption. This is the heart of a rattlesnake just killed. This strange dose is said to have been administered to a young consumptive who had been previously "given up." He recovered instantly.

Peerless Clothes Wringer.

There is scarcely any disease in which purgative medicines are not more or less required, and much sickness and suffering might be prevented were they more generally used. No person can feel well while a costive habit of body prevails; besides, it soon generates serious and often fatal diseases which might have been avoided by a timely and judicious use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Tasteless, Coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules. These little Pellets, unlike every other cathartic, produce such a secondary tonic effect upon the bowels as to bring about a permanent healthy action and increase their peristaltic motions. Many valuable horses die from the effects of colic. The best thing to do in a case of this kind is to pour a bottle of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment into a long-necked junk bottle, add half pint of molasses and water, then pour the whole down the horse's throat. Defend Your Health.

The fall of the leaves not only symbolizes human decay, but promotes it. In other words, the effluvia from dying and rotting vegetation is unfavorable to health. To this and other causes—especially excess of moisture in the atmosphere—may be ascribed the prevalence of acute disorders of the stomach, bowels and liver at this season. Every person of bilious habit is liable to be very bilious in the fall. Then, too, all persons whose digestion is weak are more than ordinarily dyspeptic, and individuals predisposed to colic, diarrhea and dysentery are particularly likely to be attacked by these complaints. The most complete defense against each and all of these distressing ailments is bodily vigor. To obtain this blessing in all its plentitude where it does not exist, and to preserve and perpetuate it where it does exist, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is earnestly recommended. It is the peculiar office of this preparation to reinforce and regulate the important organs which digest and temper the food, and convert it into life-sustaining blood. Bodily vigor depends upon the nourishing qualities of that fluid, and the nutritiousness of the blood depends upon the functional activity and regularity which it is the special province of the Bitters to secure. Hence it is the best defense of health at this season, and indeed at all seasons. When dysentery, diarrhea, bilious colic, and other violent affections of the bowels become epidemic, as they often do in certain parts of the country in the fall, it will be found that persons who have been wise enough to resort to the Bitters as a preventive are almost invariably exempted from the scourge.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures andruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the Vigor is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft luster and richness of tone it imparts.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt-Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the Sarsaparillian Resolvent excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

CONSUMPTION
And Its Cure.

WILLSON'S
Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by

What Foolish Ideas are entertained by many persons in regard to purgatives. It seems that there are persons who think they cannot be cured of bilious complaints without purging themselves until the "internal machinery" is almost destroyed. Now the facts are these: A mild corrective that will stimulate the liver to healthy action is what is wanted in cases of this kind, and the experience of many years has proven that Dr. Smith's Celebrated Old Style Bitters is the best remedy known to produce this effect. It not only acts on the liver but purifies the blood, and so regulates the entire working machinery of the system upon a correct and scientific principle as to produce a healthy and vigorous action, causing a free and natural flow of all torpid and stagnant bilious collections, and at once restoring those who use it to full health and vigor. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that every family should keep on hand and use this the best remedy known for bilious complaints. For sale by all Druggists. Address Union Medicine Co., Nos. 6 and 8 North Second-st., St. Louis, Mo.

As a pain killer there is nothing to equal Dr. Smith's Golden Liniment. There is no pain it will not subdue, no cramp it will not cure. It is equally good for Man or Beast. Try it; try it; try it.

ROSADALIS

THE GREAT ALTERATIVE AND BLOOD PURIFIER.

It is not a quack nostrum. The ingredients are published on each bottle of medicine. It is used and recommended by Physicians wherever it has been introduced. It will positively cure SCROFULA in its various stages, RHEUMATISM, WHITE SWELLING, GOUT, GOITRE, BRONCHITIS, NERVOUS DEBILITY, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood. Send for our Rosadalis Almanac, in which you will find certificates from reliable and trustworthy Physicians, Ministers of the Gospel and others.

Dr. R. Wilson Carr, of Baltimore, says he has used it in cases of Scrofula and other diseases with much satisfaction.

Dr. T. C. Pugh, of Baltimore, recommends it to all persons suffering with diseased Blood, saying it is superior to any preparation he has ever used.

Rev. Dabney Ball, of the Baltimore M. E. Conference South, says he has been so much benefitted by its use, that he cheerfully recommends it to all his friends and acquaintances.

Craven & Co., Druggists, at Gordonsville, Va., say it never has failed to give satisfaction.

Sam'l G. McFadden, Murfreesboro', Tennessee, says it cured him of Rheumatism when all else failed.

The Sun.

NEW YORK, 1873-4. WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible, and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party, and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies, and the markets for the men, especially the cattle markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have THE WEEKLY SUN at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six Columns. Only $1.00 a year, no discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun, $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to Clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four page newspaper of twenty-eight Columns. Daily Circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6 a year. To Clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

A BOY AT THE WOOD-PILE.

There was a boy in a Nelson street yard cutting wood yesterday, and he worked at it in a strikingly natural manner. First he set the stick on one end and prepared to strike it, when it tumbled down. Then he stood it up and put a sliver under the weak side to sustain it, and lifted the axe for the blow, when it tumbled again. As he had got the axe up quite a ways this time, and was fairly quivering with expectation, the reaction was not pleasant. It appeared to weaken him and before another trial he leaned on the axe and looked around on the scenery. At the third trial he put several slivers under the stick, and was some five minutes in doing it. Then he raised the axe carefully, deliberately took aim, and brought the blade now with terrible force, and within an and a half of the stick, which immediately tipped over. This surprised him. He looked at the axe, then at the stick, and then around at the houses to see if anybody was looking. He was ten minutes proping the stick up the fourth time. When he got it so it would stand without being held he took up the axe, and after several mock motions so as to get the right aim he swung the implement down again. The blade struck the stick with terrible force within about a sixteenth of an inch from the edge, and took off a slip about five inches long. We don't suppose there is anything quite so aggravating as this. Splitting your shin open to the bone is a Pass time in comparison, The Nelson street boy stood that stick up again without any ceremony, and with the least display in the world swung the axe over his head and brought it spitefully down. The blade this time clipped off a half inch chip and swung aroung with such momentum as to throw the boy off his feet and drive him headlong over a pile of other sticks, every one of which he struck with his knee or face. We don't think we ever saw any boy get on his feet as quick as that boy did. And we were not in the least surprised to see him snat h up the axe, and, with screams and sobs, beat that stick until he was exhausted. With this unpleasant duty performed he flung the axe in among the tomato vines, and went in the house for a piece of cake.—Danbury News.

THE CRISIS.

In spite of hopes and palliatives the financial crisis still continues. It was as fierce yesterday as ever; and we regret to say there is no sure indication to show when or where it will end.

Well, the truth is we have brought it upon ourselves. We have spent too much borrowed money. We have built too many railroads on credit. We have lived to fast. We have made our houses palaces, and have banqueted on the luxuries of the world. We have exhausted our capitol in great enterprises, and in the expectation of future profit we have fixed the resources that should have been left moveable for daily use. And along with all this, too many of the leaders and the people have becom corrupt and dishonest. And now the settling day has come, and our trouble is extreme.

We must now all wish that we had been more upright and wiser. But while the crisis continues and does its work, let no one forget that the country is still rich and sound; and that after all our trials we are sure to come out right in the end.—St. Jo. Democrat.

Now, dis yaa dog, you see, jess puts his front feets on de Hoboken sho', and he puts his behind feets on de New York sho', "Yesser." "Now, s'pose you walk on dis yaa dog's tail in New York—" "Yesser." "He'll bark, won't he?" "Yesser." "Well, where will that dog bark?" In Hoboken, I cal'latd." "Dat am jest it. You walk on de dog's tail in New York, an' he barks in Hoboken; an' dat's de way de telegraf works." "Yesser; dasso—dasso! Your right, by golly.'

A gentleman sent his black servant to purchase a fresh fish. He went to a stall, and taking up a fish began to smell of it. The fishmonger observing him and fearing the bystanders might catch a scent, exclaimed,

'Hallo, you black rascal, what do you smell my fish for?'

The negro replied, 'Me no smell your fish, massa.'

'What are you doing then, sir?'

'Why, me talk to him, massa.'

'And what did you say to that fish, eh?'

'Why, me ask him what news at sea, that's all, massa.'

'And what does he say to you?'

'He says he don't know; he not been dar dese three weeks.'

No Actor has yet been able to counterfeit that expression of joy which a man shows when discoversng a ten cent stamp in his paper of tobacco.

A good man is kinder to his enemies than bad men are to their friends.—Bishop Hall.

The Primary Law of the Grangers.

Owing to the action taken by a number of isolated granges, the officers of the National Grange, are considering the propriety of issuing an admonitory circular letter, that the primary laws of the Patrons of Husbandry forbid any collective action, or even discussion, of religious or political questions, parties and sects. Individual members are in no way bound or committed as to religious or political matters. They have the fullest right to select their own affiliations, but the granges, as such, can not take any part or lot in these ideas. As to the farmers' conventions and clubs, of which there are so many nowadays, the Patrons of Husbandry, as an order, can lay no claim or accept any responsibility. Granges that will persist in taking part in political proceedings are to be reminded that they thereby render themselves liable to a revocation of their charters. The circular letter will remind the grangers that such action, if allowed, is the rock on which all along it has been feared the order would split. The matter has heretofore been fully considered, and the wisdom of the original prohibition heartily reaffirmed. A statement will be made setting forth the purposes of the order—social, cooperative, and ameliorative—by which it will be seen that the work is extensive enough to touch all that enters into the life and needs of an American farmer, and is so placed as to separate its consideration from partizan ends, while it does aim at teaching the necessities of the large body of producers, whose material welfare is bound up with the questions involved in the aggregation of interests going on under corporate influences and control.

This projected circular will be due, if issued, to the fact that a number of grangers in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas and elsewhere have embarked, in their organized capacity, in political movements. The Grand Masters of Minnesota and Wisconsin have already been compelled to remind the grangers of their obligations in this direction.

There is no doubt felt by the leading grangers that any partizan movement on the part of their order would speedily result in its complete disruption. At the present time the officers of the national granges embrace men who have been and still are members of different parties, and some among the active members, at least, have served on both sides of the great rebellion.

SCALPED.

In Oshkosh, Wisconsin, recently, a young woman working in a shingle mill was scalped after the most approved method of civilization. She was working under a shaft which was going at the rate of 200 revolutions a minute, when her hair, which was very long, caught in the knuckle joint and in an instant it was torn entirely from her head, taking with it all the flesh and muscles on her head. from a line drawn around from each eyebrow, her skull was left white and bare, without a trace of blood or flesh. The strangest part of the accident is that she felt little or no pain, declaring that when it was being torn off all that she relized was a tickling sensation in her head. She coolly walked out of the room, and wailed for a buggy to take her home. Her only regret was the fright it would give her mother. The scalp with its beautiful long locks of hair, was curled and entwined around the shaft at the joint, and when the mill was stopped it was taken down, but no one had sufficient presence of mind to replace it upon her head. It is nearly perfect, and the doctors have determined to tan it with the hair on so that if the girl recovers it may be used as a wig. The case is one of the most remarkable on record.

Prospects of Specie Payment.

Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Bureau of the Mint, who has made a life study of finances and is one of the ablest of Government officials, predicts that the effect of this stock panic will be to hasten the resumption of specie payments. He says that he shall not be surprised if within a month silver coin should be a medium of circulation at currency rates; and if a still greater crash in stock follows the opening of the Stock Exchange—a thing he regards as very probable—the full resumption of specie payments, he thinks, cannot long be delayed, as everything, even stocks, must come to a gold level. He does not think the panic will be disastrous, as the recuperative power of the country, with its wealth of grain, cotton, and crude bullion, will enable it to retain its advantage over foreign countries. He says he is getting ready, and has issued the requisite orders to all the Mints, for largaly increasing the coinage, and that more bullion will be coined during the next three months than at any previous time in the same period. No exports of crude bullion will be made for several months, owing principally to the unfavorable rate of exchange.

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

An Old-Time Teamster.

He was an old teamster, and knew not only every inch of the road that led to the distant market town to which we were going, but every landlord, groom, and barkeeper on the way. A man of such vast geographical knowledge, and such extensive and interesting acquaintance with men, became to me a most important personage. When he had amused himself long enough with stories told to excite my imagination, he turned to me sharply and said,

"Boy, do you ever tell lies?"

"Yes, sir," I answered, without hesitation.

"You do? Then why didn't you lie when I asked you the question?"

"Because I never lie except to please people," I replied.

"Oh! you are one of the story-tellers, are you?" he said, in a tone of severity.

"Yes sir."

"Well then, you ought to be flogged. If I had a story-telling boy I would flog it out of him. Truth, boy; always stand by the truth! It was only this time last year that I was carrying a load of goods down the mountain for a family the same as yours, and there was a little boy who went with me the same as you are going now. I was sure I smelt tobacco. Said I 'I smell tobacco.' He grew red in the face, and I charged him with having some in his pocket. He declared he had none, and I said, 'We shall see what will become to liars.' I pitied him, for I knew something terrible would happen. A strap broke, and the horses started on a run, and off went the boy. I stopped them as soon as I could, ran back, and picked him up insensible, with as handsome a plug of tobacco in his pocket as you ever saw; and the rascal had stolen it from his grandmother! Always speak the truth, my boys always speak the truth!"

"And did you steal the tobacco from him?" I asked.

"No, lad, I took it and used it because I knew it would hurt him, and I couldn't bear the thought of exposing him to his grandmother."

"Do you think lying is worse than stealing?" I asked.

"That is something we can't settle. Tobacco is very preserving and cleansing to the teeth, and I am obliged to use it. Do you see that little building we are coming to? That is Snow's store; and now, if you are a boy that has any heart—any real heart—and if you have saved up a few pennies, you will go there and get a stick of candy for yourself and a plug of tobacco for me. That would be the square thing for a boy to do who stands by the truth, and wants to do a good turn to the man that helps him along;" and he looked me in the eye so steadily and persuasively that resistance was impossible, and my poor little purse went back into my pocket painfully empty of that which had seemed like wealth.—Holland's Arthur Bonnccastle.

The Three Richest Men in America.

The New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial writes; "The three richest men in America are Wm B. Astor, A. T. Stewart, and Commodore Vanderbilt—all residents of New York City. Astor's wealth is mainly in real estate and its revenues; Vanderbilt's is mainly in railroad stocks and their dividends; Stewart's is in goods, houses, factories, lands and stocks. The aggregate wealth of each one of them is supposed to be somewhere between seventy-five and a hundred millions, which looks rather heavy. Nobody knows exactly: they couldn't tell themselves within a million or two. Those who know most about their affairs put their figures highest, and say that the income tax returns of a few years ago, which showed each of them to be worth between twenty and thirty millions, gave no proper idea of their real wealth. Astor lives unostentatiously; Vanderbilt lives in a three story brick house on a third class street; and Stewart lives in a marble palace on Fifth avenue. more magnificent than any other residence on the American Continent, and equalled but by few in any of the great cities of Europe. Astor and Vanderbiit are New Yorkers by birth; Stewart is a native of the north of Ireland. Astor is a large, heavy man of seventy, with strong features and a rubicund face, indicative of high living; Stewart is a medium sized man, rather slender and tall, with a face like a parchment, and gives the impression of being hard up; Vanderbilt is a tall, slim handsome proud looking man of nearly eighty, straight as an arrow. Astor has heirs to his estate. Vanderbilt has children to whom he can leave his fortune; but Stewart is childless. Astor's public benefactions are confined to something like a couple of hundred thousand dollars, which he gave to the Astor library, and the two golden candle-sticks, nine feet high, which he recently gave to Trinity Church. Vanderbilt has never made any public benefactions, excepting a steamship to the Government during the war, till very recently, when he gave a million of dollars for educational purposes—one half of this sum to found a university in Tennessee, and the other half to another educational institution. Stewart has always had the reputation of being very close-fisted; but he must be credited with his million dollar 'Home for women,' which will be completed next year. Astor is an independent Methodist, and Stewart is said to be inclined to thinking for himself. Stewart is a scholarly man; Vanderbilt is not. Astor is an accomplished man of the world."

AN OBITUARY EDITOR.

The St Louis Republican has an applicant for the position of obituary editor. His letter asking for the situation gives a sample of his abilities He says:

Our parents were wealthy but honest, and of course we are now poor; but we can live on a very little, because Mary Ann and I have made ourselves into a grange and buy at retail at wholesale prices.

May be you have a full corpse to do your funny writing, so if you will engage me I will do anything in the obituarian line; it will suit our feelings better, for Mary Ann and I have been in affliction lately. Great grandmother. Peck died last week, aged CXIX. She died once before, when she was ninety six, but just after she was laid out she seemed to remember somehow that she had forgotten to finish footing a stocking for her youngest boy who was only seventy four years of age so she came to again; and as winter was coming on, and so much knitting to be done, she concluded to keep on for twenty years or so. The doctor thinks if she ain't disturbed she is gone for good this time. Me and Mary Ann sat up with her to the last, and she was coached off into the full fruition of all her faculties. I could not help moralizing as I sat by her bedside how lean a person can get and yet consume so much gruel—she beat anything all hollow I ever say. Poor old soul, she was so lean that the musquitos had ceased to be a burden; they used to light on her and hammer on her skull with their bills till the room sounded like a telegraph office, then they would scratch their heads with their hind legs and sail out of the window worn out. She seemed to gain a little flesh after we came here from Chicago, and got new spirits; but somebody told her that her name was accidentally left out of Edwards' Directory and she fell of again. She hadn't walked any to speak of the last twenty two years, and it used to console her to think how much she had saved on shoes. When I look at the old calico c on with its faded roses that she sat embowered in since she was 104, I heave a sigh at the transitoriness of all sublunarian comfort. Her eyes got so weak that she wore seven pair of glasses for a spell, but they warnt strong enough for her to get the sense out of her Scriptures, so we had a pair of opera glasses mounted so that she could wear them on her nose She sat up the heftiest part of the day before she snuffed out, and told me many things confidentially. She remembered distinctly when General Washington got the check cashed that Oakes Ames gave him for signing the Pacific Railroad bill—and she was quite a big girl when Cyrus Field and Hendrick Hudson brung the Atlantic cable over in the May Flower. What is home without a great-grand-mother?

* * *

The LaGrange Standard says that a lady who has "taught 8 terms," and who now holds a valid license for 18 months (in a neighboring county, which doesn't mean porter) lately furnished the County Superintendent with the following startling intelligence, which, if true, will be likely to cause a revision of the geographies:

"The river called the Euphrates is noted for its beauty the fertility of its banks it is one of the largest rivers of Europe."

The important cities on the Hudson are "New York and Boston."

The "Indian Ocean" is the water north of South America.

The "Mediteranean Sea" is on the northeast of Europe.

On her map of Africa the rivers Nile and Niger rise in the Red Sea, flow southwest and empty into into the Pacific Ocean.

Elsewhere she remarks: "I have been trying every means in my power to store my mind with such knowledge as shall be most beneficial to myself and pupills.

Anecdote of Lord Pam.

The late Lord Palmerston, like most men who have become famous in literature or politics, was a capital raconteur, and enjoyed keenly the telling of a good anecdote. Lord Shaftesbury one of the most philanthropic men of England, married Lady Palmerston's eldest daughter by Earl Cowper, her first husband. Lord Palmerston was never weary of telling stories about his son in law, whose religious zeal he did not much believe in or care for; and Lord Shaftesbury always took them in good part. Many years ago Lord P. called across the table to Lord John Russell, who sat reading a newspaper at the "Garrick."

"Russell, have you read Tony's" (the nickname by which he always designated the Earl of Shaftesbury, whose name is Anthony Ashley Cowper) "speech last night before the parsons and paupers at Exeter Hall?"

"I have not, my lord," replied Lord John, whose priggishness never permits him to treat or address any person familiarly.

"Well, read it. It's devilish good, and the examination of the children at the close, I am told, was better still."

"How so?"

"Tony was asking the children a variety of questions of a Scriptural nature, to which he had received very satisfactory answer. Just as he was concluding, he addressed a girl somewhat older than the rest, and among other things inquired, 'Who made your vile body?' 'Please, my lord,' responded the unsophisticated girl, 'Betsey Jones made my body, but I made the skirt myself!'"—EDITOR'S DRAWER, in Harper's Magazine for November.

How John Made it Up.

He had failed somewhere—in study or deportment, I cannot remember which and his teacher told him he must stay after school. When the other scholars were dismissed, John seized a moment when the teacher's back was turned, and slid out of the door. She called after him to come back, but he pretended not to hear, and ran away. It was a cute trick, he thought, and he bragged over it a little to the other boys; but he did not go to school the next day, nor the next. He did not feel like it he said.

At last he made his appearance again, but instead of the punishment he expected, his teacher, who was giving out the subjects for essays that day, only told him to 'write a composition about obedience.' John took her meaning at once, and sat scratching his head and puzzling over his composition about half a day. Finally he handed in the following, which is an actual copy of John's composition.

'When won tells won to do a thing, and he does it, it is called obeying, and when won tells won to do a thing and he dont do it, it is called disobeying. And when a man or woman tells a boy or girl to do a thing and he dont do it, it is called disobeying, and when a teacher tells a boy to do a thing and he dont do it i tis called disobeying. The boy's name was John, and he did not obey his teacher, and when she called him back he did not hear her, and he will never do it again.'

The teacher was satisfied.

The Uprising Against Early Rising.

Early rising has been very rudely and successfully shaken. Charles Lamb hae shown that there is as much excess in rising with the lark and lying down with the lamb as in the practice referred to in Moore's song, which recommends a lenghtening of our days by taking "a few hours from night, my dear!" That philosophy was shaken in the early days of the world by two sleepy children who came under the rebuke of vigilant fathers.

"My son," remarked one sire, "I once found a piece of gold by rising early!"

"Aye!" rejoined young hopeful, "and the man who lost it was up before you."

"My son," said the other worthy parent, "observe that it's the early bird that catches the worm!"

"I do observe, my father," replied the excellent boy; "also, that the worm was caught by getting up earlier than the bird."

* * *

Somebody slandered the editor of the Greenville, Tenn., Era, whereupon the said editor thus distilled bitterness from the viols of wrath, and poured it out in a perfect ecstacy of vituperation on the head of the base caitiff; "The slanderous soul is imbued with the electric fire of hell. His black heart emits the sulphurous fumes till his whole nature is absorbed in one homogeneous mass of hellishness." The gentlemen whose nature absorbed such a "homogeneous mass," has since taken the panic and subsided.

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, OCT. 23, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

A YOUNG son of Hon. M. D. Leggett, Commissioner of Patents, was recently killed by falling from a cliff, near Ithaca, N. Y.....Ex-City Treasurer Sprague, of Brooklyn, who has been indicted for embezzlement, denies having defrauded the city out of a cent. He holds Rodman, his deputy, reponsible for all the stealings....A. E. Phillips, formerly Consul to Santiago, committed suicide in New York, last week, by cutting his throat.... Eighty-six horses were burned to death in Boston, last week, by the burning of Martin Hays' livery-stable.

THERE was a fresh tumble of stocks in New York Tuesday, the 14th inst., and Wall street was in a state of excitement which, very closely resembled another panic. On the Stock Exchange matters were painfully blue, and quotations fell even below the panic prices of the past ten years. New York Central dropped from 88½ to 82½, which was taken as an indication of Vanderbilt's inability to hold it up any longer, whereupon the whole Vanderbilt list went headlong. Western Union fell from 57½ to 48; Lake Shore from 66¼ to 59⅝, and Northwestern and Union Pacific followed suit. Various reasons are assigned for the collapse, among them Judge Blatchford's modification of his injunction, which released large amounts of Lake Shore, Western Union and other stocks which had been held by Blake Brothers as collateral; the bankruptcy proceedings against Kenyon Cox & Co., involving Daniel Drew, one of the partners; the advance in the Bank of England rate of discount to 6 per cent. and the large sale of stocks carried by the banks on margins, the holders of which could not put up any more collaterals. In addition to these causes there was also a panicky feeling among outsiders who sent in orders to sell large amounts, and thus in turn helped to precipitate the avalanche. The suspensions of the day were Burgen, Hurlbut & Livingston, sugar house; Gillespie, Trowbridge & Co., tea dealers; William Hoge & Co., bankers; William M. Whittemore, Wise & Cross, and C. H. Pierce, stock brokers. The effect upon the money market was to advance gold from 103⅝ to 109½.

THE Cashier of the New York State Treasury has been arrested for embezzlement, the amount of which is stated at $300,000....Five men entered the Frst National Bank of Athens, Pa., a few nights ago, gagged the Cashier, and robbed the safe of $20,000.

The West.

THE assessments made by the State Board of Equalization on the capital stock of Illinois corporations foot up as follows: Railroads, $62,608,747; telegraph companies, $1,238,394; all other corporations, $19,658,068; total, $83,505,209. The railroads of the State have been assessed, in all, $131,765,727. The aggregate assessment of the property in the State, real and personal, railroads, capital stock, and everything, amounts to $1,339,882,251.... Nearly 75,000 people visited the Chicago Exposition on the 9th inst....Miss Reeves, a young seamstress of Independence, Iowa, took a dose of cold poison the other day, and now sleeps beneath the cold sod....The School Board of Springfield, Ill., has decided that white and colored children shall be admitted to the public schools on equal terms.

THE conference at Fort Sill has resulted in releasing Satanta and Big Tree, on condition that the savages represented would agree to abstain from murdering and robbing white settlers....The Michigan Constitutional Convention has reconsidered its former action, and voted to make women eligible to school offices. It has also stricken from the draft of the new Constitution the prohibitions upon fictitious or watered stock, by corporations.... Advices from Washington Territory state that there is very little activity on the line of the Northern Pacific. The surveying and grading on the town site of Tacoma have been suspended, and all employes, except those indispensably required, have been discharged.... Two passengers on the Mississippi steamer Muscatine engaged in a savage fight, recently, and in the struggle both went overboard and were drowned....A young son of Isaac Ditman, of Auburn, Ind., while out nutting, a few days ago, fell from a tree and was instantly killed....The National Crop Reporter says reports from Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Missouri, Kansas, and Ohio confirm the estimated falling-off in the Irish potato crop in the States named, which, in 1870, produced over 43,000,000 bushels. The loss at the given rate would aggregate over 17,000,000 bushels.

THERE are 500 Masonic lodges in Missouri, with a membership exceeding 30,000....A fearful and fatal accident occurred recently near Iowa Falls, Iowa, which resulted in the burning to death of Mrs. Wagner and her two children, aged 7 and 2 years. Cause, the explosion of a kerosene lamp....Henry Frye, of McGregor, Iowa, has a two-year-old colt which weighs 1,210 pounds....Another balloonatic—one "Prof." Palmer—has probably made his last ascension. At Winamac, Ind., the other day, his balloon became entangled in the limbs of a tree, and the æronaut was thrown out. He fell some forty feet, and was badly injured.

ROBERT AUSTIN, a wealthy young farmer residing near Carrollton, Mo., suspected his wife's fidelity, and a few days ago left home ostensibly for St. Louis. Returning to his house after dark, he secreted himself in a closet in his wife's bed-room, armed with a double-barreled shot-gun. The wife soon retired, and shortly afterward Elijah Haley entered the room, undressed himself, and just as he was getting into bed, Austin sprang from his concealment and fired at him, but missed his aim, the shot entering his wife's abdomen, inflicting a fatal wound. Austin fired again at Haley and killed him instantly. Sheridan, Pope, Belknap, and others. ....An Omaha dispatch brings intelligence of another of those terrible prairie fires, which rage with such violence at this season of the year. On the 14th inst. one of these fires swept over twenty-five miles of country, in Saline and Jefferson countries, Nebraska, destroying many farm-houses and large quantities of grain. The saddest part of the report is the intelligence that ten school-children were overtaken by the furious flames. Three of them perished on the spot, and three others cannot survive. The other four, although fearfully injured, will recover.... A large delegate convention was held at Denver, Col., last week, to mature a plan for irrigating the Western Territories. A committee was appointed to memorialize Congress to extend Government aid, so that extensive ditches, canals and water-courses may be constructed in the several States and Territories where irrigation is resorted to for the cultivation of cereals, fruits and vegetables.... Washington.

THE usual quietness that pervades the national capital during the recess of Congress was rudely broken on Saturday afternoon, the 10th inst., by a first-class sensation—the attempted assassination of ex-Senator Pomeroy at the hands of ex-Congressman Martin F. Conway. Pomeroy, it seems, was walking up one of the avenues, when he met Conway, who, without a word of warning, drew a revolver and fired three shots in rapid succession at the corpulent ex-Senator, one of which took effect in the right breast, just below the nipple. He then put up his pistol and started to walk off, but was stopped by Mr. Jerome B. Stillson, a prominent journalist, who demanded of him an explanation of his murderous conduct. Conway simply replied, "He has ruined myself and family," surrendered his pistol to Stillson, and accompanied that gentleman to the station-house. Pomeroy, who had fallen to the pavement, was assisted to a carriage and driven to his residence, where an examination revealed the gratifying fact that his wound was simply an abrasion. The ball had passed through two thicknesses of his coat, also his vest and shirt, and its force was thereby so far spent that it produced no further damage than merely breaking the skin, and scarcely bringing blood. One of the shots passed through the ex-Senator's hat, closely grazing his head, the other missing him entirely. Pomeroy says he never had any controversy with Conway, and has not the remotest idea of the cause of the attack. Conway has not resided with his wife for several years, she having left him on account of his failure to support her. She is a clerk in the Treasury Department, having received the appointment on the recommendation of Pomeroy. Conway is a native of Baltimore, and a printer by trade. He studied law, emigrated to Kansas, and was elected to Congress, having served one term. He was afterward appointed by President Johnson Consul to Marseilles, but was removed by President Grant. It is evident that Conway is weak in both mind and body, and was laboring under an attack of temporary insanity at the time....It is authoritatively announced that Senator Conkling will not accept the office of Chief Justice if tendered him, but that he will retire from public life at the end of his Senatorial term, and devote himself to the practice of law.... A Washington dispatch says: "The President having been asked a question to-day in relation to the Chief Justiceship, replied that he had consulted with no one as to a selection, and repeated what he heretofore said, namely, that in making a choice he would look to the interests of the country at large, and endeaver to make one which would be generally acceptable."

THE members of the Evangelical Alliance visited the capital on the 14th inst., and called on the President in a body. Rev. Dr. Tiffany, in behalf of the delegates, addressed the President, who, in response, spoke as follows: "It affords me very great pleasure to welcome this Alliance to the capital of this great nation, which I feel is the freest of all nations to work out the problem of your mission." The members of the Alliance were then severally introduced. After the hand-shaking was gone through with, the Rev. Nashrayan Sheshadra, of Bombay, delivered a short speech, in which he expressed himself as very much struck with what he had seen in this country, and especially with the reception the President had given him. The interview was brought to a rather abrupt termination on account of the President being compelled to leave for Toledo, to attend the soldier's reunion....The Secretary of the Treasury has announced his determination to take no further action at present toward the replacement of worn, mutilated and successfully counterfeited circulating notes of national banks.

MARTIN F. CONWAY, who attempted to assassinate Pomeroy, has been bailed. Conway, it is said, has been for some time a slave to opium, and it is generaly corceded that he was temporarily insane when he assaulted Pomeroy....A very singular phenomenon was presented by the result of the election in Washington, last week. One of the questions involved in the contest was that of mixed schools. In a city where the majority of the voters were colored, one would expect that the decision of this issue would be in the affirmative; but the contrary was the fact. It is even true that where a colored man who was in favor of mixed schools ran against a white man, the latter was elected in almost every instance.

It is: "It is my emphatic belief that every department of the company's service is managed with clean hands, with rigid economy, and with good judgment."

A TORONTO dispatch states that intelligence has been received from England that Sir John A. Macdonald is to be deprived of the rank of Privy Counselor to the Queen, and that he will be defeated on the meeting of Parliament.

The Evangelical Alliance, after a brief session of one week, at New York, has dissolved. Notwithstanding the outward harmonious aspect of its deliberations, it is apparent there were troubles under the surface which may yet tend to much acrimonious ecclesiastical wrangling on technical points. One of these troubles has already developed itself in the form of a protest, signed by seventy of the foreign delegates, against the attitude of the Alliance toward the Roman Catholics; and Bishop Tozer, recently a missionary Bishop in Central Africa, addresses a letter to Bishop Potter, of New York, inveighing against the Dean of Canterbury for partaking of communion with Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and others outside of the pale of the Church of England; the Bishop's principal distress being, the example of the Dean will induce many people in England of the Established Church to stray away into the fold of the Roman Catholic Church.....The Mexican Congress has made a number of radical reforms, which have been formally decreed, and among them the separation of Church and State; freedom of religious opinion; recognition of marriage as a civil contract; dispossession of the property of religious institutions, and the suppression of monastic orders. In view of ecclesiastical opposition to some of these measures, the Jesuits have been ordered to leave the country.

THE St. Louis Times professes to have got wind of a grand scheme for the conquest of the Northern States of Mexico. The whole story sounds apocryphal. A brief outline of the project is thus given: The Texas Pacific railroad is being constructed from both termini, and work will finish about the middle of the route somewhere near El Paso, Texas. Some 15,000 laborers will be engaged on the route, and when the work is completed they will be discharged in a country in which it will be impossible for them to obtain employment; and as such men are generally improvident and without money, they will be glad to accept anything that may offer. These men are to be organized into a grand filibustering army, under the direction of a society which is already formed, furnished with arms, and they will then march over the Northern States of Mexico and raise the flag of independence in each of them. The next step will be annexation by vote of the people, as was the case with Texas. ....Some time ago a Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry was organized in Boston, composed of grain and commission merchants. Many Patrons seriously protested against the admission of grain speculators into the order, maintaining that such a course would be disastrous to its interests, and demanded that the Boston Grange should cease to exist. In deference to these complaints, Grand Master Dudley W. Adams some time ago revoked its charter, and directed the surrender of its books and papers; but the Boston Grange refuses to obey the Grand Master's mandate, and will appeal the question to the National Grange.

THANKSGIVING.

Annual Proclamation of the President.

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

The approaching close of another year brings with it the occasion for renewed thanksgiving and acknowledgment to the Almighty Ruler of the Universe for the unnumbered mercies which he has bestowed upon us. Abundant harvests have been among the rewards of industry. With local exceptions, health has been among the blessings enjoyed. Tranquillity at home, and peace with other nations, have prevailed. Frugal industry is regaining its merited recognition, and its merited rewards. Gradually, but, under the providence of God, surely as we trust, the nation is recovering from the lingering results of a dreadful civil strife. For these and all the other mercies vouchsafed, it becomes us as a people to return heartfelt and grateful acknowledgements, and with our thanksgiving we may unite prayers for the cessation of local and temporary suffering. I therefore recommend that on Thursday, the 27th day of November next, the people meet in their respective places of worship to make their acknowledgments to Almighty God for His bounties and His protection, and to offer to Him prayers for their continuance.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 14th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1873, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

(Signed) ULYSSES S. GRANT.

A MATTER of corse—A coroner's inquest.

Mr. Forceps's Experiment.

We recently published an item to the effect that amusement for the home circle could be obtained by setting up a stick in a basin of water, and placing a spider on the top of the stick. The amusement consists in watching the spider throw a strand of web to the edge of the basin, and by it crawl to shore. It is a pretty experiment, we have been told. Mr. Forceps tried it Sunday afternoon. He made the arrangements complete. Then he caught a spider, a big fellow, and put it on top of the stick. He did it for the amusement of the whole family, but they having neglected to answer his calls, the thing was fixed without their presence, and he was in quite a flurry of excitement getting them together. His wife was up stairs trying to think where she had put the pillow cases for the front bed-room, and was not exactly in the humor of spider watching, but he tried a little vigorous language, and she came down. Then he hunted up his daughter Julia, who was at the gate with a young gentleman. He brought them in, looking anxiously at the spider who had not yet moved, thank heaven, and commenting in a surprised manner at the singular lack of appreciation on the part of his family. Then he plunged into a back room where his son, Adolphus, was making a sloop, and called him. But Adolphus didn't care to see a spider, and the impatient and sorely-tried parent was obliged to take him by the collar and jerk him out into the dining-room, and cuff him on the head two or three times, before the young man felt a yearning to look into the intricacies of the experiment. Having got them all together, Mr. Forceps got down on his knees, feeling the full weight of his responsibility in the matter, and eyed the spider with painful intensity. A half hour passed, still the spider did not move. Mrs. Forceps was suddenly struck with an idea. "There!" she exclaimed—Forceps looked up eagerly—"I'll bet those pillow-cases are in the chest in the back bedroom," she added. Mr. Forceps grated his teeth, and turned again to the spider. "I'll bet he's asleep," volunteered Adolphus. Mr. Forceps intimated that he would split any one open who took the wager, and silence was again restored. Still the spider did not stir. It is likely it had not seen the item in the papers, and didn't know what was expected of it. Mr. Forceps grew more nervous and impatient every moment. The longer the spider delayed moving, the harder Mr. Forceps stared at it. He was thus engaged when Mrs. Forceps emitted a sharp cry, and he looked up just in time to save himself. Adolphus, with the knife he had used on the sloop in his hand, had become so oppressed by the magnitude of the experiment, that he had actually fallen asleep, and losing his balance he struck against his mother, and bounced thence over into the midst of the group, the knife describing a circle in its descent, and in a direct line with the back of Mr. Forceps' skull. He looked up just in time to save himself, but not the experiment. The unhappy youth went down in the basin with a crash, knocking the contents over the family and driving the point of the stick into his father's knee. The shock awoke him, and with that instinct peculiar to boys, he apprehended a disturbance, and promptly darted out of the house. The old gentleman went directly to his room, took off his clothes, and went to bed, leaving Mrs. Forceps to clean up the muss and explain to to those who cared to know, that the house would look like a hog pen in spite of all her efforts.—Danbury News.

In the Tower of London.

I made my first visit to the Tower of London a few days since. It's a fearful risk I've run, that of remaining in London over a year and never seeing the inside of the Tower. The staircases are very narrow. In ascending them I had my eye nearly poked out by an old American gentleman who would persist in carrying his umbrella on his shoulder. The warders who show the place are arrayed somewhat in the costume of Metamora. They take visitors about in squads of twelve to a warder. Admittance, one shilling. From 800 to 1,000 visit the Tower daily. At this rate the establishment ought nearly to run a Prince. Of course you have read all about the knights in armor, the guns and swords, the instruments of torture, the headsman's block and ax, the spears and shields, and dungeons and names carved on the wall, which are shown and explained to you. I saw the crown jewels. Two rusty, faded, sour-looking women have them in charge. One delivers the explanatory lecture, and the other takes the tickets and watches to see that no one runs off with the spoons. There are spoons in the lot, gold salt-spoons. The crown and other royal gimcracks are kept under a great glass case. It is merely a royal jewel show. When the faded lady, who looks as if she had been dying by inches of covetousness and envy because of her inability to own any of the vast wealth around which her daily life is passed, and which, Tantalus-like, daily mocks her eyes; when she says, as she always does, at the close of her oration, "And that is the crown of Queen Victoria, and is worth £1,000,000 sterling," everybody is expected to go down on their knees. Remember this when you visit the Tower.

"No gratuities allowed to attendants," is conspicuously posted up in the waiting-room. This means simply that they do expect a fee. Sixty-five thousand stand of arms are stored in the Tower—Snyder rifles, which in a few years more will probably be changed into some more improved arm. They arrange on the armory walls beautiful designs in swords, ramrods, muskets, bayonets and pistols. For instance, there is a beautiful flower, all of triggers. The trigger-flower, Order Bellingerentia; two stamins, six pistils. There is also a blossom of bayonets, Order Langingenterio Apex Musketivus Up Guards and at Them.

The ax which cut off Lord Lovat's head, in 1645, looked to me unsafe to rely upon for chopping a pumpkin in halves at a single blow. There are some interesting dents on the head-block whereon three English Lords saw the last of their own criminal terminations. I would like to have stolen the dents, but could not so without bringing away the block.

Henry VIII.'s armor is enormous. I think that Michael Reese and Mr. Friedlander might both get inside of it, and there still be room left for some "live [illegible] reporters to smuggle away in the helmet, and watch whatever they might be up to.

They showed us one queer weapon of warfare—a sort of rake, eighteen feet long, with curved claws, with which footmen were in the habit of darting out at horsemen, and "raking them in," or "raking them down."—Prentice Mulford's Letter to the San Francisco Bulletin.

Railroad Panics in Great Britain.

The fact is now very generally recognized that an exaggerated expansion of the railway system of the United States, the construction of thousands of miles of track leading from a fixed point to nowhere in particular, and speculation in the worthless bonds hypothecated for such construction, precipitated the recent panic upon this country. The additional fact is also very generally admitted that after this severe lesson, money will flow into some safer channel and seek investment in a sounder security. Railway panics, however, are not peculiar to this country. There is every prospect that Great Britain will shortly be plunged into financial confusion in the same general manner, but from different causes. As with us, railway mismanagement is the danger which threatens that country, and it has at last reached such a point that a crisis is imminent. The particular phases of mismanagement, however, which are imperiling railroad and financial interests there, differ essentially from ours. In the first place, the traveling public is in a panic over the extraordinary increase of railway accidents. There has been scarcely a day for the past two months without a serious accident on some of the English roads, and, as the English public is much more sensitive upon the subject of railroad accidents than the American, it is bringing a pressure to bear upon the railroads which will ultimately compel them to use some degree of carefulness in running trains and to reduce the rate of speed. The American traveler takes his chances of being crushed or boiled with a cheerful degree of fanaticism, but the British traveler has a strong prejudice against any such operation.

But the panic is not confined to the traveling public. The managers, stockholders and bondholders are also in a panic. The great increase in the price of coal, iron and steel, and the rise in wages of every description of labor, have forced their expenses up to a ruinous point. The companies have sought to offset it in various ways. First they tried the experiment of raising fares, only to find that when they passed a certain point it had the immediate effect to decrease the amount of traffic, and, even at the safe maximum, that the increase in receipts left only a very small margin over the increase in expenditures. Second, the companies inaugurated a destructive system of economy and retrenchment, by using deficient rolling-stock, neglecting to make repairs in the roadways which were needed, and charging everything possible to capital. But this policy has brought about the crop of accidents which, as we have already said, has plunged the whole traveling public into a panic. By such shifts as these, however, they have contrived to keep up dividends.

In Scotland a crisis is also imminent in the management of roads, growing out of the freight questions, which in turn are connected with the prevailing coal and iron troubles. The present freight rates were made to the iron and coal masters twenty-five years ago, and have never been amended since, although they were made at a time when the price of iron and coal was one-third less, when wages were down to a low point, and the cost of railroad material was much cheaper than it is now.—Chicago Tribune.

Hitting the Mark.

The Edinburgh Daily Review records an amusing conversation which took place in the galleries of the Free Church assembly lately: Young Lady—"There's old Dr. A—— going to speak. Isn't he a bore?" Old Lady (laughing)—"Well, I suppose he is; but do you know I rather like him?" Young Lady—"I can't bear him." Old Lady (after some time) "Who is that nice old gentleman speaking? Young Lady—"Ah! that's Mr. B——, of C——." Old Lady (hesitatingly)—"Don't you think he is—rather prosy?" Young lady (indignantly)—"No, indeed, I do not. Allow me to inform you that that is my father." Old Lady—"Oh! indeed. Then I am glad I hit the mark so gently, because 'old Dr. A——' is my husband. So I suppose we have both got a lesson my dear, don't you think?"

How Do We Know?

Men are an egotistical race! How do we know but the birds and the insects are worth as much as we are? Perhaps they, in their turn, are egotists. Perhaps the bluebirds think the universe was made for them, and men are a part of the arrangements for their comfort. No doubt our bluebirds here believe that we, their human neighbors, have our chief end in furnishing them a cigar-box to nest. The butterflies speculate as to why God made men; men are of no use to butterflies! Mosquitoes see things plainer; clearly, men were created as food for mosquitoes. But then comes to them the puzzle: why are men sometimes allowed to kill mosquitoes? A wise lot we all are—bluebirds and mosquitoes and men!

A Colt Story.

A few days since J. W. Kenne, of Pembroke, N. Y., took his mare from the barn, leaving a two months' colt behind. On his return, some two hours after, he found the colt on the roof of the barn. Being unable to follow the mare, it had sought some means of escape. In the first place it had gone up a flight of stairs—fifteen steps—then over the hay-mow, and out of a window in the gable end of the barn, upon a half roof. From this elevation it worked its way to the roof of the main barn, which is very steep; then it returned to the half roof, whence, on the return of the mother, it jumped to the ground, a distance of fourteen feet, a feat which it accomplished without being the least injured.

Hay-Fever—Its Sympptoms Described.

THE FIRST SYMPTOMS.

A person who has had the hay-fever can recall the first symptoms, dating back several years. The first year it is quite mild. About the 25th of August you will find a spot between your shoulder-blades. It might have been there before, but you never knew of it before, and now you have only an itching knowledge of its length and breadth. If you stand out in the sun for a while, you will seek the nearest lamp-post, and, like a hog, scratch—providing you can get the post to fit the spot. You go home to study what is the matter with you. You are in a perspiration, either from wonder or anxiety about it, when a draft or air strikes you, and then you have no time for wonder or anxiety, and scarcely time to sneeze; that is, the time elapsing between successive sneezes is so short that you can hardly distinguish one from the other. A party standing by you would call a dozen sneezes one.

You try to study the cause of the panic; but the run on your nose is so great that it keeps you busy paying out.

SECOND YEAR.

About the middle of some fine summer-day, a violent sneeze will announce to you the approach of the 15th of August. You are reminded that you had something just like it before. You will sneeze occasionally until 2 or 3 o'clock, when you rejoice that you are over it; but the next day it comes on again more violently. Then you measure that spot in your back with the door-post. The next day you are sneezing again in such rapid succession that you have not time to fill your lungs. Your teeth come together with a crash. But you don't mind that, unless your tongue should be in the way; then you know all about it. As the month advances, your Hay-Fever increases, and at times you feel like getting mad; and you would, if you had time. About the 1st of September another trouble presents itself. Your eyes know a weakness that they never knew before. Whether for the purpose of relieving the pent-up passions or from sympathy, they send forth a flood of tears. No "dry tears;" no, nor cool tears; but burning tears. You feel mad enough and bad enough to cry; but these tears are constantly pouring down your troubled cheeks. Another perplexity now comes on; your handkerchiefs have given out. Your partner informs you that "Nineteen new ones and a swad of old ones are in the wash." Between sneezing and crying you write an order on your merchant for two dozen handkerchiefs; also, a note to your washerwoman to hurry up the washing. As soon as you have got this off your hands, another difficulty comes to your "relief;" a terrible itching about the eyelids. You rub them with all your might. It produces an excruciating, yet pleasing, sensation, if such can be. You rub and rub, and, although you have a desire to desist, you still rub on until your eyelids will no longer wink.

In the morning your eyes are glued together; no paste, no cement, not Spaulding's glue—no, nor Jemima's plaster—could stick then together faster. And thus you spend the next ten days. You pray for night, and bless God for morning. You scratch your back, blow your nose, rub your eyes, and sneeze. You scratch your back, rub your eyes, blow your nose, and sneeze. Then you will sneeze; then grasp your hadnkerchief, gasp for breath, grasp your nose, and sneeze. Then you will rub your eyes and sneeze, rub your back and sneeze, rub your nose and sneeze; then scratch your back, rub your eyes, blow your nose, and sneeze simultaneously. You become enraged, and, with a pocket-handkerchief in each hand and one in each pocket, start for the druggist. You ask for the latest and most reliable hay-fever remedies. The druggist looks smiling, and puts up a market-basket full of stuff; and, after buying another dozen handkerchiefs, you start home. You smoke stramonium, cubebs, and dandelion; inhale carbolic acid, iodine, ammonia, camphor; douche your nostrils with quinine, iron, &c., &c., &c., &c., &c,; and get to no relief. You still rub your back, blow your nose, wipe your eyes, and sneeze. You hear of a neighbor who had it. You take a dozen handkerchiefs, and start to see him. You tell him of all the remedies you have tried; and he does the same. You sit, and talk and sneeze; and so you go until Oct. 1, when you gradually cease your labors, and in a few days you would not know that you ever had the hay-fever, were it not for the washerwoman's and the druggist's bills.

THE EXTENT OF THE DISEASE.

It is not difficult for a person who has had the disease to recognize the first symptoms in others, and it would be safe to say that one in every twenty persons whom I met in the latter part of August was troubled with "a cold in the head," which, in reality, was the first symptom of hay-fever, as any one who "has been there" can readily discover.

The Mink.

The mink is an expert fisherman, and wo to the eel that is unfortunate enough to attract his sharp eyes. When a brook is low, this little animal can often be tracked for a long distance by the dead eels, pickerel, shiners, and sometimes trout, left lying along the bank; the mink only sucking the blood, and leaving the fish unmutilated. One autumn some small shiners, meant for bait in pickerel fishing through the ice, were kept in an old tub set in a spring near a brook; and in one night all these fish were killed by a mink, who left them laid in a row on the ground. They looked precisely as if some person had arranged them. But through the back of each fish, near the head, were four tooth-marks, that told who had been there—this being frequently the only mark the mink makes on the victim.

CHICAGO TO CHARLESTON.

The Proposed New Railway to the South Atlantic Coast—Formal Meeting at Chicago, of Gentlemen who Mean What They Say—Over $4,000,000 Pledged.

A convention of gentlemen representing the States interested in the construction of the proposed air-line railway from Chicago to the South Atlantic coast assembled in the city of Chicago on the 9th inst. Delegates to the number of 89 handed in their names, representing the following states; Indiana, 51 delegates; North Carolina, 5 delegates; Kentucky, 6 delegates; Georgia, 3 delegates; Tennessee, 2 delegates; South Carolina, 12 delegates, and Illinois, 12 delegates. Hon. W. S. Hayman, of Indiana, was elected temporary Chairman.

Mr. Hayman, on taking the chair, spoke of the importance of the proposed enterprise. The construction of the road would confer immeasurable advantages upon the district through which it passed. Commercial interchange between the North and South would be promoted by it. Profits would come direct from the products instead of being diminished by middlemen; and the products of the North and South would be better distributed in the two sections of the country than they were now. The advantages to Chicago were immeasurable. They could not overrate them. The project, he assured them, was not a mere visionary scheme, but was one of immediate necessity. If the people only contributed what had been promised, the construction of the road was a matter of certainty. The road was backed by the great Philadelphia banking-house of Drexel & Co. The idea that the road had been permanently located was a mistake. This had of necessity to be left to the future.

A permanent organization was effected by the election of ex-Gov. Beriah Magoffin as President, one Vice-President from each State represented, and Nicholas J. Vail as Secretary.

The President having called for reports from the various States represented, Gen. Thomas L. Clingman, of North Carolina, proceeded to give some statistics on the route of the proposed road through South Carolina. He gave a very encouraging report of the feasibility of the projected route, and spoke approvingly of the connections which would be made with other roads there. He showed how breadstuffs were taken from the West to New York, thence South, and back to the planting country, 250 miles up the country, which could be supplied direct from this city. Spartanburg was the place he referred to; this place would give a big bonus, and so would other places in that neighborhood.

Hon. W. L. Love, of North Carolina, made a speech showing the necessity that existed for the construction of the road through the Blue Ridge district, and how the Chicago project had been received with open hearts by the residents in that part of North Carolina.

Prof. Smith, from the same State, spoke in reference to the topography of the State of North Carolina, through which the road would pass, and claimed that it was one of great mineral wealth. He had never seen grouped together on the same surface so magnificent a collection of minerals as were found there.

Mr. W. B. Gulick, of South Carolina, followed. In the course of a short speech he advocated the Spartansburg route, on the ground that there were scraps of road already built which would cost much less to purchase than to build a new line. He spoke strongly about the products of his State, which were, he said, of a diversified and valuable character.

Mr. John H. Evins, of South Carolina, also spoke. A convention of 380 civil engineers, held in 1836, had decided that the only practicable line from the South to the Northwest was by way of the French Broad River and Cumberland Gap. Nature had done for that route what generally fell to the lot of men to do. The coal and magnetic iron ore that would be taken from the gap would pay for the construction of the road. Asbestos, mica and corundum were found along this road in unlimited quantity. The road would pass through the finest fertile country in the world.

Gen. J. W. Harrison, of South Carolina, said he had advocated in the State Senate the Blue Ridge route as the southern portion of an air-line route from the South to the Northwest. Necessity might call for the construction of both roads. He did not advocate the road as a speculative investment, but looked upon it as a people's line. The interchange of the products of the two districts by this air-line would be vastly for the benefit of all. The four Southern States had paid out $50,000,000 for corn in one year, of which only $17,000,000 had gone to the producer in the Northwest. The balance went to the middle men. The Northwest paid enormously for the products of the South, and the South paid enormously for the staple products of the Northwest. He was even willing to divide the balance between what ought to be paid and was paid with the transportation company. If the present company meant business, he was with them. The district in which he lived would do its duty, and not call upon them for a cent to help pay for the section of the road through their own State.

Capt. J. N. Simms, of Clinton county, Ind., referred to the advantages which would accrue to his own section of country, and also to the whole country through which it ran. As the representative of Clinton county, he was authorized to offer a subsidy of $4,000 per mile in aid of the project.

Mr. R. L. Davis, of Ohio county, Ind., took up the thread of the discourse, and told the convention that the grade of the Indianapolis and Cincinnati Railroad would be changed shortly. He considered this road as forming a section of the great through route. The length of the road in Ohio county would be from ten to sixteen miles, and on every mile of that road he believed that Ohio county would give a bonus toward construction of $10,000 per mile.

Mr. J. S. Murray, of South Carolina, stated that Anderson county, in his State, had promised a subscription of $350,000 to the building of the road, and Abbeyville county would give a like amount. New York owed its present position to the perseverance of the West and South; and if this great trade was taken away from New York and turned westward, Chicago would become the great center of the commercial interests of this country. He favored the adoption of the Reyburn Gap route.

Mr. B. F. Whitner, of South Carolina, followed with an able speech in favor of the Blue Ridge route. He called particular attention to the fact that the State had expended $3,000,000 on this route. He believed that this piece of road could be bought for $400,000. He estimated that $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 would be required to finish the Blue Ridge route. The county of Anderson proposed to give $300,000 to the road.

Secretary Vail said over $4,000,000 had already been pledged to the road.

Messrs. Erwin, of Georgia, and Wilson, of Tennessee, favored the Blue Ridge route; showed the exchange of commodities which would be brought into effect by the construction of this route, and detailed the connections which would be made.

Col. Thomas L. Jones and Col. Stoddard Johnston, of Kentucky, also delivered speeches favorable to the building of the road.

The convention then adjourned.

SECOND DAY.

The convention met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Gen. Clingman, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, reported as follows:

Resolved, That the immense and increasing productions of the Northwestern States demand additional outlets, to enable them to reach the markets of the world.

Resolved, Therefore, that as a most important measure to effect such an object there should as soon as practicable be completed, from the city of Chicago, a grand trunk railroad to one or more of the South Atlantic ports, with such branches and connections as are necessary to supply the planting States, and also through such sea-ports to reach foreign countries, with the smallest possible cost in transportation.

Resolved, That the delegations from the several States represented in this convention, pledge themselves to use their best efforts to organize and secure such charters and such connections with existing railroads as are necessary to facilitate the success of this great enterprise.

Resolved, That the several delegations will also use their best efforts to procure along the lines of the road such subscriptions and other aid as may assist the enterprise and satisfy capitalists abroad that those immediately interested have full faith in the success of the work and of its financial profits on investment.

The report was unanimously adopted.

On motion of Mr. Dudley, the following gentlemen were appointed a committee to secure a charter from the State of Kentucky: James S. Robinson, Sr., James G. Dudley, ex-Gov. Magoffin, John G. Eve and William Preston.

Mr. Rae was called upon, as a representative of Chicago, to make some remarks. He stated, among other things, that Dr. Wayman, of Augusta, Ga., had already raised $2,000,000 toward building the road, and Dr. Wayman had reported that he could within a brief time raise another million in the State of Indiana, which would make $3,000,000 with which to carry the road to the Ohio river. Not a cent of the million to be raised in Indiana would be expended outside of that State, and Chicago would not derive the benefit of a cent from it. The speaker said that if the Southerners interested in the enterprise would fight with the bravery to accomplish this object as they once fought for what they considered liberty, the road would be built and the magnificent project carried out, and Chicago and the South would be connected and linked in commerce and friendship within comparatively a few days. The speaker was instructed to say that if the representations already made were kept Drexel & Co., of Philadelphia, would act as financial agents of the road, and insure its being built, and on that condition only.

Gen. Clingman made some remarks, during which he stated that the construction of the road in North Carolina would cost $6,000 per mile. His county—Buncombe county—would and could pay for the road within her limits.

Gen. Harrison remarked that he was authorized by a friend to say that that friend would build thirty miles of the road, free of all cost, from Spartanburg to Butt Mountain Gap, and that, besides, Spartan county would subscribe willingly to a tax-levy of $125,000 to aid in the great undertaking.

Considerable discussion was had as to the respective advantages of the two competing Carolina routes.

Mr. Jones, of Kentucky, deprecated the idea that the present convention had to decide on the question of rival routes. All they had to do was to see to the furtherance of this project of connecting Chicago with the sea. Before deciding on any southern terminus surveyors should be sent out to examine into the advantages of the different terminal points. Let them fix this question, and then ask the different counties to give aid.

Ex-Gov. Magoffin, of Kentucky, said whatever the cost of the road in Kentucky might be, he would pledge the people of the State for one half the money. The Legislature of Kentucky would be in session in sixty days, and a charter could be put through without difficulty.

Mr. Stewart, of Indiana, offered a resolution indorsing the Chicago and South Atlantic Company, which was adopted.

Resolutions of thanks were passed to the President and Secretary of the convention, and to the city press.

Gen. Harrison thanked the convention in behalf of the South, and Mr. Rae responded on behalf of the Northwest.

An invitation to sup at the Sherman House, tendered by Mr. Cyrus H. McCormick, was accepted.

The convention then adjourned sine die.

Horace Greeley's Fellow-Members of Congress in 1848-9.

Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, was the Speaker—a gentleman of acknowledged ability, rare culture, imposing presence. Few men have occupied the presiding chair of the boisterous House with greater dignity or greater credit. Abraham Lincoln was a member, and specially friendly with Mr. Greeley. "Mr. Lincoln seemed," said Mr. Greeley, "a quiet, good-natured man, did not aspire to leadership, and seldom claimed the floor. I think he made but one set speech during that session, and this speech was by no means a long one. Though a strong partisan, he voted against the bulk of his party once or twice, when that course was dictated by his convictions. He was one of the most moderate, though firm, opponents of slavery extension, and notably of a buoyant, cheerful spirit. It will surprise some to hear that, though I was often in his company thenceforward till his death, and long on terms of friendly intimacy with him, I never heard him tell an anecdote or story."

Mr. Greeley was appointed a member of the Committee on Public Lands, of which the Hon. Jacob Collamer, of Vermont, was Chairman. Mr. Collamer was then as ever, fully entitled to "the grand old name of gentleman."

Joshua R. Giddings, of Ohio, since the then recent death of John Quincy Adams, was the most noted champion of anti-slavery in the House; and anti-slavery had not yet begun to be popular. Mr. Giddings was an agitator, and he long appeared to the public quite generally opposed to the agitation of the subject of slavery, as an exceedingly unamiable and rather disreputable character. On the contrary, he was a person of an unusually large and warm heart, and of refined feelings. He and Mr. Greeley were great friends from the beginning.

Robert C. Schenck, here referred to, since celebrated as a General and diplomatist, was at this time in the prime of his manhood. He had a robust frame, a powerful voice, and magnificent pluck. He was an orator of great powers of persuasion, and one of the keenest, most brilliant disputants of the House in a running debate.

If Mr. Schenck were an admirable specimen of Western vigor, dash, and parliamentary ability, taking captive Mr. Greeley's hearty admiration, he found in the captivating gentlemanliness and ripe scholarship of Horace Mann, of Massachusetts, qualities which won his devoted friendship no less effectively. As Congress was then constituted, and as it still is constituted—the more's the pity,—Horace Mann was there out of his element.

Among the members of the opposition, Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, afterward President of the United States, became as well known as any other to Mr. Greeley. Mr. Johnson, at this time had not won wide distinction; but he was recognized in the House as a man of strong mind and strong will, and none who knew him then, or ever afterward, doubted his manly and unpurchasable personal integrity.

George Ashmun, of Massachusetts, was then among New England's most eminent representatives. He presided over the convention which, twelve years afterward, nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. A more admirable, efficient presiding officer but few deliberative bodies have ever been fortunate enough to select. Here, too, as we have already seen, was John Wentworth, of Illinois, then of the Democratic party. Gigantic in form, he was universally called "Long John," and retains the designation to this day. A skillful debater, an able parliamentarian, he was better liked by Mr. Greeley than any other one of the opposition. Here, also, Mr. Greeley daily met Howell Cobb, of Georgia, Jacob Thompson, of Mississippi, Alexander H. Stevens, of Georgia, Robert Toombs, of the same State—noted Southeners then, more noted afterward as leaders in the war of the rebellion against the Union. Richard W. Thompson, of Indiana, and George W. Jones, of Tennessee, impressed Mr. Greeley as among the most effective speakers of the House. He thought John S. Pendleton, of Virginia, a splendid specimen of the Southern gentleman, but no finer than Abraham W. Venable, of North Carolina. Mr. R. Barnwell Rhett was a member of the House, but already too much of a "fire-eater" to be received with marked attention by the editor of the Tribune. He greatly liked Green Adams, of Kentucky, John M. Botts, of Virginia, both of whom became somewhat celebrated in politics, the latter having already, indeed, a national reputation. James Dixon and Truman Smith were in the House from Connecticut, both afterward many years in the Senate. Of his own colleagues, Washington Hunt and Frederick A. Tallmadge, were the most distinguished.—Ingersoll's Life and Times of Horace Greeley.

A Layman's Grace.

A young married friend tells a good joke on himself perpetrated by a little 3-year-old "pride of the family." She is the only pledge of love that has twined itself around the hearts and affections of himself and wife. A few evenings since a minister visited the family and remained until after tea. At the table the reverend visitor asked the blessing, and the little one opened her eyes to the fullest capacity in startled wonderment. She could not understand what had been done, and it was with great persuasion that her mother could keep her quiet during the time they were at the table. When they left it she walked up to the minister, for whom she had formed a great friendship, and said: "What did you say at the table before we commenced eating?" "My little darling, I thanked God for His goodness in giving us to eat, so that we might grow and be strong." "Papa don't say that." "What does your papa say?" "Papa says 'Goddlemighty what a supper.'"—Lowell Courier.

Moths.

These busy insects are one of the scourges of housekeepers, who frequently know not how to get rid of them. Camphor and tobacco are both exterminators, but will not stop the ravages of moths in carpets after they commence eating. Then they pay no heed to the presence of camphor, cedar or tobacco. A good way to conquer them is to take a coarse crash towel and wring it out of clean water. Spread it smoothly on the carpet, then iron it dry with a good hot iron, repeating the operation on suspected places, and those least used. It does not injure the color or pile of the carpet in the least, as it is not necessary to press hard, heat and steam being the agents, and they do the work effectually on worms and eggs. Then the camphor will doubtless prevent future depredations of the miller.

Concerning the Weed.

The use of tobacco has so much extended itself in the present generation that we are obliged to make a decision for ourselves on the ancient controversy between its friends and its enemies. We cannot form a reasonable opinion about tobacco without bearing in mind that it produces, according to circumstances, one or two entirely distinct and opposite classes of effects. In certain states of the body it acts as a stimulant, in other states as a narcotic. People who have a dislike to smoking affirm that it stupefies, but this assertion, at least so far as the temporary consequences are concerned, are not confirmed by experience. Most of the really brilliant conversations that I have listened to have been accompanied by clouds of tobacco smoke, and a great deal of the best literary composition that is produced by contemporary authors is wrought out by men who are habitually smoking while they work. My own experience is that very moderate smoking acts as a pleasant stimulus upon the brain, while it produces a temporary lassitude of the muscular system, not perceptible in times of rest, but an appreciable hindrance in times of muscular exertion. It is better, therefore, for men who feel these effects from tobacco to avoid it when they are in exercise, and to use it only when the body rests and the mind labors. Pray remember, however, that this is the experience of an exceedingly moderate smoker, who has not yet got himself into the general condition of body which is brought on by a general indulgence in tobacco. On the other hand, it is evident that men engaged in physical labor find a muscular stimulus in occasional smoking, and not a temporary lassitude. It is probable that the effect varies with individual cases, and is never precisely what our own experience would lead us to imagine. For excessive smokers, it appears to be little more than the tranquilizing of a sort of uneasiness, the continual satisfaction of a continual craving. I have never been able to ascertain that moderate smoking diminished intellectual force; but I have observed in excessive smokers a weakening of the will, and a preference of talking about work to the effort of actual labor. The opinions of medical men on this subject are so much at variance that their science only adds to our uncertainty. One doctor tells me that the most moderate smoking is unquestionably injurious, while others affirm that it is innocent. Speaking simply from self-observation, I find that in my own case tea and coffee are far more dangerous than tobacco.—Philip Gilbert Hamerton.

The Arctic Explorers.

A Washington dispatch says, in relation to the Polaris investigation by the Secretary of the Navy: The examination of Capt. Buddington lasted four hours, and related particularly to his relations with Capt. Hall, he declaring that there was not the slightest foundation for any report of difference between him and Hall. His judgement about proceeding beyond the point reached—82 deg. 16 min.—was based entirely upon his experience as a navigator in Arctic waters, and not from fear of danger or aversion to prosecute the journey. While there might have been an appearance of open channel, the weather in northern latitudes was so uncertain that no man dare risk a vessel in a higher latitude with an Arctic winter approaching.

In reply to an inquiry as to his personal conduct, Buddington said he had been accustomed to taking a dram occasionally, but denied ever having drank enough to incapacitate him for duty, or make him unfit for the position of a navigator in dangerous waters.

The separation from Tyson and his party was more seriously regretted by those on the Polaris than it could possibly have been by the ice-floe party. So certain was he that the vessel would have been abandoned, that he made preparations to cast over everything of value and importance to the crew, when the wind suddenly changed, and shifted the Polaris into almost an opposite position, snapping her hawsers and increasing the danger to the vessel.

A Death Scene.

The death scene of the Duke of Brunswick is said to have been a strange one. On the bed lay the Duke, stentoriously breathing, his blonde curly wig pushed back, the plaster falling out from his wrinkles, the white and red paint, with which he had imitated youth, run together, and making a hideous amalgam. The poor, pottering old chamberlains, who had served him until servitude had become a habit and almost a happiness, blubbered and fussed about. Viola, who seems—so strange is the nature of woman—really to have cared for him, sat apart and wept; the doctors solemnly whispered to each other and occasionally felt his pulse, and English Smith, a gentleman of eminent respectability and essentially British appearance, with long mutton-chop wiskers, kept one eye on his client and the other on the money chests.

The Sword and the Pen.

The sword of the warrior was taken down for the purpose of being polished. It had not been long out of use. The rust was rubbed off, but there were spots that would not go—they were of blood. The sword was placed on the table, near the pen of the warrior's secretary. The pen took advantage of the first breath of air to move a little further off. "Thou art right," said the sword, "I am a bad neighbor." "I fear thee not," replied the pen, "I am more powerful than thou art; but I love not thy society." "I exterminate," said the sword. "And I perpetuate," answered the pen; "where are thy victories if I recorded them not? Even where thou thyself shalt one day be—in the lake of oblivion."

Saved by a Nut.

Some years ago there was an old German Count, who was an honest and respectable man, and who was saved from death by the kindness of God in a very marked manner. You know we read in the Bible how Daniel, who was such a good man, had a great many enemies, who hated him just because he was so good. This has often been the case since Daniel's time. And this was the case with the good German Count of whom I am now speaking. There were a number of people in the place where he lived who hated him for his religion; and they carried their hatred so far that they resolved to kill him. And, in order to do this without being found out, they hired a wicked man to go into his castle one night and kill him while asleep in his bed.

The arrangements were all made, and the night was fixed on which this dreadful deed was to be done. The good Count had no idea of the danger that was hanging over him. It so happened that on the evening before, or the very night on which his enemies had agreed to murder him, he had a company of young people at his castle. He was very fond of children, but having none of his own he had invited his nephews and nieces to spend the evening with him. They had a merry time together, and the evening passed off very pleasantly. The Count told them interesting stories, and got up amusing games, and had a good supply of apples, and pears, and grapes, and nuts; and they enjoyed themselves very much. After they had gone the Count went quietly to bed as usual.

About midnight the murderer, who had managed to creep into the castle during the day, and hidden himself away, came silently into the chamber of the Count. The old man was fast asleep, and a night-lamp was burning on the table. The murderer was armed with a long, sharp dagger, which glittered in his right hand as he gradually drew near the bed with a soft and careful step. But suddenly, when he was only a few feet from the bed, a loud, crackling noise was heard sounding through the still chamber. It awoke the Count. He sat up in bed. He saw the murderer approaching him. He seized a pistol which he always kept on his pillow, and pointing to the man he said, "If you move another step I'll shoot you!" Then with the other hand he rang the bell violently. Pretty soon his servants rushed into the room. The murderer was taken prisoner, and the wicked men who had hired him to do that dreadful deed were found out and punished.

But what made the noise which woke the Count? It was a nut lying on the floor. It happened that one of the boys of the company the Count had had there the evening before had dropped a nut on the floor in going through his uncle's room, and that nut had fallen just where the murderer's foot trod upon it and awoke the Count in time to save his life.

How Cod Liver Oil is Made.

Very few of the hard drinkers of cod liver oil know how it is manufactured. But a correspondent of the New York Tribune has examined a distillery for the same at St. John's, Newfoundland, and makes the following statement as to the manufacture of the oleaginous nectar:

During one of our rambles on shore we inspected a cod liver oil distillery, and the mode of manufacture is so simple and interesting that I venture to insert a description of it for the benefit of consumers of the beverage. The livers are first washed with fresh water, and great care is taken to cleanse them of all traces of gall, the gall not only discoloring the oil but giving it a disagreeable, bitter taste.

They are then placed in a vat and heated by steam from a boiler underneath to a temperature of 112 deg. Fahr., which causes the exuded oil to rise to the surface, whence it is skimmed off carefully. It is then filtered three times; first through three bags, placed one within the other, the inner one made of flannel, and the two outer ones of muslin; then through three others similarly placed, one inside the other, but made of stuff resembling Canton flannel; from these last bags it drips into a large tin trough, and is drawn off into puncheons through a faucet, over the mouth of which is placed a screen of the finest muslin, which excludes every trace of sediment and dirt.

It is then ready for the market, and in color and general appearance closely resembles Sauterne wine. Our polite but fishy host pressed me to drink a glass of it, but I declined with all the politeness I could command. He evidently looked upon my refusal to drink as a slight upon his oil, and brought every argument in his power to bear to induce me to alter my decision. At last he was successful, for, after informing me that out of the same glass offered to us, and standing on the same spot, the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Newcastle had drunk of it, I could hardly refuse.

I found the flavor not unpalatable, but it was almost tasteless, with hardly a vestige of the nauseating, rancid odor of the "Pure Cod Liver Oil" sold in New York drug stores. From being extracted at a low temperature, it is said not to retain its purity longer than fifteen months, after which period it is mixed with ingredients to preserve its taste, or rather to prevent its rancid flavor from becoming too apparent.

Swimming in the Salt Lake.

There are no fish in the great Salt Lake. The only living thing beneath its waters is a worm, about a quarter of an inch long. This worm shows up beautifully beneath the lens of a microscope. When a storm arises, the worms are driven ashore by thousands, and devoured by the black gulls. We found a pure stream pouring into the lake. It was filled with little chubs and shiners. The fish became frightened, and were driven down the brook into the briny lake. The instant they touched its waters they came to the surface belly upward, and died without a gasp. The water is remarkably buoyant. Eggs and potatoes float on it like corks. Mr. Rood and myself stripped and went in swimming. I dove into the lake from a long pier, which had been built for the use of a small steamboat that formerly plied upon the waters. The sensation was novel. The water was so salty that my eyes and ears began to smart, but so buoyant that I found no difficulty in floating even when the air was exhausted in my lungs. As I struck out for the beach I felt as light as a feather. In spite of all that I could do, my head would fly out of the water. I found it impossible to stand upon the bottom. The lightness of the water and the surging of the waves forced my feet from under me. A person who could not swim might be easily drowned in five feet of water. His head would go down like a lump of lead, while his feet would fly up like a pair of ducks. The water is as clear as the water of Seneca Lake; so clear that the bottom could be seen at the depth of 20 feet. When we reached the shore and crawled out upon the sand in the light of the sun, our bodies were quickly coated with salt. We were compelled to go to the little stream from which we had driven the chubs and shiners, and wash off in fresh water before we put on our clothes. Our hair was filled with grains of salt which could not be washed out. The Mormons occasionally visit the lakes in droves for the purpose of bathing. Many of them say that their health is improved by leaving the salt upon their bodies and dressing without wiping themselves with napkins.—Utah Letter.

A Lover's Mishap.

A most ingenious device for carrying on a clandestine courtship was brought to light by a grapeskin, Friday evening. The young lady lives with her parents and a brother on Pine street. The young man whom she favored is a trifle obnoxious to the family, and it has been their aim to keep him at a distance. As he had not been to the house for some time, and as she had not been discovered with him on the street, the family flattered themselves that the ill-starred match was broken up. On Friday evening the brother arrayed himself in his best suit and went down street. An hour later, while passing along the dark side of the street, he encountered the objectionable suitor engaged in close conversation with another man. Not wishing to notice him, he lifted his eyes above the level of the other party's head, and was preparing to sail by with an unconscious demeanor, when he unfortunately stepped upon the skin of a grape, and losing his balance, shot violently into the strange gentleman's legs, bringing him down upon himself. The young man's embarrassment was changed to horror and astonishment, when the stranger cried out in the voice of his sister, "O, Tom, how could you?" He sprang to his feet in an instant. The stranger was also getting up, and presented a most remarkable appearance. His face was red as scarlet, and his glossy moustache was turned half way around, one-half laying across his mouth, and the other half hugging the lee side of his nose. "Why, Mary!" exclaimed the astonished brother. But Mary said nothing, and held her head, while her lover made himself scarce. The brother took the sister home, and the mother escorted her to her room, where she was at once undressed and put to bed, with hot bricks to her feet, and a quart of hot boneset down her throat. Her mother, who could not believe ill of her daughter, declared it was a case of bilious fever, and determined to get the best of it. The lover has secured work in New Haven for the winter.—Danbury News.

The Etiquette of Bowing.

The Home Journal says: This is so simple that one would scarcely think it possible that difference of opinion could exist, and yet there are some who think it a breach of politeness if one neglects to bow, although meeting half a dozen times on a promenade, or in driving. Custom has made it necessary to bow only the first time in passing; after that exchange of salutations is very properly not expected. The difference between a courteous and familiar bow should be remembered by gentlemen who wish to make a favorable impression. A lady dislikes to receive from a man with whom she has had but a slight acquaintance, a bow, accompanied by a broad smile, as though he was on the most familiar terms with her. It is far better to err on the other side, and give one of those stiff, ungracious bows which some men indulge in. Those gentlemen who smile with their eyes instead of their mouths, give the most charming bows. As for men who bow charmingly at one time and excessive hauteur at another, according as they feel in good and bad humor, they need never be surprised if the person thus treated should cease speaking altogether. A man should always lift his hat to a lady.

The Seven Sleepers.

"It would awaken the seven sleepers" is a common saying; but we venture to say that half who use it do not know its origin. The legend runs that seven noble youths of Ephesus, during the persecution of the Christians by Decius, a Roman Emperor of the third century, fled and took refuge in a cavern, and having been pursued and discovered, were walled in and thus left to perish. They are said to have fallen asleep, and in that state were miraculously preserved for nearly two centuries, when their bodies having been found in the cavern, were taken out and exposed to the veneration of the faithful. Then it was said these holy martyrs were not dead; that they had been hid in the cavern where they had fallen asleep, and that they at last awoke, to the astonishment of the spectators. The spot is still shown at Ephesus where the pretended miracle took place, and the Persians celebrate annually the feast of the Seven Sleepers.

All Hail the Buckeye State.

The Dead Democracy Makes a Lively Corpse.

OLD BILL ALLEN STOPS THAT "NOISE."

The Legislature Democratic.

Old Bill Allen, the wheel horse of Democracy, years ago, when sue things as salary grabbers and credit Mobiliers were unknown, has taken up the good old banner, and won a glorious victory. Let it be proclaimed from the house tops, and in the byways and hedges, that the people have pronounced against stealing and swindling, corruption and extravagance monopolies and panics, and that they desire a change in the administration of affairs. To elect Bill Allen Governor of Ohio, to carry the entire Democratic State ticket, to elect a Domocratic Legislature, assuring the return of Judge Thurman to the U. S. Senate is enough to make democrats rejoice. Shout all over the land. The people are again becoming their own masters. Iowa Legislature is reported Democratic—at least not under control of the Radicals. That is something to be thankful in so black a State as Iowa.

In Iowa and California, the results are scarcely less gratifying and significant. The policy of the administration has received a severe rebuke in each of the three States, and an opportunity offered to send the dominant party to the wall. Whether such a consumation will be attained, depends almost entirely upon the course now pursued by the Democratic party itself. There are thousands of intelligent and patriotic men in the Republican ranks, who desire to co operate with any party, the success of which will inure to the welfase of the Government. They are heartily sick of the abuses which have grown up un the auspices of Republicanism, and they agree with Democrats in condemning the frauds which have been perpetrated by the men who control and guide the present administration, and they are ready and anxious to strike hands with any party which will, upon its elevation to power, inaugurate and carry forward substantial and healthful reform. The platform, upon which the Democracy of Ohio rode into power, and that of Iowa and California succeeded in breaking down the Radical dominion, is satisfactory to these men, and the Democrats have only to carry out the principles as enunciated in those platforms to call to their standard, enough of voters who are opposed to the present Administration, with its discreditable Credit Mobilier, back pay scheme, over burdening monopolies, incompetent officials, downright stealings, land swindling operations and bartering of place to beat the Grant dynasty from this time onward. To accomplish this much desired end, it is absolutely neccessary that the Demecracy stand firm and united, and put forth as candidates for official position, only such men as have ability and integrity enough to command not only the respect of their own party, but also of all men. It is a mistaken notion that any living man in this country has a claim to any official position which cannot be assumed by any other citizen, unless there be a legal ineligibility, and it is all wrong to sacrifice public good for the sake of rewarding some petty service in primary meetings. If a man who presents himself as a candidate for any public office, have not the known ability and integrity to sustain himself in the position he seeks, no party has a right to foist him upon the people to their injury, and no party that persists in doing it, can ever hope to receive the continued support of any considerable part of a people as intelligent, honest and patriotic as the voters of this Republic. And they ought not to be successful. The Republican party, by hugging to its bosom such men as Robeson, Murphy Harper, Casey, Colfax, Schench, Cres well, Patterson, Hipple Mitchell and Jay Cooke, invited the very downfall which has been its fate in Ohio and Iowa, and which will be its final destiny when the time comes for the people of the nation to render a general verdict. Corruption and incompetency may lead a luxurious existence for a little while, but the time will come when they will work their own destruction. The principles of the Democratic party find an echo in the breasts of a majority of the voters in this country to-day. and their full and complete triumph is but a matter of days. It behooves us, then, to stand in solid union, and casting our personal feelings at the foot of the nation's alter, work for the higher plain of political existence. Above all things, keep bad men out of office, for there is no other way leading to success.

So we say. Notwithstanding the assistance the Republicans in Ohio received from the Chicago Times and Indianapolis Sentinel they were beaten Perhaps this may account for it.

A HARD WINTER BEFORE US.

Judging from present indications a great many persons will be out of money and employment the coming winter, not only in this county but throughout the country. There will be much suffering. Sensitive, quiet people will endure many hardships and privations without making their wants known. If our more prosperous citizens will give a helping hand and a cheerful word to the unfortunates they will lighten their burdens and warm their hearts, and realize one of the rarest of pleasures—that of making others comtortable. There is an abundance of everything needful, and no one should be allowed to suffer for the want of the neccessaries of life.

Let the masses keep up their courage. In due time the cormorants who are preying on the people's substance will be replaced by honest men, confidence will be restored, and we shall all enter upon a renewed career of prosperous activity. In the mean time let everybody read the Courier, not only to learn all the news and keep up with the times, but to be made cheerful and kindly, and thus be enabled to work to the best advantage. Without an accurate, well-informed, and good humored news-paper the trials of a hard winter would be doubly hard to bear.

We are gratified to announce, in fact it makes us happy to record, and gives us unspeakable pleasure to state that that which was dead has arisen, more mighty and stronger than ever, filling the land with rejoicings never dreamed of before. The democracy of Ohio standing upon the eternal principles that gave the party its existence have fought the good fight, and have triumphed.

Grant and his parasites of the Grand Army Mutual Admiration Society meet festively, over their meats and wines at Toledo last week, rejoicing that all is lovely, while thousands of the private soldiers are turned out of employ from the shops and factories to face, with their families, the storms of a pitiless world and the severities of winter.

We elected a Democratic Mayor in Cincinnati in April, retained our ascendency in Hamilton County in October, secured a Democratic State Legislature and the reelection of a Dem. United States Senator. Things are getting in good trim to elect a Democratic President in 1876. It is pretty evident that while the Democratic party is not dead the Republican party is dying.—Enquirer.

The effect of the money panic is becoming more and more apparent every day throughout the country. Many of the leading manufactories are reducing their working force one-half or two- thirds, and thousands of laboring men are thrown out of employment. This in consequence of the long, cold winter just at hand will cause much suffering and affliction.

The Republican party breaking up It is defeated in Ohio. It has lost Oregon. The House of Representatives in Iowa, held to be the strongest Republican State in the Union, is Anti Monopoly and Democratic. California elects a Legislature largely anti-Republican and chooses the independent candidates for Supreme Judges. These evidences of profound dissatisfaction with those in power are multiplying in every direction. We look now for a good report from New York in November.

Gold was down to the lowest figure on last Friday, that it has been since the close of the war, being quoted at $1.07½ for greenbacks.

There seems to be no end of Republican defalcations in high positions—men who have stolen from the Government. The last instance is that of United States Senator Conover, of Florida, who has taken from the State Treasury the little sum of $6,000, which he forgot to put back This is admitted by the Republican papers. He employed this stolen money in buying up the negroes and carpet-baggers in the Florida Legislature, who elected him to the Senate.

The last Robbery by a Republican official which has been found out is that of Cashier Charles H. Phelps of the State Treasury of New York. His little accounts don't balance by the trifling sum of $300,000! This money was lost to the State because it adhered to the old, rotten system of depositing its funds in bank instead of keeping them in a sub-treasury of its own. Phelps manipulated the bank's books to suit his figures.

The Associated Press courier who carried the report of the Modoc execution from Fort Klamath to the telegraph station at Jacksonville, Oregon, rode ninety-two miles in six hours and fifty-five minutes over a mountain road of more than usual roughness, employing only three well-selected horses for the journey. The last forty two miles he accomplished in exactly two hours, defeating his principal competitor by thirty minutes, and getting control of the wire which was neccessarily occupied in transmission of the Associated Press report until it was too late to forward any other.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Butler is to have a weekly paper, soon.

The circuses are making for their winter quarters.

Joseph Rex, of Newville, died last Tuesday morning.

The first snow of the season fell last Monday night.

The Ensley block will be ready for occupation in a few days.

Mr. Humes. who was stabbed on Wednesday of last week, is recovering slowly.

The Commissioners settled with the Township Trustees, last Monday.

When you want a good fitting boot made, go to E. Vordermark & Sons. Sign of the Big Shoe.

Mr. Humes is gradually improving and will soon be out again. Not so win Mansteffer. He is still in jail.

Rev. Cone of our town, delivered an able and instructive address before the assembled schools of Butler, last Friday afternoon.

J. J. Latson, has opened up a shop for the manufacture of Boots & Shoes. He will devote his entire attention to custom work.

Vnen a feller makes his arm round his gal, und she vas liken dat pooty vell, dhen dat vas skripture, on akount it vas maken habiness come on some waist blaces. Ain't it.

A Dutchman, getting excited over an account of an elopement of a married woman, gave his opinion thus: "If my wife runs avay mid anoder man's wife, I shake him out of his breeches if she be mine fadder!"

It has been suggested that the Town Board be petitioned to cushion the corners near Dr. Cowan's residence, to faciliate the Dr. in his daring feats of horsemanship. We second the motion.

Miss Annie Rainier left for Clinton, Illinois, last Monday, and she showed her excellent good taste by ordering the COURIER, before she left. We dont see how anybody removing from this county to some other point, can exist without the COURIER.

PACING-MATCH.

There will be a pacing match between Grey Frank and White Stocking next Saturday afternoon, at the Fair ground at Waterloo weather permitting.

There is in every place some people who think a village newspaper is not worth taking, but the most of them are careful to get hold of one of their neighbor's papers every week, to see what the local news is, or what the editor has to say.

The Auburn Amateur Dance Club gave their first dance last week which was well attended, considering other amusements during that evening. They will give a dance every two weeks during the winter. They have engaged the Fort Wayne String Band, and our young people may expect some good music.

Two families from Michigan moved to Auburn the other day, but after hunting for a house or rooms to locate in for a day or two, were obliged to move to Waterloo until spring, when they hope to return and secure a house in our midst. Why do not some of our monied men construct more houses. Let a general effort be made next spring to put up one hundred houses, for it will requires this number to meet the growing demand.

An exchange says a new idea for public schools is being adopted in many large cities. The plan is to have each school give a monthly reception to the friends and patrons of the schools, the exercises to consist of recitations and singing. This will enable parents to visit their children oftener than they do now, and will, at the same time, be a recreation to the pupils. It is a good idea, and worth a trial anywhere. Parents generally do not bestow sufficient attention on the labors of their children, in getting an education.

Our Newville subscribers complain that their papers do not reach them sometimes until the next week after publication. We send the COURIER every Thursday morning to Waterloo, and it goes thence to Butler in the afternoon. Of this we are certain. It certainly must be the fault of the Postmaster at Butler, that it does not go down in the mail to Newville on Friday. We protest against the practice of allowing these packages to lie in that office.

The Eel River road has been finished to Butler, and the first part of the contract on which the subscription was made has been complied with. But there are a number yet that have not complied with their part of the contract by paying over one half of the subscription. A number of our citizens have advanced the money to the road, having guaranteed the subscription. Every subscriber that has the least honor about him will come up promptly and pay what he agreed to without delay. Let all who are yet back make their promises good.

AT LAST.

The Eel River Road Completed to Butler.

The Last Rail Laid on Saturday.

At last we are permitted to record the fact that Auburn and Butler are firmly and duly bound together, by those parallel lines of iron that constitute a railway, over which the iron horse with fire and flame takes his way. This great epoch in the history of our county was consumated on last Saturday, and we are now within a short half hour's distance of our promising and enterprising neighbor.

Last Saturday was acieved that, for which years ago, the fondest hopes were indulged, and heads have grown grey in expectancy. Decades have rolled their weary lengths along, since its inception, and many of those who stood by the enterprise with willing hearts and ready hands, have long since been gathered to their fathers, but the firm purpose of its projectors was caught up by those who followed, until at last, notwithstanding the many obstacles that appeared and re-appeared at every step, the grand project has been carried, through storm and trial, over a period of more than twenty years to a successful completion.

And to-day, far down the beautiful valley, now rising, now dippng among its gently undulating plains, steaming and hissing, plunges the locomotive, where once no civilized voice or hum of happy industry fell upon the ear, to fill the heart with joy, where all was desolation in the midst of nature's paradise; and the thundering train, bearing its harvest of commerce and trade, dashes past with the rapidity of the wind, leaving the curling smoke, to descend with gossamer wings upon those that fostered and cherished in its infancy this grand achievment. With wavering fortunes, the project was not destineed to meet with success; until a last final combined effort was made, to prevent its construction eastward.

Last spring a scheme was placed on foot for its consolidation with two other roads, in which case the advantages of the road would have been lost to our place. A combined and unceasing effort was made by our citizens to prevend this. Days and nights were spent, in bringing everything to bear against the consolidation. A few of our citizens were continually on the go, visiting this and that point, and using their utmost endeavors to bring about the desired result. There were those in the county who strongly favored the consolidation, and used their influence to that end, but there was one on our side more powerful than all the rest, one who stood by us in this emergency, and won the victory for us. Fair and honorable in all his dealings, just and generous with all men, his name has become a household word, and all along the line the name of D. L. QUIRCK, is held in grateful remembrance. To him are we indebted for the continuation of the line to Butler, though mighty and prolonged were the influences of other corporations, and at one time, he thought of returning the money the people had paid, and letting the work go, but energy held out a little longer, and we have the road to-day. Had the delay been a little longer, the late panic would have surely prevented its completion. We may congratulate ourselves then, on the great success we have just realized. It gives us facilities for intercommucation with the most important point in the county, Butler a town, which is destined to be one of the best in the county.

The dedication of the Odd Fellows new Hall here on Oct. 15th was largely attended by the fraternity in this part of the State. Lodges from the following places were represented Angola, Fremont, Pleasant Lake, Jackson, Mich., Lagrange, Kendallville, Columbia City, Liberty Mills, Mexico, Larwill, North Manchester, Fort Wayne, New Haven, Maysville, Spencerville, Butler, Springfield and Waterloo. The day was most beautiful a sombre hazy autumn day, the finest of the season. The opening exercises were held at the Court House, and the large room was filled to repletion. Bro. Marine of Fort Wayne delivered the address and our home choir furnished excellent music. The splended dinner so well prepared by our citizens received due attention from the brethren. The dedication ceremonies were then performed in an impressive manner by Grand Master P. J. Wise, of Fort Wayne. After which the immense audience joined in singing swelling the song until it filled the large hall, consecrating it to the great principles of Friendship, Love, Truth.

"Brethren of our friendly Order"

Nearly $200 were generously donated by the brethren present towards paying off the indebtedness on the building. The following resolution was unanimous passed at a meeting of the lodge that evening.

Resolved:—That Auburn Lodge No. 116 gratefully tenders its thanks to the sister lodges, for their attendance and liberality in the dedication of our new Hall—to G. M Platt, J. Wise, for his services, to Rev. A. Marine, of Fort Wayne, for the excellent address delivered on the occasion, to the several cornet bands, and to the Auburn Choir, for the splendid music furnished, and to the citizens of Auburn and vicinity, for their kindness and liberality in donating to the sumptuous repast, in honor of our guests.

The total vote for prosecutor in this county was 355.

Particulars of the Death of Wm. A. Lowry.

The family of the deceased have kindly permitted us the use of the following received from J. H. Gould, an Attorney of Delphi, Ind., relative to his death:

After dinner on Friday, Mr. Lowry went to the stable of Mr. I. W. Griffith, procured a horse and buggy, and started to go to Springboro. taking what is called the "upper road," to Pittsburg. The bridge across the canal on this road had fallen down some three weeks ago, had not been replaced, and no notices posted up that the ford was unsafe, although the fact was known to only those who were conversant with the condition of the canal at that point. Mr Lowry being a stranger here, of course he could not know that it was dangerous to attempt to cross the canal through what had every appearance of a well-used ford. Persons living in the neighborhood of the Lime Kilns had been in the habit of driving teams into the canal, just below the wreck of the old bridge, and on each side the tracks of wagons were plainly discernible down into the water from which a stranger would reasonably infer that teams had crossed over from one side of the canal to the other. But this was not the case, as they had merely been driven in and returned to the same side without crossing over. Near the center of the canal is the bottom of an old bayou, which was there prior to the construction of the canal, and at that point the water was from fifteen to twenty feet in depth. Mr. Lowry attempted to cross at this point, and from the statements of a woman living in that neighborhood, it is probable that the horse being checked up, was in danger of drowning, when Mr. Lowry got out of the buggy to uncheck the horse, and may have received some injury from the struggling horse and thus rendered him unable to keep himself above the water. Still, his body presented no marks of any injury, and this theory may be incorrect. This woman did not testify before the coroner's jury, as was not known at that time that she had any information in her possession that would tend to a solution of the question. The evidence before the coroner was, in brief, that a boy near the bridge heard a cry for help, and ran down to the spot, when he saw Mr. Lowry some six feet from the rear end of the buggy, and that he immediately disappeared and did not rise again to the surface. Three men were on the spot in an instant, and threw ropes and placed poles and fishing rods under the water, but all to no purpose. A large crowd soon assembled, and after about an hour and a half his body was found about sixty feet from the place where he was seen to sink.

We found a Masonic emblem on his person, and the members of the craft took charge of his body, and after the coroner's inquest was concluded, conveyed it to the depot to be sent to your city. Our papers will probably contain more minute particulars. and I will send you a copy of them.

Please convey my heart-felt sympathy and that of all the members of the craft here, to the sorrowing widow, in this her terrible bereavement.

Very truly yours,
JOHN H. GOULD.

Mr. T. A. Clark buried one of his little sons yesterday, a bright little boy full of hope and promise to his parents. Mr. Clark is undergoing a serious of terrible afflictions. His Saw Mill was consumed by fire a few weeks ago, his brother died soon after, and his mother and sister have been dangerously ill with typhoid fever for sometime. Truly he is worthy the sympathies of the public.

If some of our real estate men that have laid out additions were more reasonable in their demands, they would reap greater prosperity, and at the same time do a good thing for the town. Some are asking $200 for lots that if sold at $75 for every other lot would make property in that locality much more valuable. Every town has its foggies, croakers, frauds etc. but we do think Auburn has more than her share. How long, O Lord, until relief shall come.

"THROW PHYSIC TO THE DOGS."—"The GRAPHIC" recently gave an illustration of the new chromo issued by the Murray Hill Publishing Company, 129 East Twenty-eighth Street, from Bispham's painting —"Throw Physic to the Dogs." The subject is a little girl physicing various specimens of the canine race. The scene is a laughable one, and the different attitudes of the dogs are exceedingly pleasing.

It was designed to illustrate Dr. Foote's aversion to drugs, and accompanies each copy of his well-known work, "Plain Home Talk and Medical Common Sense." The Doctor's practice is thoroughly "New School," and in this way he stands prominently out from the profession a successful practitioner.

The book is a volume of 912 pages and 200 illustrations, filled with facts and reason relating to mankind, and their social and physical status. The Graphic says of it: "It is an encyclopedia of useful knowledge." A noted clergyman of this city testifies to its merits, remarking: "It is a library in itself." The Franklin Repository, of Chambersburg, Pa., speaks of the picture as "a beautiful chromo, very pleasant, and so enjoyable as to be almost good company."—New York Express.

MR EDITOR —It seems a little singular to me, that our neighbor Waterloo, is constantly claiming that Auburn is to blame for the engendering of this spirit of hatred between the two towns, and that Waterloo does not partake of this feeling, but that it is alone indulged in by the citizens of Auburn. As an evidence of the correctness of these assertions, we cite a late incident. When the fair at Waterloo was going on, the citizens of Auburn turned out largely, many of them taking an interest in its success. The next week after Auburn had a public dedication, and instead of our neighbor returning the compliment, but one citizen, of that vast city was in attendance. This shows which way the wind blows. Yet Auburn does all the spite work. They need not look for a continuation of this upon the part of Auburn any longer. The fair was a humbug all the way through, and will never receive the patronage of the public again that it did this year. Many were disgusted, some swindled, and a majority humbugged, and they will never allow themselves to be taken in again,

A TRAGEDY OF TRAVEL.

BY ROBERTUS BURDETTONIUS.

Canto Primus.

Pete was a tip-top baggageman, he ran on Number Four,
Where the tears and groans of traveling folks unflinchingly he bore,
He cared not how the women wept, or strong men swore,
While he mutilated sample cases, desolated Saratogas, annihilated ordinary luggage, immolated carpet-bags, exterminated band-boxes, and extinguished travelers' outfits by the score.
This fine old railway baggage-man, one of the modern time.

Canto Secundus.

But Thursday afternoon there came a modest traveling man,
Who smiled and watched how ruthlessly the baggage Pete did slam;
Then, as he pointed out his trunk for him to mash and jam,
He said: "Dear friend, my worldly possessions are few and humble; silver and gold I have none, but such as I have are in that trunk. Handle it tenderly, for it is frail and I am poor, and if there's a man traveling who watches and weeps, and prays over his baggage, then that's the kind of a man I am."
(Chorus the same as before.)

Canto Tertius.

But Pete seized his shabby trunk with snorts of wrath and scorn,
And in two seconds both the handles from the ends had torn,
And heedless of the pleadings of the passenger forlorn,
He banged the trunk down on the platform, and then threw it over the top of the car and let an omnibus run over it, and then whacked it a bumper, and threw it off the end of the bridge and shot into it with his revolver, and finally hugged it in his arms, took a flying leap into the baggage-car with it, and lit on it in a corner with his heels, head and stomach, and mashed it into more pieces than there are hairs on a dog's back, and the next second that baggage-car was just alive with one interesting baggage-man and more crawling, squirming, wriggling, rattling, coiling rattlesnakes than you would believe had ever been born.
(Chorus as previously, but with more feeling.)

Canto Quartus.

In vain the muse essays to tell how Pete, the smasher, swore,
And yelled and shrieked and howled and roared and raved and stamped and tore,
And scratched and slashed and sweat and struck and scrambled for the door,
And turned blue as indigo, and swelled up to nine times the size of a double-decker Saratoga trunk, and died in two minutes after he got out of the car, while the modest traveler, viewing his exaggerated remains, smiled sadly and said, "he never knew a baggage-man so fond of snakes before."
(Chorus ad lib.)

A LITTLE LADY.

I was stopping at the hotel Windsor, at Rue de Rivoli, Paris.

One morning I was smoking in the colonnade, when a tall, elegantly dressed gentleman asked permission to light his cigar by mine. I saw at once that he was a Frenchman, although his "English" was nearly perfect.

"Have you heard the news?" he inquired.

"No."

"Is it possible! Why, all Paris is alive with it at this moment."

"What has happened?"

"The Countess de Marville, the fairest of the fair, was found murdered in her bed last night, her bureau broken open and ten thousand francs missing from it. It was terrible! The brute who did the deed effected his entrance through the window of her chamber, near which, unfortunately, was a tall tree planted by the distinguished grandfather of the Countess years ago. Little did he imagine what a terrible use was to be made of it.

"This is bad news. How any man could harm a woman thus in cold blood is more than I can imagine."

"Ah, monsieur, if you had ever seen the Countess you would wonder still more. She was beautiful—beautiful as an angel," he added, stroking his whiskers with an unmistakable air of vanity; "I knew her well."

"Indeed."

"Oh, yes. There are in Paris few popular women unknown to me."

His manner now was decidedly conceited, and I felt disgusted. My coldness evidently repelled him, for he soon left me.

Afterward I heard from others accounts of the late tragedy.

Among the details of the affair was one which peculiarly impressed me—and which my first informant had not spoken of—an oversight which surprised me, as the occurrence he had not mentioned was of that kind which would be most apt to strike the fancy.

Upon the throat of the Countess the murderer, in throttling her, had left the mark from a ring he wore—the impression of a chariot-wheel with a star in the center.

"This," said my latest informant, "may lead to the discovery of the murderer. Jean Mosqueau is already visiting the jewelers' shops to find out from which and by whom a ring with a chariot-wheel device was purchased."

"Who is Jean Mosqueau?"

"What, Mosqueau, our famous detective? Although his courage is well known, you would not, to look at his fair, delicate face and form, believe that he could fight a gnat!"

A week later I was aboard the steamer, bound from Calais to Dover.

Among the passengers I beheld one whose face looked familiar to me. I was not long in recognizing this person as the same I had seen in front of the Hotel Windsor, and who had first informed me of the murder of the Countess.

He was certaily a very handsome man, although his conceited air was a blot upon his good looks.

He moved languidly hither and thither, turning his brown eyes admiringly upon the pretty lady passengers, while stroking his whiskers with one white hand, upon the middle finger of which was a superb diamond ring.

I am rather of a suspicious nature, which, combined with a lively imagination, has often let me into singular errors.

Now, a strange impulse moved me to advance and hold out my hand to the man whom I had involuntarily disliked from the first, in order that I might have a chance to glance at his ring. Somehow the idea possessed me that I should discover a chariot-wheel device upon the glittering bauble.

The stranger did not at first recognize me. He soon did, however, and frankly extended his left hand, which was not the one containing the ring.

My brain fairly reeled; the man's behavior was a confirmation of my suspicions.

"The other hand, if you please," I said, in a low, stern voice.

"Monsieur will please excuse me; my other arm is lame with the rheumatism."

He beheld me glance toward the half-hidden ring, and I was sure I saw him start and turn pale, at the same time looking much surprised. He, however, opened his right hand, as if perfectly willing for me to shake it if I chose to.

Then I had a good look at the ring, and felt ashamed of my suspicions. The device was a common heart, which certainly bore no resemblance to a chariot-wheel.

After a general conversation to recover my self-possession, I turned away, resolved in the future to have a better opinion of my fellow-creatures.

The stranger's good looks seemed to attract the attention of a good many of the ladies. One especially, a modest-looking little thing attired in black, kept directing furtive glances at the handsome passenger. Finally she glided so close to him that in turning he brushed against her.

An apology, smilingly received by the little lady, a remark about the weather on the part of the gentleman, and the two were soon conversing with animation. Meanwhile the blushing cheek and bright eyes of the fair one seemed to betoken that she was well pleased with her companion, whose air was more conceited than ever.

"I am afraid we shall have a storm," she remarked, pointing toward a dark cloud upon which the captain of the boat was gazing anxiously.

"We may, but do not be alarmed, madam."

With an air of nonchalance he pulled a red cigar-case from his pocket and asked his companion if she objected to a smoke. Then he started, and quickly returning the red one to his pocket pulled forth another of a blue color.

"How many cigars do you smoke in a day?" inquired the lady, evidently amused at the sight of two cases.

The other colored, and it struck me that his voice slightly faltered and his hand trembled, as he made some laughing reply.

Soon the storm came pouncing down upon us. We were midway in the channel, so that we caught the full force of the sea and gale. Both were terrific.

The sea swept the boat, which lay so far over that her machinery was soon damaged so that it would not work. The wind, screaming like a demon, threw her over still farther.

Suddenly we observed the sailors endeavoring to loosen a long boat on the davits at the stern. Meanwhile, there was an ominous grinding, smashing noise under the counter. The truth could not be concealed; we were sinking.

The ladies screamed; the handsome passenger lost his self-possession, and ran hither and thither.

The cool behavior of the little lady in black contrasted strangely with the agitated demeanor of those around her.

There she stood calm and immovable, her bright steel-blue eyes fixed upon the handsome stranger, of whom she did not lose sight for a moment.

"Keep quiet, ladies and gentlemen! sang out the captain—"keep quiet, and don't crowd around the boat so! There will be room enough for you all; and, besides, there is a schooner coming to our assistance," pointing to a vessel blowing toward us before the wind.

There was, however, a panic among those addressed. The moment the boat was lowered, into it they all bundled in, among them the handsome passenger.

A huge sea coming along, roaring like thunder, parted the tackles, tearing the boat from the steamer before the lady in black or I could enter it.—The handsome passenger, losing his balance, fell over the gunwale, and being unable to swim wildly threw up his arms.

I must acknowledge that I was so engrossed with the perilous situation of my fair companion and myself—now the only two left aboard the steamer—that I paid little attention to the drowning man.

The steamer was, in fact, going down fast—was already nearly engulfed in the stormy waves, her heated and half submerged boilers hissing as the steam came gushing out like the spout of a whale.

I was advancing to throw an arm around the little lady, fearing to see her washed away, when, quietly motioning me back with one hand, she seized a coil of rope and threw the end to the handsome passenger. He caught it, when turning to me, the lady requested me to help haul the man aboard. I complied, marveling at the love and devotion thus shown by a woman to an acquaintance of an hour.

His power over the female sex must be great, I thought. He is conceited, but not without reason.

The idea flashed clearly across my mind in spite of my danger. The schooner, however was very near, and I had every reason to believe that we should be picked up.

I was right. We were all taken aboard the schooner, the handsome passenger among the rest. Then the lady in black pulled forth a revolver, pointing it at the head of him whom she had rescued.

"Out with that red cigar-case!" she said sternly. "I would like to see what monsieur carries in it."

"Why—why," stammered the stranger; "what is—"

Before he could say another word the little Amazon thrust her disengaged hand in his pocket, pulled forth the red cigar-case, and opening it, a ring dropped to the deck.

The ring she picked up, and holding it up before us all she exclaimed—

"I have found it at last. The jeweler assured me it was the only one of the device in Paris—a chariot-wheel! This person is the murderer of the Countess de Marville.

The handsome passenger stood as if frozen to the deck, making no resistance as the lady in black slipped a pair of handcuffs over his wrists.

"By what right," he then stammered, "do you———"

He paused as the other threw off her dress and false hair, revealing the person of a slender man with delicate, girlish features.

"I am Jean Mosqueau, the detective!" he remarked, "and I robbed the sea of this man that the scaffold might not be cheated."

There is little more to add. The main proof having been obtained, other proofs on the prisoner's trial were brought forth, showing him guilty beyond doubt.

Long before his execution his name was ascertained to be Louis Rosseneau, a noted adventurer and gambler, who, however, by cool effrontery and winning address, backed by his good looks, had been enabled to move among the first circles of Parisian society.

The Public Press an Educator of the People.

And by this time, the influence of the public press, as the educator of the masses of the body politic, has become palpably manifest. Undoubtedly the means of popular education supplied to most of the children of the republic at the lightest possible cost, to the poor, especially, had done incalculable service in behalf of general intelligence. But it is certainly true that the fact of the adult population, in a few years after the remarkable development of the press consequent upon the invention of of the electric telegraph, and the wonderful journalistic enterprise which followed, rapidly reaching a high plane of intelligence and manly independence of thought—it is undoubtedly true, that this magnificent fact is largely due to the influence of the public press. As the people became more intelligent, more independent in opinion, the power of party, of course, correspondingly diminished. When the press took position above party it became at once more influential with the people, and more truly representative of them. And, as among intelligent people there is always more of wisdom and statesmanship that among all the politicians, and as they now had representative journals, it did not take them long to perceive that old parties had become obsolete; boy-clothes into which it would have been impossible for the now puissant nation to place itself without making of itself a ridiculous spectacle.

Nor will there be any to deny this claim of magnificent power on the part of the press, when they once seriously reflect upon the nature of its operations; its simple yet majestic means of influence. All will readily agree that if a skillful orator were to address large audiences of willing hearers every day, he would acquire vast influence. A great journal speaks to more persons every day of the week, every day of the year, than could be reached by any orator though he had the voice of Jupiter Tonans. And this upon not a single topic, but upon a variety of topics, many of which must of necessity be of great value and interest to all the people. Libri cibus animo. Newspapers have become the daily intellectual food of all the citizens of enlightened Christendom. The orator, except by the aid of the press, can only influence those who stand round about him. The journalist has a greater immediate audience, but his words reach afar off, as weighty in the uttermost parts of the land or of the earth, as in the deep basement where they issue from that marvel of modern machinery, the Hoe press. This orator, with this vast audience, is of a generous nature, and comes to you instead of requiring you to come to him. Thus with the rising and the setting of the sun he visits the hearthstone of every intelligent family—a welcome visitor. When we consider, therefore, the great varied contents of most of our public journals, and the marvelous means of their diffusion among the people, we connot help agreeing that the newspaper press is, and must of necessity be, among the greatest of educators.—Ingersoll's Life and Times of Horace Greeley.

All Hands Below.

A good story is told of a parrot who had always lived on board a ship, but who escaped at one of the Southern ports and took refuge in a church. Soon after the congregation assembled, and the minister began preaching to them in his earnest fashion, saying that there was no virtue in them, that every one of them would go to hell unless they speedily repented, Just as he spoke the sentence, up spoke the parrot from his hiding place:

"All hands below!"

To say that "all hands" were startled would be a mild way of putting it. The peculiar voice and unknown source had more effect on them than the parson's voice ever had. He waited a moment, and then, a shade or two paler, he repeated the warning.

"All hands below!" again rung out from somewhere.

The preacher started from his pulpit and looked anxiously around, inquiring if anybody had spoken.

"All hands below!" was the reply, at which the entire panic-stricken congregation got up, and a moment after they all bolted for the doors, the preacher trying his best to be first, and during the time the mischievous bird kept up his yelling, "All hands below!"

There was one old woman there who was lame, and could not go out so fast as the rest, and in a short time she was left entirely alone. Just as she was about to hobble out the parrot flew down, and alighting on her shoulder again yelled in her ear, "All hands below!"

"No, no, Mister Devil!" shrieked the old woman, "you can't mean me. I don't belong here. I go to the other church across the way."

The Danger of Cholera.

The slight touch of cholera we had here this summer is by no means a guarantee that it may not pay us a longer and more fatal visit next year. Our latest advices from Europe indicate that the epidemic is not only not over yet, but that it continues to spread and increase in virulence. The Vienna Exposition seems to have diffused the contagion all over Europe, and it is now raging in nearly every large city of the continent. The French journals are alarmed at the progress which the pest is making. The New York Evening Post sounds a timely warning on the subject. It says: "It is time all feasible measures of quarantine and internal sanitary administration were adopted; the peril is imminent and decisive, and the less speculation—the more action—the better in New York in the future. We have a winter, perhaps, to prepare for the coming of the pestilence, though it is by no means impossible that it may reach us at any moment. It was only three or four days ago a Havre ship came sailing up the bay on board of which a passenger had died of cholera, and who knows how many others may have gone ashore with the seeds of the disease in their system?"

Catching Rats.

A writer in the Rural New Yorker, treating of trapping vermin generally, says the following of catching rats in particular:

"Let us now take the case of a house badly infested with rats. How shall we get rid of them? Of course, if they come from some public sewer or other colony, the supply is probably unlimited, and the first thing must be to cut off all outsiders. But if we are troubled with none but natives it will not require much skill to capture every one of them—old, cunning fellows and all. In the first place, then, we must resolve to take time to it and capture the whole lot, and to do this no attempt must be made to capture single animals, since this will tend to make them suspicious and will put the old ones on their guard. Then provide a large box or barrel; place in it a quantity of old carpet, brush, etc., and also some food, such as meal, cheese, herring, etc. Bore a two-inch hole in the side of the box, and leave it for some days. The rats will soon find it out and frequent it. First a young one will go in, and have a good feed and come out all right; the old ones seeing that he is not hurt, they, too, will go in, and in a short time every rat about he premises will frequent it. When this occurs, see that it is well supplied with food, and arrange over the hole a block having a corresponding aperture cut in it, but having also a series of wires stuck around the hole and pointing inward, just as they are arranged in the common wire traps. Every rat will go in as before, and not one can get out. Various methods may be adopted for killing them. If you are a sportsman you can let them out one at a time and shoot them or kill them with terriers. A few slips of sulphured paper thrust through the hole and burned, is, however, a very simple plan, and will give them a most effectual quietus. We have known a case in which sixty-seven rats were caught at one time in a box arranged as described. In this instance the premises were effectually cleared of the vermin.

Church Etiquette.

On approaching the church take a fresh chew of tobacco—if you use that weed you will have a quiet hour to enjoy it. And then you can spit under the pew in front of you, where it will be most difficult to wash off when church-cleaning time comes.

On entering the house, should an usher offer to show you a place, disregard his kindness, and slip into the first empty pew you find. It will show your independence and utter contempt for the order of the place.

Then, be sure to seat yourself in the end next to the aisle, and when others wish to go in, let everyone in the pew get up and file out in the aisle, and give the new-comers the inner part. Or, should such display be too great for your modesty, sit still and let them step over your feet. Either course will cause them sufficient annoyance and disturbance.

By all means start from home so as to get in after service begins. By going late a large number will notice that you attend church. It is better to go late than not at all, you know, and then the preacher, who may be in prayer, or reading the scriptures, and that portion of the congregation who go early to get the benefit of the whole service, have no business to be disturbed by such trifles. In other words, they "have no rights you are bound to respect."

But, seriously, do go to church, and go early, and observe such rules as will cause the least confusion in the house of God.

A Remarkable Scene in Court.

A remarkable scene was witnessed at the Queen county (Ireland) assizes a few days ago. Chief-Baron Pigot was about to sentence a murderer to be hanged. The trial had occupied forty-five days, and every one wished to see the last and most painful scene over. The prisoner seemed also to desire to have the affair finished soon, for when the Judge had put on the black cap and had got as far as the name "James Moore," he was interrupted by the prisoner, who requested him to be quick about it, for "he was not a bit afraid." Unheeding the interruption his Lordship continued his solemn speech, when the prisoner again interrupted him, shouting out in a gruff voice and in no amiable manner, "Come, make haste, I am in a hurry." It was in vain that the Judge attempted to explain to Moore the awful importance of the words which were spoken. He did not care; all he wanted was to have the matter ended; and, said he, "If you ain't quick I'll go down below, and you may talk to yourself." All through the speech of the Judge the prisoner continued to interrupt, threatening that if the sentence was not soon pronounced, "he'd pronounce it himself." At last, seeing that it was impossible to make any sort of impression upon the callous brute in the dock, Baron Pigot, in the usual form, sentenced him to be hanged on the 8th of October.

The Deacon's Dog.

The San Francisco News-Letter relates how, many years ago, at a camp-meeting, Brother Higgins, a good man, but passionately fond of dogs, came in one day accompanied by a black-and-tan hound. Somebody asked him to address the congregation, and he mounted the stand for the purpose, and his dog sat down upon his haunches immediately in front, looking at his master. In the midst of the discourse, which entertained us much, another dog came up, and, after a few social sniffs at Brother Higgins' dog, began to examine the hind leg of the latter with his teeth, apparently for the purpose of ascertaining if it was tender. An animated contest ensued, and one of the congregation came forward for the purpose of separating the animals. His efforts were not wholly successful. He would snatch at the leg of Higgins' dog, but before his hand got there, the yellow dog would be on that side, and would probably take an incidental and cursory bite at the deacon's hand. Brother Higgins paused in his discourse and watched the deacon. Then he exclaimed, "Spit in his eye, Brother Thompson; spit in the hound's eye." Brother Thompson did, and the fight ended. "But I just want to say, continued Mr. Higgins, that outside of the sanctuary, that dog of mine can eat up any salmon-colored animal in the State, and then chaw up the bones of its ancestors for four generations without turning a hair! You understand me." Then the services proceeded.

Horace Greeley's Habits of Dress.

Mr. Greeley never became heartily addicted to "full dress." The last time the writer of these words saw him was in 1870, on the Capitol steps in Washington city. He stopped and talked for, perhaps, half an hour, though the day was broiling hot. I recollect that he was dressed in faultless style, and of afterward remarking to Mr. Hawkins Taylor, with whom we walked up the avenue, that "Horace Greeley was the best dressed man I had seen in Washington." His cravat was not adjusted precisely in the mode, his hat was evidently worn as a hat, not as an ornament, and his boots were not thin-soled; but his whole toilet was of that careless elegance, befitting a distinguished gentleman, who spent no great amount of time in front of his looking-glass. The many thousands who have seen him on lecturing tours and on other occasions when he was off editorial duty—when not being driven before the tempestuous winds of his busy life—can scarcely credit the numerous accounts we have had of his carelessness as to dress. Yet they are correct in the main. His marching suit was not the same as that he wore on dress-parade and the grand review. And it is certain that he never bestowed much time in getting himself into his best clothes. Several years before his death he lectured on one occasion at the city of Hamilton, Ohio. A barber was sent for to shave him, and act as temporary valet de chambre, by whose labors Mr. Greeley appeared in the faultless fashion of an exquisite. He surveyed himself in the glass a moment, and—exploded. Re-tying his cravat and jerking his standing collar about with an energy of manner and of idiom, while the valet vanished out of the storm, the lecturer appeared in due time with his wearing gear a little awry about the neck, but otherwise without violation of the mode. He has been seen on the streets of New York wearing a coat literally out at the elbows. For many years of his life he was absolutely indifferent as to his dress, and at no time did he have the desire or the patience to give special attention to his personal appearance. That he came to be a passably well dressed gentleman on occasions when not hard at work, is a fact which we may in justice rather credit to the genius of his tailor than his own. If there has been one man who gave less attention to his toilet, as a toilet, than any other, that man was, most likely, Horace Greeley.

Voracity of Birds.

As an illustration of the immense voracity of small birds, and of the quantities of insects destroyed by them, a correspondent of the London Times writes: "The fluetitmouse has been watched, and found to feed its young, from 3½ a. m. to 8½ p. m., 475 times, bringing one large or two or three small insects each time. The thrush, from 1¾ a. m. to 9¼ p. m. 206 times. The blackbird, from 3¼ a. m. to 8:40 p. m. 113 times. The mistletoe thrush, from 4:20 to 8 p. m. 66 times, each time bringing several large worms or insects. The sparrow, from two or three to six or eight insects at once, and as this goes on for all the day, and they frequently have two or three broods in the year, they must destroy an immense number. I watched the other day a wagtail catching insects to feed its young, and it took eight or nine into its bill in a minute or two, and had not left off when I turned away. The startlings I frequently observe getting caterpillars for their young, flying from tree to tree with two or three together is their bills to collect more."

Corked.

A few evenings since, a would-be young blood entertained two young ladies, at an up-town saloon, and during the interview suggested that "we all take something," and, looking over the bill of fare, his eye fondly rested on "Champagne cider, 50 cents," the loudest-named beverage on the bill. "One bottle Champagne," ordered the gent, purposely omitting the word cider, for effect with the young ladies, but with a conscience resting easy at fifty cents. The affable waiter brought the article ordered, which was swallowed with a keen relish, and it was not till the young gent confronted the cashier, where four dollars for Heidsick were demanded, that he realized that it was best to call for what he wanted, without any French airs. There was a sudden shortening of stature, as the young man slid down into his boots, and pulled out the legal-tender.—N. Y. Graphic.

Persian Ladies' Dress.

Of all the female costumes of the East the Persian is undeniably the most unbecoming, It is perfectly impossible to tell whether the figure wrapped in pillow-case and latticed veil belongs to a girl of fourteen or an old lady of sixty. Indoors a Persian lady is scarcely less inelegant. The long trousers are usually of thick silk, reaching down to the ankle, and from twenty to five-and-twenty yards wide, and so stiff that they stand out like the old hooped petticoats of our grandmothers. The upper part of the body is covered by a bodice, more or less richly embroidered, under which a white silk chemise is to be seen. The Persian manner of sitting is not cross-legged, a la Turque, but is a complete kneeling position, with the hips almost resting upon the ankles, and the back upon a cushion.

A Puzzle.

A couple of scientific Frenchmen (of course!) have been posing themselves and each other with the question as to where a man who, traveling west from any place at the rate of a thousand miles an hour, would find Monday pass into Tuesday. If he started at noon on Monday the sun would always be in the meridian, because he would journey with equal rapidity with the earth's motion, and the sun would, therefore, be at rest, so far as he would be concerned. It would, therefore, be always Monday noon to him, but when he completed his journey it would be Tuesday noon. These unhappy individuals cannot find out where Monday night occurs to the traveler.

THE FORTY-ACRE FARM.

BY JOHN B. YATES.

I'm thinkin', wife, of neighbor Jones, that man with stalwart arm—
He lives in peace and plenty on a forty-acre farm;
While men are all around us, with hands and hearts a score,
Who own two hundred acres, and still are wanting more.

His is a pretty little farm, a pretty little house,
He has a loving wife within, as quiet as a mouse;
His children play around the door—their father's life to charm—
Looking as neat and tidy as the tidy little farm.

No weeds are in the corn fields, no thistles in the oats;
The horses show good keeping by their fine and glossy coats;
The cows within the meadow, resting 'neath the beechen shade,
Learn all the gentle manners of the gentle milking maid.

Within the field—on Saturdays—he leaves no cradled grain
To be gathered on the morrow, for fear of coming rain;
He keeps the Sabbath holy—his children learn his ways—
And plenty fills his barns and bins after the harvest days.

He never has a lawsuit to take him to the town,
For the very reason there are no line fences down;
The bar-room in the village does not have for him a charm;
I can always find my neighbor on his forty-acre farm.

His acres are so very few he plows them very deep;
'Tis his own hands that turn the sod—'tis his own hands that reap;
He has a place for everything, and things are in their place;
The sunshine smiles upon his fields, contentment in his face.

May we not learn a lesson, wife, from prudent neighbor Jones,
And not—for what we haven't got—give up to sighs and moans?
The rich ain't always happy, nor free from life's alarms,
But blest are they that live content, though small may be their farms.

Humorous.

In what tone does a ghost speak? In a tombs-tone.

Why is a lady's hair like a beehive? Because it holds the combs.

Why is love at first sight like a seal? Because it makes an impression.

A Poughkeepsie clerk loves the very ground a Highland widow walks upon. It is worth $200 an acre.

Josh Billings says, very truly, "You'd better not know so much, than to know so many things that aint so."

A gentleman, on taking a volume to be bound, was asked if he would have it bound in Russia. "Oh, no," he replied, "Russia is too far off; I'll have it bound here."

A worthy old farmer, who was being worried in his cross-examination by a lawyer in Maine, exclaimed: "Look here, Squire, don't you ask a good many foolish questions?"

The man who answered an advertisement to the following effect says his curiosity is satisfied: "If you would learn how to make home happy, send a postage-stamp and twenty-five cents to P. O. Box No. —, Cincinnati." He did send the necessary cash, and soon received the answer: "If you are as big a fool as we think you must be for giving us your money, you can make home happy by leaving it and going West by yourself."—Hearth and Home.

"Now, Johnny," said a venerable lady to her six-year-old nephew, who was persistently denying an offense of which she was accused, "I know you are not telling the truth; I see it in your eye." Pulling down the lower lid of the organ that had so nearly betrayed his want of veracity, Johnny exultingly replied: "You can't tell anything about it, aunt; that eye was always a little streaked!"

Sale of Postage Stamps.

The most popular postage stamps may be gathered from the statement of the stock of stamps at the manufactory during the month of July, which shows about the proportion of the different denominations used by the public in correspondence. The number was as follows:

One cent stamps	11,166,600
Two cent	5,651,700
Three cent	51,770,300
Six cent	1,994,800
Seven cent	51,00 0
Ten cen	101,000
Twelve cent	452,500
Fifteen cent	450,180
Twenty-four cent	120,700
Thirty cent	62,600
Ninety cent	36,200

These figures represent a stock of about seventy million stamps and a money value of about $2,303,000.

Petroleum.

There have been various theories advanced concerning the origin of this earth oil. Some thought it came from the decomposition of marine or earth plants; some, that it was the relic of the oil-yielding animals that swarmed the seas in the Devonian period; while a third, and the now generally accepted, theory is, that it comes from the condensation of the carbon-bearing gases formed within the bowels of the earth, and coming up in this oily form to give light and heat to the nations. But whatever its origin, a singular and kind Providence developed it just as the whales of the ocean were giving out, so that now, to a great extent, it takes the place of the oil they once furnished for mankind.

The Northern Pacific.

The St. Paul Press, of Oct. 9, says: "Gen. Cass, of the Northern Pacific road, is now in the city. There is nothing new in regard to the line beyond the fact that building operations west of the Missouri are suspended, but the work will be commenced as soon as possible next spring. Gen. Cass has been over the line to see what is necessary for putting the road in the best possible condition for its winter business.

Festival of the Plow.—In most Buddhist countries the Festival of the Plow is held annually, with great honor, all classes, from the monarch down, paying reverence to this symbol of the dignity of labor. In Siam, on these occasions, a King of the Husbandmen is chosen, who represents the highest authority, and is made the center of various singular rites. During his brief sovereignty he receives as his perquisite all fines paid for violating the law against doing work on that festal day.

A Wonderful Case.

The Geneva (O.) Times contains a letter from Mr. T. L. Bane, of that place, giving the dates and quantities of fluid taken from him by his physician by "tapping," since December, 1870, from which it appears that he was "tapped" 23 times, and 1,419 pounds of fluid taken from him. He has lately been cured by the use of Bethesda spring water sent him from Waukesha. Many cases of dropsy have been cured by the use of this "Bethesda," but this cure is really wonderful, as such cases of dropsy are incurable in the hands of the best medical men.

We have known of Bethesda's wonderful cures in liver and kidney complaints, such as indigestion, constipation, and diseases proceeding from these difficulties, viz.: diabetes and Bright's disease.

The late Chief Justice Chase was cured of a complicated liver and kidney complaint by the use of Bethesda.

Associate Justice Field says it will cure any case of kidney disease.

Surgeon-General Wolcott, of Wisconsin, Prof. Parker, of New York, Senator Fenton, of New York, Windom, of Minnesota, and other eminent men indorse it. Thousands of barrels of this water have been sent to dealers and invalids in different parts of the world. Unhealthy persons should try it. If you wish particulars, address I. N. Morton, Milwaukee, Wis.—[Com.

A PROVIDENTIAL MAN.—This title now justly belongs to a physician who has added to the list of medicines a new remedy, which appears to include all that is most valuable in the old pharmacopœia, and not to include any of the drawbacks with which the so-called specifics of the Faculty are chargeable. The Providential man is Dr. JOSEPH WALKER, of California, whose VINEGAR BITTERS have achieved, in the short space of two years, a degree of popularity never before attained by any advertised preparation in this country. We have too much confidence in the shrewdness of the American people to suppose that this sudden and surprising celebrity is the outgrowth of a delusion. Indeed, we have reason to know that it is founded on innumerable and well authenticated cures of almost all the bodily ills that flesh is heir to. Not the least among the merits of the famous Tonic and Restorative is its entire freedom from alcohol, as well as from all mineral drugs. It is composed exclusively of rare vegetable extracts.—[Com.

THE NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY of the United States of America is in no respect affected by the suspension of Jay Cooke & Co. Its investments in Mortgages and Governments are much larger than its total liabilities, and its other assets excel in value one million dollars. The Company never had a dollar in Northern Pacific Bonds or Stocks, as collateral or otherwise, and never made deposits with Jay Cooke & Co. Its policy-holders need entertain no question of its stability. Its future will be prosperous.—[Com.

Security.

Business men almost universally recognize the necessity of Fire Insurance, in order to protect themselves from the great risks in business, and in fact a merchant would not be considered worthy of trust if he did not insure his goods. While all, therefore, recognize the necessity of insuring their property, many fail to see that their lives also have a certain insured value to their families, especially those that have no capital, as their labor is the sole support of their families, which in case of death is lost to them. The only means by which this value may be insured is by means of a policy of Life Insurance in a good company. One of the best of these is the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, in which policies may be obtained by application to the home office, 921 Chestnut street, or to I. W. Iredell, superintendent of western agencies, No. 78 West 3d street, Cincinnati, Ohio.—[Com.

Our Deadly Infirmities.

Physical infirmities are the lot of all. Millions are always sick. No man, woman or child is uniformly in perfect health. Much, however, of the sickness and suffering which render life a burden to so many of our fellow beings is due to carelessness and neglect. A mighty antidote to the leading causes of disease has been provided. It is as harmless as it is efficient. No poisonous drug enters into its composition. It is an undefiled stimulant, tonic and aperient, of which every ingredient is vegetable. This unexceptionable preventive and restorative medicine is not a "new thing under the sun." Hostetter's Stomach Bitters will soon have been before the world a quarter of a century, and it is not too much to aver that thousands, aye, tens of thousands, are now using it who would have been in their graves years ago had they not been strengthened and sustained by this wholesome stimulant. The rapidity with which minor ailments often become, when neglected, obstinate diseases, is well known. This tonic is famous for the immediate check which it gives to these breeders of deadly disorders. The sensation of languor, the sick headache, the nervousness, the indisposition to exertion, the nausea, the confusion of brain, the physical debility, which are intended to premonish us of the approach of serious danger, are invariably removed by a few doses of the Bitters. The fame of this preparation as a genuine specific for dyspepsia, bilious complaints, malarious fevers, rheumatism and chronic debility, is as wide as the world; and in these days of infamous charlatanism, when fierce cathartics that rob the invalid of the last remnants of his strength are advertised as invigorants (!), it is indeed a blessing to mankind that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are everywhere procurable and everywhere popular.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER.

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching, and dandruff; and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing nothing has been found so effectual, or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE,

MERIT HAS ITS REWARD.

Perhaps there is no remedy which has been so universally adopted by the American people and gave such universal satisfaction as Dr. Smith's Ague Cure, and it has often been asked why this particular remedy was so much used. The question is easily answered. Every article of real worth, when known, is appreciated by a wise and thinking people. Now the very fact that this remedy has never been known to fail in the curing of Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, Intermittent and Remittent Fevers is proof positive that it is a remedy of rare merit, and should be used by all who are troubled with these complaints. Remember the genuine has a portrait of Dr. Smith on the outside wrapper. Take no other. For sale by all druggists.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

CONSUMPTION

And Its Cure.

WILLSON'S

Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by

DR. A. TRASK'S

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing diseases is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power gained over the most malignant forms of disease which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it copes as readily with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Breast, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

ROSADALIS

THE GREAT ALTERATIVE AND BLOOD PURIFIER.

It is not a quack nostrum. The ingredients are published on each bottle of medicine. It is used and recommended by Physicians wherever it has been introduced. It will positively cure SCROFULA in its various stages, RHEUMATISM, WHITE SWELLING, GOUT, GOITRE, BRONCHITIS, NERVOUS DEBILITY, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood. Send for our ROSADALIS ALMANAC, in which you will find certificates from reliable and trustworthy Physicians, Ministers of the Gospel and others.

Dr. R. Wilson Carr, of Baltimore, says he has used it in cases of Scrofula and other diseases with much satisfaction.

Dr. T. C. Pugh, of Baltimore, recommends it to all persons suffering with diseased Blood, saying it is superior to any preparation he has ever used.

Rev. Dabney Ball, of the Baltimore M. E. Conference South, says he has been so much benefitted by its use, that he cheerfully recommends it to all his friends and acquaintances.

Craven & Co., Druggists, at Gordonsville, Va., say it never has failed to give satisfaction.

Sam'l G. McFadden, Murfreesboro', Tennessee, says it cured him of Rheumatism when all else failed.

THE ROSADALIS IN CONNECTION WITH OUR

KROMER'S ANTI-BILIOUS PILLS

The same cry that was raised when Wise intended to go to Eurode in sixty hours is being revived over the coming attempt of Donaldson, some papers berating other papers for encourageing such tomfoolery. On the contrary it should be encouraged. The fearful example may serve to keep the coming generations on their feet for some time. And then if a man can't choose his own grave, where is our boasted freedom?

SPEAKING FROM OBSERVATION.—One of the wittiest as well as one of the most brilliant men Pennsylvania has produced was the late George W. Barton, of Philadelphia, who once occupied a seat on the bench. Trying a case before a judge who was chiefly remarkable for obtuseness, he took occasion to say that he had often seen a great ass in judicial robes. "You speak from experience, I suppose," was the angry retort.

"Not at all," replied Judge Barton, "I am speaking directly from observation."

The principle in the press comments on the attempted assassination of Subsidy Pomeroy, is that individual's feline characteristic as to tenacity of life, If Conway had gone to work deliberately after the manner of Lew Wallace and induced the guileless old man to walk in the open tianguez, and then crept stealthly up behind him, grasped his maquahuilt and with his eyes shut pushed it steadily and slowly through O. M.'s corporosity, first having stopped his mouth with a teotuelli so that no cry could have attracted any tamaues that might have been lingering near; then he could have wound his maxtlatl tightly around his neck and slowly chocked him off from this wicked world.

FORGOT TO GROAN.

It is well remembered by army officers that of the various delicies distributed by the civilion delegates of the various commissions and relief agencies the major part were obtained by a class of patients who made the most noise and not by those who were the sickest.

It was after Gettysburg, when the corps hospitals were crowded with wounded, that, while dressing a slight wound, a patient started up as a delegate of the Christian commission passed the tent, and asked;

"Warn't that a Christian?"

"Yes."

"Jove! but I forgot to groan! Well that is the first of them I've missed yet: I wonder what he had?"

A lynx, measuring five feet two inches in length, and two and a half in height, was shot on Tuesday last week about three miles above Mount Etna, on the Salamonie River, by a young man named Hod. Brelsford. The animal was in a tree, and attracted the attention of a dog. Young Brelsford shot at and wounded it in the right shoulder, when it came down, and attacked the dog. The lynx had received three gun shots before he fell the last while it was going for its assailant. The excitement, consequent upon the vanquishment of the animal is intense in the townships of Jefferson Lancaster and Salamonie, and hundreds of people have called to see its hide, which young Brelsford intends stuffing and exhibiting. At Mount Etna they believe the animal to be a panther.

A lobbyist said to me to day;

"What would you bet that Congress this winter does not guarantee the Northern Pacific bonds?"

My reply was not delayed; "What will you bet that, if that event happens, several Congressmen will not be hanged?"

It was the expectatien of Jay Cooke Co., and cohort, that the Government would guarantee the payment of the bonded interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad. This idea was never dismissed. It was vaguely hinted as a near certainty to many an investor. It was discussed by Jay Cooke and his lobbyists, Chaudler and Wilkeson. Yet, for springing it as an item of news prematurely, H. D. Cooke threatened to sue several newspapers. These traders in the honor of Congress made a libel of the revealment of their intentions! What then, was the par value in honor of their intentions?

Mr. E. Z. Simmons has purchased the trotting gelding Jim Irving, from his owner, Mr. James Irving, for the sum of $50,000. This is the largest price ever paid for a trotting horse and as Mr. Simmons is a very experienced turfman, and superior judge of horses, he must have been satisfied that Jim Irving was decidedly the fastest trotter in the world before he paid this price.

An Indian minister at the Cheyenne Agency has got into trouble. The reverend father told his red brethren that the agent, Major Bingham, had a box of revolvers for them. When the Indians were called up to receive their annuities they demanded the revolvers. Major Bingham said he had none, and asked who told them they were to receive firearms. The Indians pointed out their preacher, whereupon the Major kicked him. Instead of turning the other side, the reverned father started for his tent, got outside of his priestly garments, and donned the breechclout. He then began dancing and singing war songs, and avowed an ardent desire to toy with Major Bingham's scalp. The result of the trouble is looked for with anxiety, especially by the Major.

WISCONSIN AND IOWA.

These States are about the same size and age. In 1860 Wisconsin was superior in population a hundred thousand. But within the next decade it lost its superiority and came out well nigh 150,000 inferior. The secret of this revolution is that Iowa runs down two degrees further south than Wisconsin, that is, into the grand agricultural belt into which American population is irresistably gravitating. There is no other abvious reason why migration should set from Wisconsin to Iowa, rather from Iowa to Wisconsin. But the course and amount of that migration are remarkable In 1870 the Wisconsonians living in Iowa were 25,309, while the Iowans living in Wisconsin were less than one tenth as many, namely, 2, 423. This Wisconsin exodus to Iowa has mainly grown up since 1860, when the natives of Wisconsin living in Iowa were only 5,121—less by more than 19,000 than the number ten years afterwards.

But Iowa is now full. No more public land there. None that is desireable has been for years. Nebraska is a New Iowa. Identical in location or running half a degree further south; of similar soil and rolling prairie, equally healthy, with access to markets both minnig and military westward, and above all with more railroads at the start than Iowa could build in twenty years, Nebraska is born with a gold spoon in its mouth. No where are more homesteaders and pre-emptors hastening. But many who start for government farms conclude to buy of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Co. finding its lands near the iron track priced lower than school lands—on long credit, low interest, accessible by free passes, the first pay day of any part of principal put off four years, etc, etc.

TROPHIES BROUGHT BY TWO YOUTHS FROM A DEN OF RATTLERS.

In Fayette county, near the line of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad, there is a famous rattle snake den, which has always been a source of terror and fear to those who have even heard of the fearful revelations of the size and number of the venomous reptiles which infest this poison stricken cavern. In number their name is legion, and in age, size, and downright radicalism, there are no figures and names to represent them. A short time since, two daring young men resolved to make an experiment, by way of forming some insight as regarded their numbers; and clothing themselves from head to foot in suits of thick buckskin, with large, sharp knives in their hands, they sallied into the poison infested region. They entered, cutting and slashing, the snakes rattling, hissing, and striking at their adversaries; and when these youths landed on the other side, their clothes were a sight to see! As a snake would strike, his fangs would be deeply and firmly implanted in the buckskin, and off would go his head by a well directed blow by the hand and knife. By making a fair count, it was found that 240 snakes heads were attached to the clothes of one of the party, and 160 heads firmly fastened to the other. More would have been secured, but it was not a good day for snakes. But any one who does not believe the foregoing true story, will be convinced of its entire correctness by inquiring at this office for the name of our informant.—Geenbrier (Va.) Independent.

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

RRIGHTEN NEW CHURCH.

The following (says a London paper) are the names of trees planted in St. Peier's church, with their symbolical descriptions;

Cedar of Lebanon.—It being the tree selected by Solomon for building the temple of Jerusalem.

Weeping Willow.—A native of Babylon, and the tree on which the unhappy Israelites hung their harps when they bemoaned the loss of Jerusalem

Sycamore.—The tree on which Zoccheus climed to see Christ on his way to Jerusalem.

Thorn.—To remind us of the crown of thorns.

Aspen.—It being the tree of which the cross is said to have been formed.

Lime.—The principal papyraceous tree of the ancients, and on the bark of which the scriptures were first written.

Ash.—Esteemed a sacred tree in ancient times, and the ane to which the Serpent is said to have a strong antipathy.

Plane.—The favorite tree of the Greeks, and under whose shade the Athenese philosopher retired to study.

Birch.—The tree of which the lictors made their faces.

Elm.—The funeral tree of the Romans, and the coffin timbers of Britons.

Cypress.—The funeral tree of all eastern nations.

Yew.—"The sacred yew, so feared in war," and a tree consecrated and dedicated to the grave.

Arbor Vitae.—Although the tree of life, it shows that immortality is not the lot of anything terrestial.

Holly.—As being used in decoration of churches at sacred festivals.

Box.—The plant formerly used in the feast of the purification of the blessed Virgin.

Poplar.—A plant held sacred by the Romans, and the tree used to mark the boundaries of their land.

Maple the tree of which the bowl of hospitality was formed in the days of yore.

Pine—"To thee I consecrate the pine," In the Pagan days it was consecrated to Diana.

Bay.—The louis noblis of the ancient warriers; the crown of our poet laureates; a supposed protector from lightning, and a purifier of pestilential air.

Laurel.—As an honorable badge for those who bravely defend their country and their laws.

ROUGHING IT.

A few evenings since a Detroit chap was sparking a West Side girl who wore an Elizabeth ruff. Expecting his coming, she had dressed for the occasion, and her ruff. stiff as an unrestricted use of satin gloss starch could make it, was of the most stunning character. The lover came at the orthodox time, and was ushered into the parlor, where the enchanting maiden and her father and mother were seated He was cordially received, and the evening passed pleasantly, although the old folks sat up a good deal longer than the youngsters thought was necessary. Finally they went to bed and the twain were left alone. After a certain amount of preliminary bashfulness, the maiden assented to her lover's request for a kiss. He essayed to take it, but was met at every point by a bristling wall of tarletan and starch. He came up to her in front, and was gouged in each eye. He sidled up to her, and the right hand prong out one of his ears half off. He attempted to reach the prize over her shoulder, and a Chevaux de frise of lace tickled his nose he was obliged to take a seat and sneeze. Then the maiden came to the rescue and held down one side of the provoking ruff and again the lover advanced Just as he had all but reached her blooming check, the damsel lost her grip and the razor-like decoration flew up with a force that took an under bite out of the right ear." Then he got mad. Then she got mad. Then they both got mad, and an anticipated wedding came to a premature end.

Herman Clarke, Tax Collector of the town of Torrington, Conn., has embezzled $3,900 of the town's money during the last two years. By some strange carelessness he was not required to furnish a bondsman in 1871, so the town loses $2,000 of the sum, and the four present bondsman the remaining $1,100.

A Wisconsin sharper sold Chandler one thousand acres of land located at the bottom of a lake. He evidently knew Chandler's habits, and thought a little water would do him good.

DANIEL DREW'S TROUBLES.

Daniel Drew was found in the inner office of his special partners, Boyd Vincent and Co., at 80 Broad street, yesterday afternoon, surrounded by a body guard of ten of his young men and paring his finger nails with a penknife. He wore one of last summer's white beavers, with a black band. His small twinkling eyes furtively peeped from under the rim of his hat as a gentleman asked him how much truth there was in the assertion of Mr. Wm. L. Scott, of Erie, Penn., that he was trying to conceal his property to escape settling with his creditors.

"I don't know that I have anything to say about it," replied the venerable financier. "It doesn't amount to much."

"Will you answer his complaints in the courts?"

"Yes, I guess so."

"When will you file your answer?"

"Mebbe on Saturday. My lawyers will fix it."

"Can't you tell me what your answer will contain?"

"My lawyers have charge of it. You will have to get it in court."

"Well, Mr. Drew, will you inform me whether it is true that you said last night that you were insolvent and had no money?"

"Who told you that?" (sharply).

"Mr. Scott said so last night."

"How do you know?"

"He said that he heard you said so"

"Oh, that's it. No such thing no such thing."

"Then you are not insolvent, Mr. Drew?"

"No."

Mr. Kenyon Cox, one of Mr. Drew's partners, said that he didn't know whether it was true that Mr. Drew had turned his property over to other persons to escape responsibility for his share of the firm's liabilities. He beleived that Mr. Drew has Mortgaged his residence up town. He thought that if it was proven that he had disposed of the rest of his property since the firm's suspension the law would nullify his action and set the property back. Mr. Cox added that Mr. Drew had some trust interests, and his counsel had advised him to dispose of his Union square property to protect those interests.

It is understood that the bankruptcy proceedings against Mr. Drew will bring up afresh the mooted question whether Mr. Drew was at the time of Kenyon. Cox & Co's., suspension a general or special partner or neither.

A CHILD BORN WITH A TAIL.

A physician of Lexington was lately called—by whom is nobody's business nor where resident—to porform a painful but neccessaay surgical operation upon a young child. The child had come into the world with a real, unmistakable tail, several inches long, which, like all other narratives, ran out to a fine point. This vertebral posterior wagger had continued steadily to grow, and had curled under in such a manner as to necessitate its removal. The amputation was undertaken and successfully performed, a few days ago, and the infant is in a fair way to come out all right. The names of all parties are sacredly guarded, but the truth is beyond question. —Lexington (Mo.) Caucasian, 11th.

The new issue of silver dollars is thus described: The coin is up to the standard in weight and amount of silver, something which could not be said of the old one. On the front are the thirteen stars and the Goddess of Peace with an olive branch in one hand and a streamer of libeaty in the other. Underneath the goddess is the legend "In God we trust," followed by the date "1873," On the reverse is the American eagle as on the old coin. Over the eagle is "E Pluribus Unum," and underneath, "240 grains. 900 fine." The inscriptions around the outer edge of the coin are, "United States of America" and Trade "Dollar." The coin is better looking than the old issue.

Many Inventors do not seem to know that they can take out Patents without employing the services of Patent Agents. We came across one not many days ago who had been prevented from getting out a patent on account of the cost. He had written patent agents who would charge him just twice as much as it would cost him, in this case, to make his application directly to the Commissioner of patents. Any one can obtain from the Patent Office at Washington, a pamphlet published last July, called "Rules of Practice in the U. S. Patent Office," and that gratis. This will give all needed information on the subject of patents, and is a valuable book for any one to have.

INDIANA NEWS.

The rising sun Recorder says the Patrons of Husbandry are increasing rapidly in numbers in Switzerland county.

Thomas H. Nelson was caught in a belt in a saw mill at the Haw Patch, LaGrange county, recently, and crushed to death.

The new water works reservoir at Evansville is completed, and water has been let in. The capacity of the reservoir is 1,000,000 gallons.

Williamsport boasts of a lady resident seventy-one years old, who keeps seven boarders and does all the house work, including cooking, ironing and scrubbing.

Philip Kries, of Logansport, choked to death last week while eating soup A small piece of meat passed into the trachea, or windpipe, causing immediate death.

The Ku-Klux of Whiskey Run, Crawford county, took out a man named Snyder and gave him forty-nine lashes for abusing his family. There may be some good use to which even the Ku Klux can be put.

The Franklin Jeffersonian's correspondent at Bluff Creek gives a highly spiced account of a runaway wedding which took place there a few days ago in which the bride was arrayed in a calico dress and sun bonnet and stepped to the alter barefooted.

Last Monday night, as the wheel tapper was on his rounds, testing the 8 o'clock Chicago train, he discovered a man snugly roosting under one of the cars. The fellow had ridden from Chicago in that perilous position, and was covered with a cloud of dust that made him look like a genuine African.—Laporte Argus.

The Evansville Journal is doing a lively business in the ghost chronicling way. Its latest stories are, first, of a ghost stealing the boot of a ferry man near Rumsey, and secondly, about an industrious female ghost with a talent for making up beds, who kindly assists a lady friend in her chamber work.

A Bainbridge correspondent of the Greencastle Banner writes. "As Nath Ader was going home from his store Monday night, two shots were fired at him from an alley near the front of his house. One of the balls struck a ledger that he was carrying under, his arm, penetrating through sixty pages. No clue to the perpetrators of the assault."

The Hindmost Takes the Lantern.

In all monasteries monks are apt to be tardy at midnight vigils and drowsy when in their seats. Their peccadilloes were however shrewdly curbed by an abbot who once ordained that whoever entered the chapel last should carry a lantern around and round till he caught some brother napping. Then he might rouse the sleeper, hand him the lantern and take his seat, while the other set out in quest of sleepers.

It fares with land hunters as with monks, Those who take time by the fore-lock, take the most comfortable places, but the laggards must take their lanterns, and pace many a weary round before they can catch one of their forerunners napping and oust him.

The puplic domain is so large, that if homesteaders occupy it no faster than they did in the last decade, they will not exhaust it till the end of five centuries. But in truth they take it up faster and faster, and the desirable portion of public lands is less than half its area. The acres within reach of railroads are a still smaller fraction Among the three thousand who have bought farms in Nebraska of the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad, every man is going to his purchase, has probably passed homesteads every way as valuable, which he might once have occupied as free grants. We all know how if we only knew when.

But the best thing about Nebraska is, that the government has sold none of its newer portions to speculators, but that its matchless farms are owned by a railroad, whose line is valueless unless the country it traverses is settled and improved. Hence the low rates, fares, freights interest, the rebate for speedy culture, the long credit, and long deferred first payments, &c., by which the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Company promote settlements along their line. But here, too, the most comfortable seats are fast filling; the laggards take the most pains, for they must carry the lanterns.

PROF. J. D. BUTLER,

A FUNNY TEMPERANCE CASE.

In Akron, O., I heard of a funny temperance case. A rum seller, whom I will call Hi Church, because he was "high" most of the time, had been sued several times for damage done by his rum on citizens of the town. One man came out drunk and smashed in a big glass window. He was too poor to pay for it, and the owner came against the Church. A boy about sixteen got drunk and let a horse run away with him, breaking his arm. His father made Church pay the damages. A mechanic got drunk and was killed on the railroad track, and his wife sued Church for $2,000, and got it. A farmer got drunk and was burned in his barn on the hay. His son sued Church and recovered. Church got sick of paying out so much money for personal property damages. It ate up all the rum-seller's profits. Still, he acknowledged the law to be a statute, and that it made him responsible for all the damage done by his rum. He used to argue, also, that sometimes his rum did people good, and then he said he ought to receive something back.

One day Lawyer Tompson got to drinking. Tompson was mean, and when he died of the delirium tremens there wasn't much mourning in Akron There wasn't anybody who cared enough about Tompson to sue Church for damage done. So, one day, Church went before the Court himself.

"What does Mr. Church want?" asked the Justice.

"I tell yer what, Jedge," commenced the rum sell," when my rum killed that thar mechanic, Johnson, and Farmer Mason, I came down like a man. I paid the damage and squared up like a christian— now didn't I Jedge?"

"Yes, you paid the damage, Mr. Church; but what then?"

"Well, Jedge, my rum did a good deal to'rds killin' Lawyer Tompson, now, and it 'pears ter me when I kill a lawyer I kinder oughter get a re-bait.—Eli Perkins, in New York Graphic.

POWERFUL ACTING.

On one occasion Mr Edwin Forrest, then a young man, gave a tremenduous display of really powerful acting. He was supposed to represent a Roman warrier, and to be attacked by six menions of a detested tyrant. At the rehearsals, Mr. Forrest found a great deal of fault with the supers who condescended to play the minions. They were too tame. They didn't lay hold of him. They Wouldn't go in as if it was a real fight. Mr. Forrest stormed and threatened; the supers sulked and consulted.

At length the captain of the supers inquired in his local slang.

"Yer want this to be a bully fight, then?"

"I do," replied Mr. Forrest.

"All right," replied the captain; and the rehearsal quietly proceeded

In the evening the little theatre was crowded and Mr. Forrest was enthusiastically received. When the fighting scene occurred, the great tragedian took the center of the stage, and the six minions entered rabidly and deployed in skirmishing order. At the cue. "Seize him!" one minion assumed a pugilistic attitude and struck a blow straight from the shoulder upon the prominent nose of the Roman hero another raised him about six inches from the stage by a well directed kick and the others made ready for a decided struggle. For a moment Mr. Forrest stood astounded, his broad chest heaving with rage, his great eyes flashing fire, his sturdy legs planted like columns upon the stage. Then came a few minutes of powerful acting, at the end of which one super was seen sticking his head foremost in the bass drum in the orchestra, four were having their wounds dressed in the green room, and one, finding himself in the flies, rushed out upon the roof of the theatre and shouted "fire!" at the top of his voice; while Mr. Forrest, called before the curtain, bowed his thankf pantingly to an applauding audience, who looked upon the whole affair as part of the piece, and had never seen Forrest act so splendidly.

* * *

It is about time for the demecracy of Indiana begin to assert themselves. We are confident that our brethren over there are full of fire, but there is a great need of reorganization. The first step in that direction should embrace the establishment of a Democratic paper at the capital.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE price of gold in Wall street dropped to 107¼ on the 16th inst., the lowest point since the war....Predictions were freely indulged in by the press, a few days ago, that the second breaking out of the stock panic in Wall street was the sure precursor of the downfall of the venerable cormorant, Cornelius Vanderbilt. There was a great tumble in Vanderbilt stocks, and for the moment matters did wear a discouraging look for the Commodore; but so far from being on his last legs, as was predicted and fondly hoped by many, he appears to-day stronger, financially, than ever before. There has been a rise in Vanderbilt stocks, and New York dispatches announce that the Commodore is preparing for a heavy "bull" campaign, and there is fear and trembling among the timid "bears."

THE sad death of Mortimer Leggett, a young student of Cornell University, and son of the United States Commissioner of Patents, occasions the most profound excitement at Ithaca, N. Y., where the tragedy has just been brought to light. It appears that young Leggett was the victim of the most barbarous treatment at the hands of a number of his fellow-students, who had undertaken the task of initiating him into the mysteries of a college secret society. The usual practice of blindfolding the candidate and cutting him with a whip-lash, and otherwise ill-treating him, appears to have been carried out to the letter in this instance, and to have resulted in the most tragic consequences.

PITTSBURGH is agitated by a crime of unusual atrocity. An aged widow lady, who lived alone, was found murdered in her bed, her head beaten almost into a pulp. Robbery was the incentive, as her trunks were rifled of their contents....Philadelphia reports great stringency in the money market of that city. Notes with first-class collateral security sell at 15@18 per cent., indorsed paper of high grade at about the same rates, with sales of less favorably known names at 24 per cent.... Financial matters are improving in New York. The foreign export trade, at one time seriously threatened by the panic, is in a healthy condition, and large shipments are made by every outgoing steamer without material alteration in rates....One man was instantly killed, and four others fatally injured, by the explosion of a blast furnace in Bangor, Maine, on Saturday.

A GOOD many of the Rhode Island cotton mills are running on short time....Six canal boats were wrecked near Peekskill, N. Y., by the late gale. Loss about $150,000.

SERIOUS charges of malfeasance are made against the New York detectives in connection with the arrest of the Bank of England forgers. It is alleged that they were in collusion with the forgers, were aware of the plans from the first, and were to share equally the proceeds. McDonald, one of the forgers, has made a confession, in which he reveals the whole plot, and also charges that the detectives have in their possession some $40,000 which he turned over to them under promise that they would use it in securing his escape. The officers deny the story, but the weight of the testimony is decidedly against them.... The recent storm at the East was one of the severest experienced for many years. Great damage was done to railway tracks and bridges, and several accidents have resulted in consequence.

THE indebtedness of the New York banks is $14,000,000 larger than it was last year at this time....Mr. Shanks, the city editor of the New York Tribune, has been committed to jail in Brooklyn for contempt of court, in refusing to disclose the name of the writer of an article in that paper commenting upon the action of one of the Brooklyn City Judges.

The West.

THE Trans-Missouri Irrigating Convention at Denver adopted a memorial to Congress asking for a grant to the States of Nevada, Oregon, California, Nebraska, Kansas, and Texas, and to the Territories, of one-half of the arid lands within their borders, the proceeds to be devoted to the construction of an extensive system of irrigation. The memorial also asks for the division of the homestead and pre-emption lands, so that they will be more equitable in their character.....C. W. Mead, General Manager of the Northern Pacific railroad, asserts positively that work on the road will be begun and prosecuted with vigor in the spring....The Texas cattle fever is said to be raging in Daviess county, Mo....The American House, Minneapolis, Minn., has been destroyed by fire. One of the guests was burned to death.

THE Chicago and Atlantic Railroad Company has received notification by cable of the sale in London of $5,000,000 worth of bonds of the road....The colored people of the Indian Territory have adopted a memorial to Congress asking for equal rights in the Territory with the Indians, and for the organization of a Territorial Government....The Hon. W. B. Williams has been nominated by the Republicans of the Fifth District of Michigan for Congress, to succeed Wilder B. Foster.... Winter has set in early in the Far West. Eight inches of snow fell in Wyoming and Utah on the 17th of October, and the Union Pacific trains were delayed several hours thereby....The National Crop Reporter, of Oct. 18, states that additional reports indicate still greater losses to the corn crop than have as yet been estimated....The Executive Committees of the State Granges in the Northwest held a meeting at Keokuk, Iowa, on the 16th and 17th of October. Their sessions were held with closed doors, and only a portion of their work is made public. One of the resolutions adopted contemplates an extensive system of agricultural statistics, to be collated by town assessors and tabulated by a Commissioner of Statistics, at the capital of each State, for publication in the papers....Bakersfield, Kern county, Cal., was the scene of a bloody affray on the day of the recent election, in which three men killed.

AT Kalamazoo, Mich., a few days ago, a colored man was caught in the machinery of a machine-shop and run around at the rate of 200 revolutions a minute, literally tearing him to pieces. One foot was thrown through the skylight, lodging on the roof....One Kelly, his wife and grandchild were burned to death in Toledo, the other day, by the burning of the shanty in which they lived....The Executive Committee of the Iowa State Grange of Patrons of Husbandry have decided to establish a large reaper and mower factory in Des Moines....A fire in Madison, Wis., on the 18th of October, destroyed $100,000 worth of property.

CLEVELAND and Buffalo were visited by a severe snow-storm on the 20th of October.... A terrible double tragedy was enacted at New Bedford, Ind., last week. A blacksmith, named Christopher, having discovered his wife in guilty relations with her paramour, named Morrow, flew into a frenzy of madness, stabbed his three children and then his wife. Having finished this operation, he turned upon Morrow and stabbed him. The latter then wrested the knife from him and stabbed Christopher, killing him instantly. The unfortunate woman and one of the children will also die.

THE Farmers' Convention commenced its session at Chicago on the 22d of October, with delegates in attendance from Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Indiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, New York and Canada. Nothing was accomplished during the day beyond effecting a permanent organization, by the election of James M. Allen, President, and S. M. Smith and S. T. K. Prime, Secretaries, and the appointment of committees. At the evening session, the question of transportation was brought up by the introduction of resolutions favoring the construction of a ship-canal from the Atlantic seaboard, via the lakes and the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, to the Gulf of Mexico; also, air-line, double-track freight-roads to New York city. The resolutions elicited a long and spirited, but somewhat desultory, discussion, which resulted in their reference to the Committee on Resolutions... The Supreme Court of Iowa has decided that a judgment against a liquor-seller or manufacturer may create a lien upon the property in which liquor is sold or manufactured.... One of the most mysterious crimes of late years was the murder, some two years and a half ago, of Hon. Sharon Tyndale, at Springfield, Ill. One Mose Williams, a noted thief, who has just been sentenced to the Penitentiary from that city, now comes forward and affirms his ability and willingness to point out the murderers, of whom there were four, provided he is guaranteed a pardon in case of their conviction....P. P. Wintermute, who sometime ago murdered Gen. McCook, at Yankton, Dakota, has been indicted for manslaughter only....A young woman named Lizzie Scheuttler has confessed to the murder of the old woman who was found dead in her bed, at Pittsburgh, a few days ago. She says she killed the old lady under the impression that she had a large amount of money.

The South.

THREE dollars and a half a pound is a pretty round figure to pay for cotton, but such a price was realized for a bale of the staple at Memphis, the other day. The proceeds went to the relief of the yellow fever sufferers.

THE steamer Mary E. Poe, from St. Louis to New Orleans, was burned on the Mississippi river, near Osceola, Ark., on the 18th of October. Six or eight lives were lost....The Old-School Presbyterian Synod of Missouri has decided, by a vote of 48 to 33, to reunite with the Southern General Assembly.

THE South Carolina Legislature met in extra session last week. Gov. Moses sent in a lengthy message. He represents the funded debt at $15,027,503, and the floating debt at $5,306,397. The Governor urges the Legislature to increase the rate of taxation....It is stated as a singular fact that not a single printer died in Memphis during the prevalence of the yellow fever epidemic.

A MEMPHIS dispatch of Oct. 22 states that the fever, which for several days had shown a steady improvement, has broken out with renewed violence. A warm rain aggravated the disease and materially increased the death rate. Among the late deaths are the City Registrar, City Undertaker, and Secretary of the Board of Health. Columbus, Miss., has been suffering terribly from the scourge, and several points in Texas report an increased mortality.

Washington.

THE Secretary of War has issued, by direction of the President, a general order, holding apart a tract of land within the military reservation at Fort McPherson, Neb., to be used as a national cemetery....The last issue of the postal cards show a marked improvement in the paper, finish, and printing. The daily orders are very large, amounting to from $500,000 to $1,000,000 a day....Dr Emil Bessel, in his examination by the Secretary of the Navy detailed minutely the symptoms of Capt. Hall's illness, and said he had no doubt whatever that he died a natural death....Sir Edward Thornton the British Minister at Washington, will officiate as umpire for the Mixed Commission to settle the claims between the United States and Mexico.

THE Department of Agriculture reports that the condition of the cotton crop has fallen off from 89 to 78½ since the first week in September. The season must be of average length, and comparatively favorable for picking, to insure a crop equal to that of last year.

A WASHINGTON correspondent says Senator Carpenter's friends are confident that he will make a successful defense of the Long Branch scandal in which his name has been so prominent....It is stated that the Treasury Department will take no action with regard to the redistribution clause of the act of 1870, but will wait for Congress to consider the question, which involves the withdrawal of $25,000,000 national bank currency from the Eastern banks and its transfer to Western and Southern banks, in order to equalize the capital of the country....The testimony taken in the Polaris investigation very conclusively establishes the fact that Capt. Hall died of paralysis. The whole party, according to the evidence, partook of the same coffee of which Capt. Hall drank, and without feeling any ill effects from it.

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that the Treasury Department is making not only every possible effort to prevent a further encroachment upon the legal-tender reserve of $44,000,000, but has gone farther, and actually restored the amount which it has taken from that source....It is announced by a Washington correspondent that a bill has been prepared by Minnesota gentlemen for presentation early the coming session, providing for the United States gearanteeing the interest on the bonds of the Northern Pacific railway.

THE examination of the Polaris survivors by the Secretary of the Navy has been concluded. It has resulted in a complete exoneration of all officers upon whom suspicion rested as to Capt. Hall's death, all the evidence tending to show that his death was from natural causes.

IT is reported that the President has signified his intention to buy $5,000,000 of sterling bills, and to issue $10,000,000 of the so-called Treasury reserves....In view of the turbulent state of affairs in Central America, the Navy Department has decided to reinforce the South Pacific squadron....The great telescope for the Naval Observatory has arrived at Washington. It has the largest perfect object glass in the world, and its construction has proved a perfect success....The President has been suffering from a severe cold.

Foreign.

INTELLIGENCE has reached New York that the Cuban insurgents have captured and sacked the town of Santa Cruz del Sur. The most important result of this victory is the capture of 600 rifles and 60,000 cartridges.... Edmund About and M. Herve, of Paris, have been fined 200 francs each for fighting a duel. ....The sale of the Siecle has been forbidden in the streets of Paris.

A TELEGRAM from Paris announces that the Monarchical parties have come to an absolute agreement; that Chambord has made concessions which are satisfactory to the Liberal Monarchists, and the following will be submitted at the opening of the Assembly: The proclamation of a hereditary constitutional monarchy, the King promising liberty of conscience and equality before the law as the right of all.

A DISPATCH, reporting the agreement between the Count de Chambord and the monarchical party, in the French Assembly, gives the following additional points of the programme to be proclaimed at the opening of the session: The eligibility of all persons to civil employment; universal suffrage; the reasonable liberty of the press, and the tricolor to be maintained as the flag of France. ....John Bright has been re-elected to the British Parliament without opposition.... Private advices from the French settlement of St. Pierre give information of the assassination of Mons. de Vere, the first Bishop of that diocese. The Bishop was murdered in the sacristy of the chapel of St. Jean de Dieu, having been stabbed in the heart and lungs while at prayer. A cousin of the murdered prelate is accused of the awful crime.... Ten persons were recently killed in Valparaiso, South America, by a falling wall, during the progress of a fire.... King William and Prince Bismarck have been visiting Franz Joseph of Austria....A Paris dispatch states that the Republicans are working with great activity and energy to counteract the designs of the Monarchists. Thiers speaks confidently of the result....Two of the insurgent vessels at Cartagena recently came into collision, and one of them was sunk and the whole crew lost....The wife of Pere Hyacinthe has given birth to a son.

THE Dutch have sent out another expedition to make a second attempt to overcome the Atchinese. The army consists of 15,000 men, and is well provided with war steamers and artillery....The Intransigente fleet has escaped from the harbor of Cartenga, and, at last accounts, in the harbor of Valencia, one of the wealthiest and largest commercial cities of Spain. The commander of the fleet demanded both money and provisions from the inhabitants of the city, which they refused, whereupon he threatened to bombard the city; but the British, French and Italian squadrons, which had closely followed the Spaniard, demanded that he should give 96 hours' notice before firing a shot, and in the face of such odds against him, he prudently desisted....The Jesuits have been again notified by the Italian Government to vacate their establishments in Rome, and quit the Eternal City forever.....Rev. Dr. Candlish, the great Scotch preacher, is dead....Advices from Rome state that the financial crisis in America has caused great excitement at the Vatican. It has never been kept secret that a great part of the money received from Peter's pence and part of the private property of the prelates has been deposited in American banks by Cardinal Antonelli.

A DEPUTATION of the French Assembly recently "interviewed" President MacMahon to ascertain whether the reports of his probable resignation were true. The President replied in a guarded manner that, as a soldier, he should always give his services to his country, but there might be political emergencies in which he would resign; under no circumstances, however, would he desert the Conservative majority which elected him....The testimony of Marshals Canrobert and Leboeuf in the Bazaine trial is very damaging to the accused, and virtually secures his conviction. The former testified, regarding the battle of St. Privat, that he was assured by Bazaine that the Imperial Guards would be sent to his aid at noon, that he twice called upon him for ammunition, but received no assistance whatever. He could have held his position at Mars La Tour on the 16th of August, but abandoned it by special orders from the Commander-in-Chief. Marshal Leboeuf deposed that his corps achieved a decisive advantage on the 16th of August, but Bazaine ordered it to fall back, fearing failure of ammunition and provisions.

MAYOR MEDILL, of Chicago, was recently banqueted by the Lord Mayor of London.... Bengal, in India, is threatened with famine. ....The insurgent fleet has left Valencia and returned to Cartagena. Before leaving they plundered a large number of Spanish merchant ships and took four along with them....A serious revolution has broke out in the State of Sonora, Mexico.

Political.

THE Democrats have a majority in the Ohio Legislature of 16 on joint ballot, which insures the return of A. G. Thurman to the United States Senate....McKinstry, People's Independent candidate for Supreme Judge in California, has been elected by about 5,000 majority.

IT is now no longer a matter of doubt that Allen, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio, is elected by about 600 majority. The Republicans have elected the rest of the State ticket....Carpenter's majority for Governor of Iowa will be in the neighborhood of 20,000....Gen. Butler predicts that there will be a dozen bills to repeal the salary act introduced within ten minutes after Congress assembles... The St. Louis Times says B. Gratz Brown aspires to Carl Schurz' seat in the Senate.

IT is rumored that when the Republican caucus of the House of Representatives meets, Ben. Butler will introduce a resolution demanding that the members who are tainted with the Credit Mobilier shall be assigned to back seats in the organization of the committees.....Horatio Seymour and B. Gratz Brown are candidates for the Legislature in their respective States.

General.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: It is reported that costly goods are being reshipped to Europe because there is no market for them in this country at present. Silks, satins, velvets, laces and ribbons are chief among these reshipments. No loss to the country in import duties is occasioned, but owners lose heavily in the cost of freight, insurance and handling. ....The great storm of the 24th and 25th of August, on the New Brunswick coast, was one of the most terrific and destructive cyclones of which history furnishes any record. A report of the damage done by the gale has been prepared and published by the Signal Office at Washington. About 1,032 vessels, of which 425 were small fishing schooners, are known to have been destroyed in the neighborhood of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic shores of Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, and Newfoundland. In addition to this large number, over 90 vessels were destroyed by the same storm in its course before reaching Nova Scotia, making a total of 1,122 vessels destroyed within a few days. Some 223 lives are definitely reported lost, and the most moderate estimate of numerous cases, in which whole crews are stated to have been lost, swells the number to nearly 500, while if to this be added the loss of life on land and in the earlier history of the cyclone, the grand total amounts to at least 600 lives. Records also show that about 900 buildings were injured or tatally destroyed by the storm.

LOUIS RIEL, the Manitoban rebel, has been elected to the Canadian Parliament by acclamation, and has left for Ottawa, although he is under indictment in Manitoba, jointly with Lepine, one of his staff, during the rebellion, for the murder of Scott.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN has again sailed for Europe. He makes the gratifying announcement that he will never return to America.... A national convention of Fire Marshals has been in session in Baltimore during the past week, discussing the various modes of fighting the fiery fiend....The engineers designated by the War Department to examine the bridge across the Mississippi at St. Louis have decided that the bridge is a very serious obstruction to navigation. As the plans cannot now be changed without enormous cost, it is proposed to obviate the difficulty by cutting a canal behind the eastern abutment 125 feet wide and 800 feet long, with a draw of the same width.

RECENT FIRES: Morgan Bros.' lumber mill, at Oshkosh, Wis.; loss, $48,000; insurance, $11,000....At Topeka, Kansas; the offices of the Commonwealth, Kansas Evangelical, and Kansas Monitor newspapers burned, with other establishments; loss, $100,000; insured for $60,000....Goit and Post's planing-mill, Oswego, N. Y.; loss, $40,000; insurance, $17,000....It has been frequently decided by the State courts that a railroad company sustains the same responsibility toward a passenger who rides on a pass as toward one who pays his fare. This doctrine is now corroborated by the Supreme Court of the United States, which has just given a decision affirming a judgment by the United States District Court for the District of New York, in a suit against the Central railroad for damages suffered by a drover, who was traveling on a dead-head ticket.

THE Cunard Steamship Company have withdrawn their vessels from the West India line, and will shortly establish a daily line between Liverpool and New York.....The National Board of Trade was in session in Chicago last week.

THE National Board of Trade, at its session in Chicago, among other things voted to ask Congress to repeal the Bankrupt law, decided against memorializing for a subsidy in favor of American ship-builders; and agreed to press upon Congress the necessity of the immediate establishment of a Department of Commerce....The clink of silver is again to be heard in the land. All the mints of the country are now being run to their full capacity in the coinage of silver, and it is thought that before many days silver change will largely take the place of the fractional currency that has been so long in use.

THE M'COOK MURDER.

Wintermute's Defense—A Plea of Insanity, of Course.

Wintermute's friends say that from the time General McCook first struck Wintermute in the saloon until the evening of the next day, Wintermute was in a demented state, having been so stunned by the blow that he was not conscious of what was passing, or responsible for his actions—in proof of which they refer to his returning to the meeting and interrupting it, and using the unnatural language he did there, as saying that he had been badly whipped, etc. It is also said that McCook's language was insulting and unbearable as it could be before the encounter; that, as a gentleman, it was very humiliating to bear such treatment from one who was physically so much larger and stronger; that any one would be justified in seeking redress after such an encounter, even though in possession of all his faculties, and that McCook's attack on him was uncalled for and unprovoked.

Instead of waiting for him near the door, as stated by the press generally, it is said that Wintermute took the same seat he had occupied when he was first in the meeting, and that he could not see the General approach the hall at all; and there was no shot fired in the hall, and that he could not see McCook until he was in the court-room where the meeting was being held.

They further claim that McCook came to the hall the second time armed, and that, by accident, the first shot was fired by some one unknown, near the door, which roused Wintermute, who was sitting near the stove, and who suddenly arose, and, as he did so, drew his revolver and fired, missing McCook, and then advanced and fired the second fatal shot, laboring under the impression that General McCook was firing at him.

To substantiate this they bring responsible persons to say that before the affray had fairly begun a ball was heard to pass over the heads of the crowd, and that the same lodged in the end of the room directly opposite the door.—Sioux City Journal.

What Befell a Big Indian who Hadn't a Wooden Leg.

A band of Crow Indians, en route to Washington, stopped at Chicago, and, of course, visited the Exposition. What befell one of them is thus related by the Times:

When the Indians reached the gallery they sang several hymns, and danced war breakdowns till the arches trembled. Then they descended and went to the north end to look at the machinery. They were several buzz-saws, large circular ones, revolving at the rate of ever so many thousand times in a minute or more. The Indians were deeply interested spectators, and a Milwaukee man with a wooden leg noticed them. He had often read in his Sunday school books that the North American Indian is a great imitator, and he determined to test the truth of the assertion. So what did this Milwaukee man do but stick his left timber before the saw, and in a twinkling the lower part, boot and all, was lying on the floor. To say that Thin Billy was astonished would be but a mild way of exdressing his feelings. He looked at the boot, and he looked at the man. Then he tragically remarked in his own native language, "It shall never be said that a pale face was more heroic than an Indian chief." He folded his blanket more closely about his body, gave a look of scorn at the surrounding whites, and then stuck one of his legs in front of the swift-revolving cutter. But no sooner had he done so than he was more astonished than ever. He gave a yell, and, frightened nearly to death, the attendant quickly shut off the steam, and the saw ceased its revolutions. Perhaps it was not demolished by the other Indians! There wasn't a piece left big enough for a fine comb; and the attendant aforesaid narrowly escaped with his life. In the meantime the Milwaukee man had disappeared, and has not been seen since. As Blackfoot and his friends were leaving the hall, he was heard to say: "Osaw mileg oph," which interpreted means that a resident of Milwaukee had better not go West.

The Empire on Which the Sun Never Sets.

Queen Victoria literally rules over an empire on which the sun never descends, and more than the sixth part of the inhabitants of the earth owe allegiance to the good lady who, peaceably and by no means overwhelmed with work, resides in succession at Osborne or Balmoral, Windsor or London. On the British islands are crowded together 33,000,000 of people; in India Victoria reigns over 180,663,623 subjects; in Ceylon over 2,405,287; in Mauritus over 318,588, and in the settlements in the Straits of Malacca over 308,087 subjects. In Ontario and Quebec she has 2,412,367; in Nova Scotia, 387,000; in New Brunswick, 285,594; in Manitoba, 11,953; in British Columbia, 94,021; in Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, or together in British North America, 3,748,857 subjects, which does not include the Indians. In Australia live 1,878,748 subjects of the Queen; 752,445 in Victoria, 519,182 in New South Wales, 266,986 in New Zealand, 187,851 in South Australia, 125,146 in Queensland, 101,785 in Tasmania, and 25,353 in West Australia. The population of the West India Islands is estimated at 1,062,077; 516,157 in Jamaica; 162,042 in Barbadoes; 109,698 in Trinidad; 183,491 in British Guiana, and 24,700 in Honduras. In Africa the Queen rules over 566,158 at the Cape of Good Hope, 289,773 in Natal, 408,070 on the Gold Coast, 55,373 in Sierra Leone. Then the Queen has also subjects in the following parts of the world: Gambia, 74,190; St. Helena, 6,444; Hong Kong, 124,198; the Falkland Islands, 811; Bermuda, 12,121; Malta, 141,918, and Gibralter, 16,604. Altogether the number of British subjects outside of the British Islands is 202,343,872.

THE trial of Bazaine is expected to last three months, as no more than five sittings, each of four hours, are to take place during the week.

THE FARMERS' MOVEMENT.

Gossip of the Granges.

THERE are eight granges in operation in Kansas.

EIGHTY-FIVE granges have been organized in California.

VERMONT leads in New England States in number of granges, having 26.

THE granges of Missouri are indebted to the Paris Appeal for a hearty championship of their interests.

THE grangers of Vermont have made arrangements by which, for the first time, they obtain their groceries from Boston at wholesale rates.

THE farmers of Perry County, O., have a grange store, and report its flattering success. Over 60,000 pounds of wool were packed last week.

THE Secretary of State of Iowa has received for record the articles of incorporation of the Grain Growers' Manufacturing Company of Cedar Rapids.

IN nearly every county of Illinois the Anti-Monopolists have put candidates in the field, and they are confident they will have a large majority in the next Legislature of the State.

IT is asserted that the Farmers' Association of Champaign county, Ill., recently sent to Chicago nineteen car-loads of corn on which they saved $500 by attending to the business themselves.

The Patrons of Husbandry in Marshall County, Ill., declare by resolution that no man without good moral character, or who is entangled with political, job or ring alliance, need expect their vote or countenance.

IF it be asked what the Patrons of Husbandry have already accomplished, let it be told to their credit that the progress of their movement has led to a reduction of the passenger tariff of the Illinois railroads from five to three cents a mile.

THE Grangers, or Patrons of Husbandry, have adopted as a rule of their order, never to go to law, and to have all disputes settled by arbitration. The case comes on without delay, and each man telling his story, a jury of picked neighbors and mutual friends decide what is right.

The plan of the Grange Insurance Association of Mower county, Minn., is on the Tontine principle. Each member pays in $10 on joining, and the money is deposited in bank. When a member dies his family is paid $1 for each member of his class, by a check upon the bank, and assessment may then be made upon the remaining members, if desired, to make the fund good.

A WASHINGTON telegram says: The Secretary of the National Grange here declares that the charter of the grange composed in Boston of grain merchants, etc., has not been legally revoked, and that they can go on as heretofore. He says there is no power to revoke their charter, except by the National Grange, which does not meet until February in this city, and besides, he claims that these merchants, being interested in the products of agriculture, are eligible as Grangers.

FARMERS who belong to the Catholic church are prevented by their faith from joining the Patrons of Husbandry. Lest this fact should inspire some misapprehension of their position, the Catholic farmers of Olmsted county, Minn., held a meeting a few days since, and adopted a series of resolutions on the subject. These set forth the reason why they have not become members of the order, and express the warmest sympathy with its objects and their approbation of all its features except that of secresy. Action was also taken which contemplates the organization of an open sodality having like purposes in view.

Sentiments of the Press.

THE farmers will stand their ground and fight for their rights till they obtain them in all the States.—Rock Island (Ill.) Union.

SALARY-GRAB, Credit Mobilier, and kindred matters are bearing fruit. The October elections develop a tidal wave against the administration.—St. Paul (Minn.) Dispatch.

YOU are tired of the one man and the one party rule. Will you put your tough hands to the wheel now, or must you wait until the events of a few more years shall show you why you ought to have acted now?—McHenry County (Ill.) Anti-Monopolist.

THERE is a panic in the regency at Madison equal to that in Wall street, and Washburn stock is at a ruinous discount. The regency have sent Gov. Washburn up in the northwestern part of Wisconsin to see if he cannot roll back the tide of defeat from that quarter. All hail the signal of distress.—Milwaukee News.

WE hear it asserted that the movement of the farmers is responsible for the prevailing panic in financial circles. If so, it ought to teach the railroad lords and monopoly magnates that it is dangerous to disregard the reasonable demands of that class whose industry is the basis of capital and all great enterprises.—Carlinville (Ill.) Democrat.

THE result of the contests in Ohio, Iowa, and Indiana leaves no room to doubt that a revolution has set in that will forever break the hold of the Republican party upon the great States of the Northwest. Every account from the two most important fields of Tuesday's strife is pregnant with disaster to the Credit Mobilier party.—Quincy (Ill.) Herald.

AS proof of the mighty reform now sweeping in "tidal waves" over the country, we call especial attention to the fact that "one-term men" are all the demand. Old party hacks and professional place-hunters and office-holders must go down before the triumphal march of reform, embodied in one-term "anti-monopoly," and no office-holding or office-seeking demagogue "need apply."—Henry (Ill.) Republican.

THE result of the Iowa election has a certain significance that ought not to escape the observation of the Eastern managers of Western railways. Whatever the concentrated power that railroad organizations may be enabled to exert, it is evident enough that on a direct issue with the people they must inevitably go to the wall. * * * Possibly the magnates who control these corporations may find food for reflection in the results of the recent elections.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

THE exchange of our products with each other has been so burdened with the cost of transportation that labor is robbed of its profits, and the fertile earth is forced to produce three bushels of grain as the price of getting two to market. The remedy of this evil is with the people. * * This section of the Constitution gives to the Legislature power to control railroads and other corporations, and to protect the people from extortion and oppression at their hands. It is my opinion that the time has now come to exercise this power delegated twenty-five years ago to the Legislature by the people for their protection.—President Taylor, at Wisconsin State Fair.

LABOR pays much the larger portion of the taxes for the support of the Government, while capital skulks behind exemptions of various kinds. Changes are demanded in the policy of legislation equalizing the burdens of society, and recognizing more fully the principle of eqnality which lies at the basis of our system in all the laws affecting the relutions of capital and labor. Let labor be relieved from unjust taxation by removing monopolies and exemptions, and the condition of the laborer would be so far improved that the whole tone of society would be elevated. Avarice, like any other moral crime, always defeats itself, and, in the degradation of labor, which has been effected by practicing injustice upon it, the representatives of capital have lost infinitely more than they gained.—Janesville (Wis.) Gazette.

IT is stated that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency will renew their recommendation, in their annual reports, for the establishment at New York of a central redeeming agency for national banks, and argue that the recent panic furnishes a reason for such action. If the lesson of the late panic has has any bearing on this question, it is in the contrary direction. It cannot be sound policy to require all the banks in the country to keep accounts with one concern at New York, when it has been demonstrated that the banks of that city are the first to suffer and the last to recover from a financial revulsion. Western banks, for example, which are the agency of immense and legitimate business, should not be required to furnish additional funds for the use of the stock gamblers of Wall street. This view of the case omits even a more important consideration. The policy of the Secretary and the Comptroller would build up a vast fiscal institution, the power of which, in politics and finance, would be very dangerous, and the failure of which would be widely calamitous.—Chicago Tribune.

Subsidy Claims Before Congress.

The Congress that is to meet in December will have thrust upon its attention the question of granting subsidies, and the application for these subsidies or other schemes—which, however disguised, will be subsidies nevertheless—will be backed by a lobby representing a volume of money for contingent rewards that is appalling. Without pretending to include all of them, we call attention to some of the more important ones:

Bond subsidy to the Nort. Pac. R. R.	$ 60,000,000
Bond subsidy to the South'n. Pac. R. R.	60,000,000
Assumption of debts of Southern States	275,000,000
Subsidy to Virginia & Jame River Canal	75,000,000
Same to Georgia & Alabama Canal	40,000,000
Purchase of Erie Canal and its enlarge't.	60,000,000
Purchase of telegraphs	10,000,000
Refunding cotton tax	70,000,000
Claims of Southern loyalists	20,000,000

Against these various schemes the people have no protection save the integrity and firmness of Congress, a majority of whose members last year voted themselves $5,000 each back pay, and the same amount of forward-pay. The session now approaching promises to be remarkable for the boldness of the demands and the extent of the money at the disposal of the corruptionists. The late financial disaster, which destroyed so much that was fictitious and dishonest, has directed the attention of speculators to Congress for other jobs and subsidies by which they may recover their losses. —Chicago Tribune.

Putnam County, Ill., Anti-Monopoly Platform.

First.—We believe in the protection of honest industry in all the various associations of life, and are opposed to the encroachment of aggregated capital.

Second—We are in favor of controlling by law the railroad corporations of the State.

Third—We submit to taxation and duties to meet the necessities of the Government; but denounce as unjust and oppressive all taxation for the benefit of special classes.

Fourth.—We are opposed to all salary-grab and other Government steals, and demand that what is commonly known as the present back-salary-grab be immediately repealed.

Fifth—We are opposed to all future grants to railroads or other corporations, and believe that the public domain should be held sacred to the actual settler.

Sixth—We are in favor of rigid economy in all departments of the public service.

Seventh—We are in favor of honesty and capability as the only test of official position.

An Asiatic Despot.

Khokand is ruled by a genuine Asiatic despot, who bears the name of Khudooan Khan. The gallows stands in every town, and the bazaar of the capital often runs with blood. He has spared no pains to fortify himself upon the throne, and the people are so oppressed and trodden down that all hate him. An attempt to dethrone the Khan resulted in the usurper's being impaled alive, an atrociously cruel punishment, under which the victim often lingers for days. Khudoyan Khan then had the throats of over 600 of the usurper's partisan's cut on the bazaar. The rebellion was thought to be at an end, but according to latest accounts it had broken out more formidable than before. The Khan has appealed to Gen. Kauffman, the Russian commander, for aid in re-establishing order, but thus far he has received no encouragement.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

APPLES may be kept for a length of time without rotting by incasing each apple in a case of tissue paper and putting them in lath crates, in a dry place, where a free circulation of air is obtained. Each crate should not contain over a bushel and a half, and if set together a space of ten inches should be between each crate.

GET SEED CORN.—As soon as the corn is hard and has a fine gloss over the kernel it can be gathered for seed. The best ears should be selected and broken off, the husks stripped back and used to hang the ear by, when it should be hung in a dry, airy place, not too warm, and allowed to thoroughly cure. Corn, if well cured and dry, will resist 30 degrees of cold and still germinate; it is wet and greenness that kills corn. Besides, by selecting the best ears, grown upon the best matured stalks, the grower is all the time improving his corn, and this is an item worth looking after.

A CHEAP FILTER.—Take a whisky barrel, cut holes in each end large enough to admit the house spout. In the lower end have a tin spout to empty into the cistern the water flowing through the barrel. Fix the spout firmly into the head, and cover it with fine meshed wire cloth. Fill the barrel one-third full with clean charcoal, then place over this a piece of wire cloth, very fine mesh, and over this put coarse, clean sand enough to fill the next third of the barrel; then a screen of coarse wire cloth. Fill the last third with charcoal, put in the head, turn on the spout, and your filter is complete. If galvanized wire cloth is used it will be much better, as it will not rust.

SALT FOR HOGS.—An English agricultural paper, the Gardener's Chronicle, relates the death of one sow in pig, another with a litter, and of eleven small pigs, of what was called "strike on the brain." The pigs were taken with what seemed to be epileptic fits; they suffered great pain, uttering occasienal shrieks, and constantly throwing back their heads convulsively. They died in a few hours after the first seizure. On examining these pigs the brain was found all right; the stomach and intestines were inflamed in large pacthes, showing that their death was caused by irritant poison taken in the swill. The lesson to be learned is that while dry salt is good for pigs when taken voluntarily, when it is given in excess in such a way that they are obliged to take it, it is deadly poison.

COAL-ASHES.—The following experiments of M. Lebouf, of Argenteuil, upon the value of coal ashes, shows that in the ashes alone, without any mixture of soil or any manure, plants may grow and come to maturity. Thus having filled three pots with ashes, he planted in the first wheat, in the second oats, and in the third strawberries. The growth was accomplished during the summer. The wheat and oats ripened and produced full, heavy grains.

The straw of the wheat attained a height of about 4 feet 6 inches, while that of the oats grew to about 3 feet 6 inches. The experiments have been several times repeated with the same success.

THE HORSE PETITION.—The following is "The Horse Petition to his Driver," as published by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It is the desire of the lady managers that all children should commit this pretty appeal to memory:

Up the hill, whip me not;
Down the hill, hurry me not;
In the stable, forget me not;
Of hay and corn, rob me not;
With sponge and brush, neglect me not;
Of soft, dry bed, deprive me not;
If sick or cold, chill me not;
With bit or reins, jerk me not;
And when you are angry, strike me not.

CLOVER HAY AND STRAW.—A correspondent says: "I am now feeding clover hay put into the mow last summer about half-cured. About one foot thick of clover, spread evenly over the mow, then the same amount of straw; again clover alternating with straw. Putting several loads in this manner, it becomes nearly as green as fresh cut grass or clover, perfectly free from dust or smoke. All stock eat it with great avidity, milch cows doing splendidly upon it, eating the straw nearly as well as the clover. I think juices of the lover are to a certain extent absorbed by the straw, making it nearly as good as the clover, and preventing the latter from heating, and preserving its color and sweetness."

FEED FOWLS A LITTLE AND OFTEN.—It is a very careless method of feeding fowls where the grain is thrown down in great heaps on the ground or floor. It is not only wasteful, but injurious to the fowls, because they get over-fed, and it is in an important respect contrary to their habits, for their nature is to "scratch." Watch the old hen with a brood when she is just let out of the coop. She hardly stirs from the spot, but as soon as she realizes her freedom, down go her claws into the soil, and afterward, whenever you see her, she is at it.

Always feed, then, no more than can be eaten at once, and take care that it is so scattered among some light rubbish that they may have the luxury of scratching for it. If feed is buried in the fresh earth, then they get, with their mouthfuls of grain, something of use to their peculiar digestive organs. Grain, however, should not be allowed to come in contact with the filthy, tainted soil too often found in the poultry-yard.

The Kelsey Mystery.

The village of Huntington, Long Island, has a sensation. The chief circumstances that gave rise to it are as follows: Charles G. Kelsey loved Julia Smith, and continued to pay his addresses to her after his suit was rejected and she had shown her preference for another lover. He wrote letters to her every day, which finally were not taken from the postoffice. Then he began to write letters to her friends, in one of which he intimates that Miss Smith had committed great indiscretions, and that his silence in respect to them could be obtained by receiving her in marriage. The indignation of friends and neighbors was aroused by this, and one night in November last a party of men treated Kelsey to a coat of tar and feathers and turned him loose. He went home and soon after disappeared. Most people believed that he went away voluntarily, not caring to remain longer in a place where he had suffered such indignity. Not a few, however, thought he had been foully dealt with after the operation of applying the tar and feathers. Ten months later a new phase of the affair was developed. Some fishermen discovered in salt water the legs and a portion of a body of a human being, covered with tar and feathers. Pantaloons and drawers were found on the person, which were identified as Kelsey's, and in a pocket was a watch chain known to be his. Three theories were based on these disclosures. One that Kelsey had been murdered and thrown into the water; another that he had committed suicide, and still another, that the remains were not those of Kelsey, but of some person that the former had procured, covered with tar and feathers, dressed in his clothes, and placed where they would be fished out, the object being to throw suspicion of murder, if not to convict of that crime, on the persons who were at enmity with him. On the whole, it is a very curious case, and it is not strange that all Long Island is excited respecting it.

The Right to Obstruct a Window.

Chancellor Bates, of Delaware, has decided that a man has not the right to close up his neighbor's window, even if it looks out over his own ground, if it has remained unobstructed for twenty years. The decision was made in the Court of Chancery at Dover, on Thursday last, and the particulars are given by the Wilmington Commercial, as follows: "Mr. J. H. Primrose, of Smyrna, commenced the erection, over two years ago, of a shed in the rear of his storehouse. The adjoining property is occupied by Dr. J. E. Clawson, and the shed when completed would have closed up the window of the Doctor's sitting-room. He therefore sued out a preliminary writ of injunction, restraining Mr. Primrose from building the shed, and after the usual course of such cases, the matter has now been finally adjudicated by the Chancellor, the injunction being made perpetual, and Mr. Primrose being ordered not to build the shed. The Chancellor has held the case under advisement, since it was argued a year ago, and has given the question careful consideration, his opinion being exhaustive. He considered that the right to light and air, enjoyed without interruption for over twenty years, rested on the same ground as all other 'incorporeal rights' under the common law of England, upon which he based his decision. He stated that the Constitution of the State, adopted at the Revolution, 1776, accepted the common law of England for its governance; that for this particular case, which was the first ever brought before the State courts, no law had ever been provided, and therefore the common law of England must guide him in his decision; that the law provided that where light and air had been admitted to a dwelling from any quarter, uninterruptedly, for a period of twenty years and over, it could not be shut off, and that, under this ruling, the Doctor was entitled to the light and air which had so long been afforded him uninterruptedly by his window, and he should, therefore, make the injunction perpetual. The consequences involved in the decision may seem scarcely equitable, in some cases, where a man will be forbidden to erect a building on his own property, in such position as he may desire, on account of the inconvenience it may cause to a neighbor, who has chosen to so locate his dwelling as to get light by way of No. 1's lot. In some of the States the English law of 'ancient lights' has been rejected by the courts, on grounds of public policy, as being inconvenient in the rapid growth of our towns and cities. The Chancellor, without making any question on this point, considered that the proper remedy was with the Legislature; that the province of the court is not to alter the law but to administer it as it is, and especially so where rights of property are concerned."

The "Land" of Fish.

The fish of the United States are unsurpassed in flavor in the world. Sportsmen who, with rod and line, have whipped European waters, say there is nothing like them there from the Norway fiords to the Gaudalquiver. Africa and Asia are both poor in this respect. Even in China, where fish is an abundant article of food, and is found in great variety, the flesh is coarse. The salmon of the Scotch lochs afford the nearest approach to the succulence and tender delicacy of our mountain trout and the flaky tenderness of our salmon trout. Then there are the whitefish, the bass, the shad, and an innumerable multitude of others. We have but one rival, and that a prolific, but small one. It is the French sardine, when fresh. This delicious little fish will, in a few years, cease its rivalry, however, if reports are true from the coast of France. At present the sardine fisheries employ 20,000 sailors and some 18,000 men, women and children on land to prepare the fish for market. Each year shows an advance in the price and a diminution in the catch, and in no great length of time over-fishing will have produced its usual consequences—a failure of the fish.

AT this season of the year the roads are liable to have ruts cut into them, which, if allowed to fill with water, are cut deeper by each passing team. It has been suggested that persons be employed permanently to keep roads in repair, instead of the annual turnouts of the inhabitants. The suggestion is a good one, and merits attention at the hands of legislators.

THE London Standard observes, as a curious coincidence, that England and France have paid their respective war indemnities almost on the same day, "to the two victorious nations—the one (Germany) triumphant by force of arms, the other by diplomacy."

BLACK or dark-colored velvet sleeveless jackets are again in fashion.

Preparing for the Family Visit.

The following racy sketch by the Danbury man is so natural and life-like that we are constrained to believe Bailey has "been there himself:"

The man across the way is in Ridgefield this week, visiting his uncle Joseph. He took his wife and boy with him. They left on the 9:45 a. m. train. There is nothing very remarkable about this, but the preparation and the getting away was so extremely natural that we thought we would speak of it. The night before they stayed up until twelve o'clock getting everything in readiness, and as the train was to leave at 9:45 they got up the next morning at 4:30. His wife got up first, and looked out doors to see if it was going to rain, and was quite sure it was, and as it was too dark at that hour to distinguish objects you couldn't touch, it was extremely probable that she was right. While she prepared the breakfast he sat on the edge of the bed, and endeavored to dress the progeny, but not succeeding, owing to a great weakness of the eyes, in getting the boy's jacket over the boy's legs, he gave up the effort, and fell to dressing himself. After breakfast, during which he fell asleep and tipped over a cup of coffee, he looked out of one window, and concluded it would rain sure, and immediately looked out of another window and expressed a belief that it was about to clear off again. Pretty soon he went down street to secure a hack, and came back again to wait for it. This was about 8 o'clock.

At a quarter past eight he came over to ask us if we thought it would rain. Twenty minutes past he asked the party next door what he thought of the weather. At twenty-five minutes past he solicited the opinion of a little girl on the next street, and at half-past eight he was waylaying everybody on the topic. About this time his wife, having twice repacked the trunk, and twice re-dressed the progeny, had got on her redingote and jockey, and with a bouquet in one hand and a smelling bottle in the other, took up a position in the parlor to wait for the hack, which was due in one hour and ten minutes, city time. After sitting there in a calm and patient attitude for eleven seconds, she jumped up and came over to ask our wife if she thought the back breadth was not a little too full. The lady consulted at once made a thorough examination of the back breadth, and and was briefly able to make the gratifying announcement that the back breadth was not a bit too full. With her suspicions allayed, the wife of the man across the way returned home, reaching there just in time to rescue the progeny from a tub of rain water, into which he had promptly fallen on discovering that he was alone. He was dressed at once. (Some people would have emptied that water early in the morning, and set fire to the tub, but they do not live across the way). As it was now 9 o'clock, and three-quarters of an hour before the train was to start, it was reasonable to expect the arrival of the hackman, and the advent of that worthy was accordingly watched for. The man took up his station at the gate and the next corner, and between those two points he moved with commendable celerity. His wife took advantage of the lull to come over and ask our wife if she ever saw anything like it, which that lady conscientiously admitted she hadn't. Then the first lady put her head out of the window and looked down the street, but seeing no indication of the hackman, asked her husband if that man had come yet. Thirteen seconds later, she ran her head out again, and asked him where the progeny was. He didn't know, and as it was absolutely necessary that he should keep moving between the gate and the corner, if the hackman ever came, there was nothing else to do but to go after the progeny herself, which she did. He was in the back yard, running, in connection with another boy, a double-barreled bakery, and was completing an order for five mud-pies, when his mother lighted upon him. His transit to the house was in much less time than any boy could reasonably expect to make. By the time he had got into the fourth clean suit, the hackman came, and drew up in front of the house, as did also the children of the entire neighborhood. The arrival of the hack was the signal for general and complete confusion. The progeny was poked into the carriage by his mother, and immediately pulled out again by his father, who cuffed him on the head, and asked him what he meant. Whereupon the children laughed, and the progeny turned his eyes on his nose and kept them there. After the family was loaded, and the baggage got aboard, the man of the house commenced to think of the things left behind, and the next five minutes were employed in recovering those articles. Finally the hack drove off, the woman protesting that something was forgotten, and firmly asserting that nobody else ever went away at such short notice, and so illy prepared, as she was obliged to. Then those of the children who failed to catch on behind, as the hack drove away, fell to calling the more successful ones what names they could think of in the hurry, and the women of the neighborhood moved back from their blinds, where they had been posted for the last half hour, and came out doors to exchange opinions over the fence.

Muscular Christianity.

Boys who disturb camp-meetings by crying "Amen" in the wrong place, and remarking "Glory" with more zeal than judgment, should read and ponder the fate of thirteen small boys in Kansas. These thirteen ill-advised boys were guilty, so the story goes, of disturbing a Kansas camp-meeting by insisting on shouting "Amen," when a very musical preacher, who prides himself on his voice, was singing a hymn. The preacher bore it for some time, but finally becoming filled with righteous wrath, he descended from his pulpit, and, never once interrupting his hymn, successively reversed and spanked the thirteen small boys. As his avenging hand descended, and the dust of the small boys filled the air, the rest of the congregation shouted in rapture and encouraged him with loud cries of "Go on, brother, go on!" Then he returned to the pulpit, still singing, and those boys went half a mile away behind a haystack and lay down with their faces to the ground, weeping bitterly.

The Red River Raft.

There is now a certain prospect that the great raft which has been an obstruction in the Red River, in Louisiana, ever since the advent of white men in this country will soon be removed, and that navigation will be opened for steamers from Shreveport, La., to Jefferson, Texas. The history of the raft and the attempts to remove it is exceedingly interesting. In 1805 the obstruction of logs reached one hundred miles. Since that time rafts have formed at various points in the river near Shreveport. One of these was removed by Capt. Shreve in 1830, by the help of a Congressional appropriation, and another between 1840 and 1844 under a Government contract by Gen. Williamson. In 1854 the raft region extended only twelve miles, and at that time Capt. Fuller, aided by a Congressional appropriation of $150,000, attempted to remove it. At the end of two years, however, the appropriation had been exhausted and nothing accomplished, and, the work being abandoned, the obstruction began to increase. The present raft region extends thirty-five miles from a point forty miles above Shreveport to the Arkansas State line, and contained, before the present work commenced, nearly fifty rafts, from one-eighth of a mile to a mile in length, and occupying the entire width of the river, navigation only being accomplished through the bayous around the raft, but, as these were only available at very high water, navigation was insignificant. In 1871, the attention of the Engineering Department was again directed to this work, and, an appropriation of $10,000 having been made by Congress, the work of preliminary surveying was intrusted to Lieut. Woodruff, who completed it in 1872, and submitted plans and specifications for the removal of the raft, whereupon an appropriation of $150,000 was made. The plans were accepted, and Lieut. Woodruff reached the raft region in January last with a snag-boat, two crane-boats, and all the requisite machinery for his work. The following description shows the difficulties to be overcome:

"Logs, roots, and snags of every description had been crowded and jammed into a tangled mass, becoming more compact each year as the pressure from above increased. Annual freshets had brought down mud and deposited it in and over this mass until, in places, the raft itself had become entirely covered with earth, small islands, or "tow-heads," thus being formed. Upon these tow-heads were growing trees, usually willows, three feet and more in circumference."

In addition to the removal of logs by sawing and cutting, blasting-powder was used, but it did not prove of any use. Dynamite was then tried, but failed, refusing to explode even with an electrical exploder. At last nitro-glycerine was brought into use, and it never failed to do its work thoroughly. All that remains to be done now is the blowing out of some tow-heads and improving certain points in the channel, which will be accomplished in a few weeks. The obstruction of centuries will then have been removed by the skill and perseverance of Lieut. Woodruff. The saddest part of the record of this great work is that Lieut. Woodruff has not lived to finish it, having died of yellow fever at Shreveport Oct. 1.—Chicago Tribune.

Wheat and Physical Vigor.

Nothing is more sure in the chemistry of life than that the great bread-eaters are the great thinkers, or that the phosphorus which wheat contains, in the outer kernel, immediately beneath the husk, is the feeder of brains and the material substance which provokes to thought, study, reason, and all the forms of nervous energy. There are physiologists who attribute the remarkable success of States like Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to the bounty and perfection of the wheat crop, and the intellectual stimulus, or rather food, which it affords the brain. Certainly no commonwealth in the world has evinced a higher sense of law and order, or more rapidly developed a social system which has no equal in the world. The Constitution of Indiana, for instance, the very center of the wheat zone, is beyond comparison the best in the Union, and produces the highest results in our civilization.

There is a Southern wheat belt, which includes Australia and South America, where a civilization equal to that of the central North of the United States is growing up.

But the full value of wheat as a civilizer will never be fully realized until wheat-meal takes the place of boltek flour, and the people learn to make bread without yeast or risings. Good bread is emphatically the "staff of life," but the commercial article is the way to dyspepsia and premature death.—Science of Health.

A Figurative Story.

A man from Illinois went over to Fort Madison the other day with sweet potatoes to sell. His early education had been defective in arithmetic, for he offered to sell his entire wagon load at sixty cents per half bushel, or $2 per bushel. Baskets and sacks were begged or borrowed, and every one was buying potatoes at sixty cents per half bushel. The man did not see it until the last half bushel was sold. He persisted in selling at sixty cents per half bushel, thinking doubtless that there were four half bushels in a bushel. Another said he would take three half bushels. A third took two half bushels. Before the man commenced the retail business, a grocer bought two bushels for his own use at $2 a bushel. He offered $1.90 a bushel for the whole load, in order to sell again, but was refused. When the man saw his blunder, he held up both hands and exclaimed, "Oh! thunder!"

Taking Precautions.

A French Prefect recently wrote to one of the Mayors of his department advising him, as the cholera had broken out in his district, to take all the necessary precautions. After some time the Mayor wrote to say that he had taken all the proper steps, and, upon the Prefect sending to see that they were effectual, he found that the only preparation the Mayor had made consisted in having a large number of graves dug in the churchyard.

Tree-Planting.

Few things are more gratifying than the interest in tree-planting which is now exhibited all over the country. The plans for reserving large areas of forest untouched by the ax, which have been initiated in this State, are supplemented by efforts to induce a general system of planting, by which the evils arising from a too lavish destruction of the forests may be permanently averted. In a paper by Prof. Hough, of Albany, on forest-culture, read before the Scientific Association recently, there are laid down several systematic plans for tree-planting and the development of forest-culture. It is proposed to offer premiums to counties, towns, and individuals, for the greatest number of trees successfully planted; to require railway companies to plant trees along their routes, and town corporations to plant them along highways. It would be well for the Legislature to appear in the matter so far as the reservation of forest-lands are concerned, and also, perhaps, in the proposed requirements of railways and town corporations, but the premiums proposed should come from a society organized for the purpose. The Legislature already disburses more money than it can manage to do honestly, and the fewer opportunities we afford it in this way the less occasion will there be for our censure. A society, moreover, would be enabled to act so favorably upon public opinion by persistently keeping the subject in the press, that in time premiums would be quite unnecessary. Tree-planting would come to be recognized as an urgent duty, and, what with many people is a more potent influence, a very decided pleasure. We may come to revive the custom of inviting every honored guest to plant a tree; or of planting a tree as commemorative of every interesting event or incident in our lives—at our marriage, for instance, and at the birth of each child. Once let tree-planting take possession of the national mind as a wise as well as a graceful act, and ere long thereafter we shall see it more in danger of excess than of neglect.—Appletons' Journal.

Struggle with a Devil-Fish—A Diver Nearly Crushed.

Mr. Charles B. Brainard, of Boston, in writing to the Scientific American about specimens of the devil-fish, relates this interesting incident:

The strength which these creatures possess is almost beyond comprehension, as is evidenced by what took place when my pet (!) was captured. He had seized hold of a submarine diver, at work in the wreck of a sunken steamer off the coast of Florida. The man was a powerful Irishman, who claimed to weigh 300 pounds. His size and build fully verified his statement, and, to use his own language, "the baste landed on top of my shoulders and pinned my arms tight. I felt my armor and myself being cracked into a jelly." It seems that he was just about being brought to the surface, else the monster would have killed him, for he was suffering so from the terrible embrace that he could move no part of himself. When dragged onto the raft from which he had descended, and finally released, he had fainted. The men on the raft seized the fish by one of its wriggling arms and tried to pull it off, but could not break the power of a single one of the suckers. The fish was only removed by being dealt a heavy blow across the sack containing the stomach. This sack stood stiffly up above the eyes, while the eyes stood out like lobsters' eyes, and gleamed like fire. The monster is, all in all, one of the most frightful apparitions it could be the fate of man to meet. It fulfills in every particular the horrible features attributed to it in Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea." Notwithstanding the severity with which the able Frenchman has been criticised for "creating a nondescript with his weird imagination," the truth must be granted that his "nondescript" has an actual existence, and is evidenced by the specimens in Brighton and Hamburg, as well as my own.

Broadcloth an Enemy of Health.

Prof. Hamilton, in an able address on hygiene to the graduates af the Buffalo Medical College, denounces broadcloth as an enemy to exercise, and therefore to health.

"American gentlemen have adopted, as a national costume, broadcloth—a thin, tight fitting black suit of broadcloth. To foreigners we seem always to be in mourning; we travel in black. The priest, the lawyer, the doctor, the literary man, the mechanic, and even the day laborer, choose always the same black broadcloth—a style that never ought to have been adopted out of the drawing-room, or the pulpit, because it is a feeble and expensive fabric, because it is at the North no protection against the cold, nor is it any more suitable at the South. It is too thin to be warm in winter, and too black to be cool in summer; but especially do we object to it because the wearer is always soiling it by exposure. Young men will not play ball, pitch quoits, or wrestle or tumble or any other similar thing, lest their broadcloth should be offended. They will not go out into the storm because the broadcloth will lose its luster if rain falls upon it; they will not run because they have no confidence in the strength of their broadcloth; they dare not mount a horse or leap a fence, because broadcloth, as every one knows, is so faithless. So these young men and these older men, these mechanics, and all, learn to walk, talk, and think soberly and carefully; they seldom venture even to laugh to the full extent of their sides."

WATER-GAS.—An exhibition of the illuminating qualities of water-gas, so called, was recently made in the city of Chichester, England, in the presence of a number of scientific men, including engineers and managers of gas works. The process of manufacturing gas consists in conducting superheated steam into retorts, in which it is brought into contact with a mass of highly-heated coke and iron. The resulting gas is then passed successively through condensers, washers and purifiers, and finally through rectified petroleum spirit. The last-mentioned process converts it into an excellent illuminating agent.

THE exhibition of bridal presents at wedding receptions is no longer correct.

Straw-Beds.

Dr. Dio Lewis writes the New York Times: "Of the eight pounds which a man eats and drinks in a day it is thought no less than five pounds leave his body through the skin. And of these five pounds a considerable percentage escapes during the night while he is in bed. The larger part of this is water, but in addition there is much effete and poisonous matter. This being in great part gaseous in form, penetrates every part of the bed—mattress, blankets, as well as sheets—soon become foul and need purification. The mattress needs this quite as much as the sheets. To allow the sheets to be used, without washing or changing, three or six months would be regarded as bad housekeeping; but I must insist if a thin sheet can absorb poisonous excretions of the body to make it unfit for use in a few days, a thick mattress, which can absorb and retain a thousand times as much poisonous secretions, needs to be purified as often, certainly, as once in three months. A sheet can be washed. A mattress can be renovated in this way. Indeed, there is no other way of cleaning a mattress but by steaming or picking it to pieces, and thus in fragments exposing it to the direct rays of the sun. As these processes are scarcely practcaible with any of the ordinary mattresses, I am decidedly of the opinion that the good old-fashioned straw bed, which can every three months be exchanged for fresh straw, and the tick washed, is the sweetest and healthiest of beds. If, in the winter season, the porousness of the straw bed makes it a little uncomfortable, spread over it a comforter or two of woolen blankets, which should be washed as often as every two weeks. With this arrangement, if you wash the bed covering as often as once in one or two weeks, you will have a delightful, healthy bed. Now, if you leave the bed to air, and not make it for the night before evening, you will have added greatly to the sweetness of your rest in consequence, and to the tone of your health. I heartily wish this good change could everywhere be introduced. Only those who have thus attended to this important matter can judge of its influence on the general health and spirits."

Two Fearful Coolie Tragedies.

[Lima (Peru) Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

The plantation of San Pedro is one of the largest on the coast, and I have often ridden out on horseback to enjoy its hospitalities. A Chinaman waiter at the table committed some blunder, and was struck across the mouth by his master, so as to bring blood. This a Coolie never forgets. At night, armed with a common bread-knife, our Coolie penetrated to the inner bed-chamber, where slept the family, and murdered seven persons; cut the throats of the entire family; the master who had struck him, his master's wife, her aged mother, and four defenseless little children! In the morning they were found weltering in their blood, and the public indignation reached almost as great a height in Lima and Callao as when the infuriated Cholo populace stabbed the murderer of Balta, their late President, and in cups, and hands hollowed out, drank his blood. Nothing would quiet the fury of the people, and the Coolie was taken to a public plaza (or square), tied to an iron post with iron chains, saturated with oil, and burned alive at his iron pillar. This was done in open day, in full view of the entire populace not only, but before as many of the Coolies of the adjoining sugar-estate as could be driven or induced to attend. The same day, at an adjoining olive plantation, the major-domo (or steward) was murdered by a Coolie by having his throat cut at a beating he had ordered given to the Coolie, his servant. This Coolie was also taken, saturated with turpentine, and burned alive, fastened to an iron stake; and, at the time of the steamer's leaving, the whole Coolie tribe are up in almost open rebellion.

Trojan Rocking-Horses.

To the vandal declaration which one often hears in these days, and which asserts that there is no practical utility in the study of the ancient classics, a singular and complete refutation has recently been made in France. The French police were struck this summer with the extraordinary number of wooden rocking-horses for children which were being imported into France. Now, in that country, however it may be in this, the policeman is a suspicious animal, having a provoking habit of being always around, of putting this and that together, and of thrusting his peaked official nose into other people's business. Seeing, therefore, this sudden invasion of France by vast herds of hobby-horses, and wondering at this extraordinary "demand of French babies for wooden equitation," he began to think what it could all mean. At this point, the policeman's well-known devotion and classical study served him in good stead. He remembered reading in his Homer, how Troy was ruined by one wooden horse; and he resolved that France should not suffer in a similar way from some hundreds of them. He captured one of the creatures, disemboweled it, and discovered that its body was full of fine foreign cigars—an ingenious, but short-lived device of the smugglers.

How He'd Find Out.

In a night school the other evening, in a village not twenty miles from Oxford, England, the teacher was trying to make his class understand the meaning of subtraction, and to illustrate his subject, said:

"Supposing a farmer had 400 sheep, and he sold fifty of them, by what process would he understand how many he had left? What would he do?"

A raw-boned lad of 14, with beaming face and outstretched arm, replied, as soon as he caught the teacher's eye:

"Ask the shuppard, sir."

CURIOUS.—Some animals—frogs for instance—may be frozen stiff, and still retain vitality. In that state respiration appears to be suspended, and may be placed with impunity in irrespirable gases. Dr. Richardson some years since recounted at a meeting of the British Association his experiments upon this subject, and in the course of his address stated that he had seen a kitten revive after severe freezing, and even immersion in ether.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Oct. 30, 1873.

John C. Heenan of pugilistic notoriety, died last Saturday morning, near Rawlins, Union Pacific railroad, while on his way to San Francisco, of consumption. The body was brought to Ogden, and a casket sent from that city for conveyance to New York.

* * *

The Indianapolis Exposition in short $88,000. Suits are being brought against the subscribers to the guarantee fund, and the town is generally by the ears. The trouble is that Indianapolis has been swelling like the fabled frog. Her great metropolitan dailies have pushed her ahead of her capacity.

* * *

Jay Cooke contributed $5,000 to the Republican election fund last year on the plea that Grant's election was neccessary for the financial prosperity of the country. The corruption fund was made large enough to elect Grant but the finances of the country have not prospered very lively, and it is very sad to think that poor Jay Cooke came tumbling down at the very first shot.

* * *

We have heard but very little from Senator Morton since he went to Ohio and told his friends all about the remarkable prosperity of the country under a Republican Administration and predicted the overwhelming defeat of the Democrats at the October election It would be pleasant to hear something further from Mr. Morton about the financial prosperity and the election in Ohio.

* * *

The fact that the Temperance party has polled as many, if not more, votes in Ohio than the people's, shows the advantage of an organization having a great idea of a moral character as its basis. The people had nothing of that nature, and, of course, their movement was a humiliating failure from the start. The Liquor Prohibitionists are steadily increasing their numbers, and promise to be a considerable element in the future in Ohio politics.

* * *

A dispatch to the Indianapolis Sentinel, dated Bedford, Ind., Oct. 21, makes the startling announcement that about fifteen cases of genuind cholera have occurred on Allen's creek in Polk township, Monroe county, in the last weeks, nearly all of which have proved fatal. Five out of one family have been carried away. The neighborhood has always been considered healthy, and this sudden appearance of cholera causes much surprise and consternation.

* * *

A dirpatch from Philadelphia says that the Campaign Committee of the Reform Association have energetically denounced the frauds on election resolved to start a daily paper to further their purposes. Gen. William M. Riley, Democrat, expresses great indignation at the late election. He declares that it is impossible to ascertain the truth of any contest there so long as the ring have the entire control of election books, ballot-boxes, etc. but hopes for a better state of things when the new Register law comes into opperation.

* * *

We are afraid that heresy is springing up in places whence it was little expected. George William Curtis no longer regards Grant as a genuine, sincere apostle of civil service reform, and the Atlantic Monthly has for a long time manifested symtoms of dissatisfaction with its Administration In the November number it has the hardihood to say that "it is perfectly well known from one end of the United States to the other that the Administration interferes in every important State election." The crew have surely mutinied.

* * *

Whether the late elections may safely be considered an expression of a full confidence in the Democratic party may be a debateable question, but there can be no doubt that they have developed a very decided lack of confidence in the Republican party. Call the opposition what you may, Democratic, Anti Monopolist or Peoples' party, all the elements are opposed to the Administration or Republican party, and when this opposition is combined, as it should be at an early day, and we believe it inevitably will be, there is scarcely a State in the Union where it will be in a minority. It is entirely safe to say that a very large majority of this country are strongly opposed to the party in power.

We are informed that Mr. Comptroller Knox will favor an increase of $25,000,000 National bank currency. Why is this? Why not issue the $45,000,000 the Government is authorized to issue in greenbacks? The latter would cost the people nothing. The National bank currency would cost at the rate of 6 per cent., as it would have to hold bonds to that amount. That probably explains the matter. The bank interests, monetarily; have influence through Congress.

* * *

The Indianapolis Sentinel gives the decision of the Supreme Court on the Baxter Bill in full. The Supreme Court declares the law constitutional and in force and operation in all parts of the State. The Sentinel says the opinion was written by Judge Downy, and concurred in by the entire Bench as sound law. soundly defined and as accurately stated. Judge Pettit himself, one of the ablest lawyers in the country, dwelling with emphasis on the thoroughness and correctness of the design.

* * *

The defense in the Stokes trial are making some strong points in extenuation of the Murder. Witnesses swear point blank to hearing Fisk threaten Stoke's life in the plainest and most unambiguous terms. If this testimony is worth anything, Stokes will most certainly get off scot free. It is a lamentable feature of the great criminal trials of this country that delays are introduced which take the edge off public feeling, and then such evidence is manufactured as, in nine cases out of ten, will form a valid excuse for the commission of the crime.

* * *

Thrae is not much of interest in the Stokes trial. It is evident that Fisk fully intended to shoot Stokes on sight. The latter was in a state of the most abject terror and at last out of sheer self preservation he shot his tormentor. It was also abundantly proven, to the satisfaction of the defense, that Stokes was insane at the time of Fisk's murder. Insanity is hereditary in the family and any strong mental excitement makes Stokes as mad as a March hare. Lastly and most conclusively, Stokes did not kill Fisk at all The surgeons did that in probing for the ball, and by the use of narcoties. This conclusion is based on the testimony of a medical gentleman who ought to know whereof he affirms.

The following intelligence was published yesterday in the New York Times:

"The executive Mansion has been altered in some of its interior arrangements, giving more room and light. The improvement is especially noticeable upon the occasion of receptions, as giving more space than formerly and permitting the hall and conservatories to be thrown open in one continuous view. While making a change of stairway it was discovered that the main beam supporting the floor of the hall above was badly cracked and unsafe. It was replaced with an iron girder. Before this change was made a portion of the ceiling fell from the wall near the beam. Carpets of different styles have been purchased and put down in the several rooms as needed, and new furniture purchased and placed in the house where required. The ceilings that required it were kalsomined, and some of the walls painted The carpets, curtains, &c., were all taken down during the summer, properly beaten, cared for and stored, and replaced early in the fall. The entire exterior of the mansion was cleaned, and all cobwebs and other dirt removed. Such places as were stained from the drippings of water or the action of the weather were covered with a light coat of white paint, so that the exterior might present a uniform appearance The heating apparatus, gas and water pipes have been promptly repaired."

We commend this to the attention of the thousands of honest men and women who are accustomed to earn their bread by daily toil and are now deprived of their usual occupations by reason of the hard times. It certainly a hard time for them; but no inconvenience is felt by the President with his doubled salary and his $127,000 a year of pay and perquisites, with his new furniture and new carpets of different styles.

All these things are paid for out of the people's money.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Prayer meeting to-night.

Another snow on last Tuesday.

Mr. Humes is getting well, slowly.

Fix up your sleighs and bob-sleds.

Sparking at the gate is postponed.

Thanksgiving day is close at hand.

Dance at Rainiers Hall next Wednesday.

The Spoke factory starts up next Monday.

Turkeys and chickens are in good demand.

A long spell of good weather would be appreciated.

The gravel train on the Eel River road is buisy hauling gravel.

Our citizens have contributed $25 to suffering Memphis.

Owing to the weather, the work on the Cool building progresses slowly.

The weather has been very disagreable for the past three or four days.

If you want a nice suit of fine clothes made to order go to S. Lauferty.

Geo. H. K. Moss and R. V. Hoffman have joined fortunes in the legal business at Butler.

No gentleman, except members will be admitted to the Dance Club, unless accompanied by ladies.

Mrs. F. Raut had her hand accidently caught in a cider mill last week, cutting several fingers severely.

P. B. Brogan, Esq., representing the firm of Mansfield & Highee, of Memphis, Tenn., gave us a call yesterday.

Miss Mollie Trubey, of Carey, O., and Miss Mary Klinker, of Colen, Mich., were the guests of Mrs. A. J. Smith, of this place, last week.

According to an exchange, a prosperous merchant has for his motto: "Early to bed and early to rise, never get tight, and advertise."

Mr. E. Shaner, of South Whitley, has been appointed agent at the new Eel River depot here, and is fixing up for the running of regular trains.

Moore's Station is the name of the new town on the Eel River road between here and Butler. Drop the word station and make it Mooresville.

We have had some fine winter weather for several days past. It comes a little to soon for many of our farmers who have their corn and potatoe crop yet to take care of.

The members of the I. O. O. F., and the Band, speak in high terms of the reception they received at Auburn on the dedication of the Odd Fellows Hall.—Angola Republican.

Work on the Baltimore and Ohio road has stopped in this county. Contractors could not do much on account of the weather, and this with the present financial panic, were no doubt the causes for this step upon the part of the company.

Miss Linda Foster, formerly editress of the Fostoria Review, is to get married to a Hoosier preacher in a few weeks. The ceremony will take place in the Presbyterian church of Findlay. Lin. is a good girl, and we wish her joy.—Tiffin Courier.

Wonder who?

There was a special feature introduced at the Club hop the last evening. Lord Mansfield was there in all his pristine vigor. He was the pet of the ladies, and put on that easy grace and gallantry only to be appreciated when seen in the master production of "Michigan."

"Say, Mr. Schlapwinkle, did you hear von der news?" "Nein, nein." "Vell, I vill tells you. I shust comes von der town, and I tells you, S. Lauferty did buy der piggest stock of ready-made clothing dis dime in New York ever brought to Auburn; and I tells you agin, dat he versell dem so sheap dat I could not go away mitout buying die piggest bundle I ever bought."

J. L. Berry, formerly of Waterloo, has taken charge of the hotel at Sedan. This house has not flourished very well under other hands lately, but we have hopes now of its being made a popular place of entertainment. A social dance will be given at this house Friday evening, Nov. 7th, 1873.

The handsomest and most convenient window blinds we have yet seen are those in the Odd Fellows new hall, furnished by Davenport & Co. They are attached to a spring cylinder, and by catching the blind below you can raise or lower it at will. All pronounce it the best arrangement yet introduced. For sale by the above firm.

The loanable funds of the Building, Loan and Savings Association in Columbia City continue to command large premiums. There are four of these Associations—three in Columbia City and one in Springfield—in the county, with an aggregate subscribed capital of over $300,000. How is that for business.—Post.

We have but one in this county, at this place, which is in a prosperous condition. We wonder why there are not more of them.

We take the following from an exchange, relative to Prof. Palmer, who made an ascension at this place a year ago:

Prof. Palmer made a second grand balloon ascension from the Pulaski County Fair Grounds, at Winamac, on Saturday. All went well, says the telegraph, until the balloon was near the ground, when it again started to rise. The ropes became entangled in a tree top, and the Professor coming in contact with a limb, being very badly injured. No bones were broken, and it is hoped he will recover.

Insulted.

The last Fort Wayne Journal says:

Tom Maye, Esq., of that lively paper, the Auburn Courier, called at our office on Monday last. He came to the city to see the circus "come in" but was more lucky than 'Squire Dubois. Tom did not have his pockets picked, for the reason there was nothing there to pick. He publishes a paper

Will our subscribers who are in arrears, sit idly by and see us slandered in this way? Must our poverty be made a reproach, simply because you have failed to pay us an honest debt. Look to it, fellow countrymen, that this foul slander is wiped from the record, by coming forward and paying what you must know is due for your county paper. We have waited patiently on a few for nearly three years, and yet they linger far in the rear. Show yourselves to be men, by paying us immediately, so that we can get a nickle or two together, and go down and rattle them in the very teeth of Tom Taylor, the author of the above calumniation. Shall a paltry town like Fort Wayne, trample upon our great and glorious DeKalb. Let delinquents rise up in the strength of their manhood, and—fork over.

THIEVING.

SEVERAL PARTIES ARRESTED

$500 in Goods Recovered.

For some time past complaints have been made by shippers along the line of the Eel River road as to the prompt delivery of certain articles of merchandise. They claimed that on opening boxes and packages, the contents had been tampered with, and were always short when compared to invoice. The managers of the road were always ready to make good the loss, and would send "traces" or inquiries over the other lines on which the goods were shipped, to find if possible where they came up missing, but they were generally returned without any clue to the missing goods. This thing ran on for some time, and the road was frequently called on to make good the losses sustained by those whose goods came over the line "short." A merchant at Manchester, missed some shirts and silk from a bill of goods shipped from New York, for which he demanded and received pay. Some little while after, a lady applied to him to make sale of a piece of silk, which she said her husband had bought at auction. The merchant thought he recognized the goods, but said nothing at the time, informing the officers of the company soon after, however, as to his suspicions. The lady was the wife of a fireman on the road by the name of Plunket, and Mr. C. J. Becktel, a conductor on the road having some experience as a detective, was detailed by the company to look up the job. He went to the house of Plunket and found enough to warrant his arrest. Plunket then disclosed the names of two others who were associated with him in the stealing.

Mr. Becktel came on to the junction and arrested the agent there named John Sponogle and the night watch Cyrus Chapman. They went to the boarding house of the former and found the following articles:

38 shirts 4 balmoral skirts 2 picture frames 17 yds. of flannel 1 hood 1 scarf 4 yds. silk 5 yds satin 1 corset ribbon 4 pairs drawers 2 undershirts 2 neckties 12 shirt fronts 1 table cloth 1 set of furs 1 fur collar 2 coats 2 pr pants 4 vest 1 lot chalk cranes slate pencils 39 pair hose of all kinds 19 pair gloves 12 ladies cuffs neckties and 4 collars 12 ladies linen and and six lace collars 3 handkerchiefs 23 tassles 1 lot cord 2 pr gaiters 1 pair calf. shoes 1 pr slippers shoes rubbers calf and and kip boots 5 hats 3 geographies 4 readers 3 arithmetics 1 grammar 1spelling book 3 bottles hair oil 1 lot matches tobacco and cigars 1 valise 6gloves 3 clay pipes.

Plunkets boarding house turned out the following:

6 shirts 11 pr pants 1 fur collar 1 pr gloves 2 pr drawers handkerchiefs neckties 6 pr hose 1 silk cap 1 vest 3 picture frames 1 bottle brandy 1 bottle hair oil 1 valise 1 trunk. This in addition to a large number of articles found at his home in Manchester will make the list larger than Sponogle.

Chapman's quarters showed up as follows:

10 shirts 2 pr drawers 1 valise 1 fur hat 2 silk handkerchiefs 2 ladies collars 2 satchels 1 box cigars box candies 1 box tobacco 9 gloves 2 pair pants 1 vest steel pens cord 2 pair shoes 1 pr boots 1 pr gaiters 4 pr ladies hose 2 linen handkerchiefs. This is all that has yet been found. Preliminary examination was held in each case as soon as they were arrested, Sponogle was held to answer at court in the sum of $1,000 Plunket and Chapman's $500 each. They are now boarding at the Hotel-De-Meese.

EYE DISEASES.—Who would be blind, led around by a dog, depending upon charity, hope less, helpless, useless, blind? Any one with disease of the eye or eyelids is liable to become such a pitiable object. If you suffer from such disease, do not neglect a sore eye, or a pain in the eye, or over it. Do not procrastinate, but go at once to Dr. S. Clay Todd, No. 4 East Columbia street, Fort Wayne, Ind. He has one of the largest practices in eyes in the country, if not in the world, and cures diseases of the eye if seen early. It is delay that causes blindness. Dr. Todd is always at his office in Fort Wayne, from 8 in the morning to 7 in the evening, Sundays excepted.

Butler as it Was and Is.

We are indebted to Miss Mary Brundage of Butler, for the following interesting item in regard to our neighbor.

BUTLER, Oct, 24, 1873.

This town is situated at the junction of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern with the Eel River Railroad. Twenty-five years ago the place where this town is situated, was, comparatively speaking, a wilderness.

A log school house and a few dwelling houses rudely constructed comprised the town. Among the early settlers were Eugene Hubbell, Tomlinson Blaker and others. These settlers were enterprising, energetic and persevering, and had no thoughts of always remaining in obscurity. From its situation and local advantages, they conceived and carried out the plan of laying out a town, which they named Norristown, in honor of Mr. Norris. Though laboring under difficulties, they did not become discouraged. At first the progress of the town seemed slow, but fortune favored their efforts and the building of the Air Line Railroad bespoke for them future prosperity, and soon marked improvements began. The log school house which had answered the purpose of a house of instruction, and a house of worship, gave place to a more substantial frame.

The persevering attempts of the people began to attract the attention of people of enterprise from other parts of the country, and although many of the early settlers had died or moved away, others took their places and continued the work of building up and improving the town. Small stores had, and in one store might be found, all the varieties of articles which the wants of the people might demand; but this did not long continue; the people were not content to remain as they were and make no farther advancement workshops were built, old buildings were torn down and larger ones built in their stead. In the meantime the name of the town was changed to that of Butler, a name which it has since retained. From time to time other additions were made to the town as it increased in wealth and population, and now behold the result of all these efforts. To-day we have an incorporated town of about one thousand inhabitants. Two churches have been built, one brick, the other frame; one occupied by the Lutheran and Disciple denominations, the other by the Methodist, and presided over by able and eloquent ministers.

Two large hotels are situated on Broad street. Brick blocks have been built and others are being built; one large brick livery stable is nearly completed. A large brick structure has taken the place of the frame school house; the school consists of 250 pupils, and employs five teachers. The people of Butler take great pride in selecting the best teachers for the instruction of the youth, and in keeping up the good reputation of the school.

The Eel river railroad which has been so long in contemplation is at last nearly completed, and some of the best railroad buildings in the country are now being constructed. The most important of these are the round house, passenger house and the grain depot. We regret to say that Butler with the rest of the railroad towns, has its share of sinful indulgences, but we trust the people of Butler will be alive to their best interests and adopt such measures that will do away with these vices which tend to demoralize and trample up on the rights of good society. All things taken together, we think the enterprise, perseverance and interest which pervade both in town and surrounding country give promise of the town of Butler being one of the most important business places on the railroad, and perhaps in twenty five years from now, if any of us may be living; we will look back, as doubtless many of the early settlers now do, with pride upon the rapid progress and improvement of the town.

A young man from the country slapped a big copper cent under the nose of the stamp clerk at the Troy post-office, the other day, saying: "I guess I'll take one of them ere pastoral cards, mister!"

GONE APART.

"She is dead!" they said to him; "come away;
Kiss her, and leave her; thy love is clay."

They smoothed her tresses of dark brown hair,
On her forehead of stone they laid it fair;

Over her eyes, which gazed too much,
They drew the lids with a gentle touch;

With a tender touch they closed up well
The sweet, thin lips, that had secrets to tell;

About her brows and beautiful face
They tied her veil and her marriage lace,

And drew on her white feet her white silk shoes,—
Which were the whitest no eye could choose,—

And over her bosom they crossed her hands:
"Come away," they said, "God understands."

And there was silence, and nothing there
But silence, and scents of eglantare,

And jasmine, and roses, and rosemary;
And they said, "As a lady should lie lies she;"

And they held their breath, as they left the room
With a shudder, to glance at its stillness and gloom.

But he who loved her too well to dread
The sweet, the stately, and the beautiful dead,

He lit his lamp, and took the key
And turned it—alone again, he and she

He and she; yet she would not speak,
Though he kissed in the old place the quiet cheek.

He and she; yet she would not smile,
Though he called her the name she loved erewhile.

He and she; still she did not move
To any one passionate whisper of love.

Then he said, "cold lips, and breast without breath,
Is there no voice, no language of death,

Dumb to the ear and still to the sense,
But to heart and to soul distinct, intense?

See, now, I will listen with soul, not ear;
What was the secret of dying, dear?

Was it the infinite wonder of all
That you ever could let life's flower [illegible]?

Or was it a greater marvel to feel
The perfect calm o'er the agony steal?

Was the miracle greater to find how deep
Beyond all dreams sank downward that sleep?

Did life roll back its record, dear,
And show, as they say it does, past things clear?

And was it the innermost heart of the bliss
To find out so what a wisdom love is?

O perfect dead! O dead most dear!
I hold the breath of my soul to hear;

I listen as deep as to horrible hell,
As high as to heaven, and you do not tell.

There must be pleasure in dying, sweet,
To make you so placid from head to feet.

I would tell you, darling, if I were dead,
And 'twere your hot tears upon my brow shed;

I would say, though the angel of death had laid
His sword on my lips to keep it unsaid;

You should not ask vainly, with streaming eyes,
Which of all death's was the chiefest surprise—

The very strangest and suddenest thing
Of all the surprises that dying must bring.

Ah, foolish world! O most kind dead!
Though he told me, who will believe it was said?

Who will believe what he heard her say
With the sweet, soft voice, in the dear old way?

The utmost wonder is this: "I hear
And see you, and love you, and kiss you, dear;

And am your angel who was your bride;
And know that, though dead, I have never died."

AUNT ELLEN'S STORY.

"Do tell us, Aunt Ellen, why Ray Glyndon, though a Protestant, became a Sister of Charity," said I one day to my aunt, making the request for cousin Laura and myself.

"Well, girls," she replied, "having naught else to do just now, I will comply with your wish; and besides, it will be a good lesson for both of you." And without further preliminary remarks Aunt Ellen commenced her story,

"I was about your ages, girls, when that which I'm about to relate happened. Jennie Griswold, Ray's companion, was what is denominated a romp. People seemed to like her all the better for the manner in which she acted, for, withal, she was a truthful, open-hearted girl. She was the leader in all our girlish sports; and nothing that occurred in our set was considered complete unless Jennie was at the head of it. She seemed to infuse her own lively spirit into whatever undertaking she was concerned in.

"Ray Glyndon was the friend and confidante of Jennie. Their affection for each other, in its intensity, resembled love more than friendship. From Jennie and Ray's fertile brains originated most of the enterprises the girls of our community engaged in. One day the news came into the village where we resided that there were a number of gipsies encamped on its outskirts, and that among them there was a fortune-teller. The girls thought that jolly good news, for we were just dying to have our fortunes told. That very day Ray dropped upon a party of us girls who were discussing, prospectively, the fun we were going to have. It was soon settled that we should visit the gipsy encampment the following Thursday. It being Monday, we had nearly three days in which to bother our minds, thinking what the old witch was going to tell us about the past, present and future.

"The next day Ray informed us that Jennie had declined to become one of the party; that she had been quite melancholy for the last three days, which accounted for our not having seen her; much to our surprise, for she was usually with us; and that she had dreamed, on three successive nights, that she was going to die a sudden death. We were astonished. The very idea of Jennie's being sad and grave was something we could not well understand.

"Girls," said Ray, "come along and see if you can't persuade her to accompany us. I've talked to her till I was tired, but in vain; she won't join us. Now I want you all to see if you can prevail upon her."

"Well, we adjourned to Jennie's house, and after a deal of coaxing, she consented to become one of the party on the following Thursday. The appointed day came. The sun never shone on a merrier party of girls, with the sole exception of Jennie. We laughed, and our gaiety was free and hearty; but we could not succeed in bringing the shadow of a smile to Jennie's face.

"When we reached the gipsy encampment, an old, witch-like woman came forward and desired to know if we wished to consult her in regard to that which fate had in store for us. Having answered in the affirmative, she demanded her fees, which we accordingly paid, and she at once commenced her prognostications.

"Jennie waited till the last. The old crone told her she would prefer not to make any revelations to her, for she could tell her naught else but what would make her sad and despondent. Jennie did not reply, but made a gesture for her to proceed. Then the seeress continued, and informed her that but a short time ago she had been gay and frolicsome, but a sorrowful change had come o'er her spirits.

"'I will tell thee why this difference in such a short period. Thou hast dreamed that a violent death will soon be thy lot. 'Tis the truth! Such will be thy fate. Thy spirit will haunt some spot familiar to thee while on earth. More I cannot tell thee.'

"We turned our steps homeward, sad at heart, for the gipsy's prophecy, being Jennie's dream, almost word for word as she had related it, gave us the 'blues.'

"Nearly a week had elapsed since our visit to the gipsy, when, one night, at about twelve o'clock, the village was aroused to assist in the search for Jennie, who had mysteriously disappeared. She had gone in the early part of the day to visit a friend; when ten o'clock in the evening came and she had not returned home, her parents became alarmed. They sent to her friend's house, and answer was returned that she had left before sundown. Inquiries were made, but none had seen Jennie, excepting the friend she visited, since morning. Then, as I said before, all the men turned out to aid in the search for the lost one. All engaged in it with the greatest possible zeal, for Jennie was generally esteemed, as were her parents also, for whom the largest sympathy was felt. They searched the whole night; but when daylight came success had not rewarded their efforts. There remained one more place in which to search for her, and that was in the stream which wound its way along the environs of the village—there, at least, they might find her dead body. They had not sought Bery long before they found her hat, wet and shrunken, lying on the river bank; while, a short distance off, one of the planks which composed part of the frail bridge that spanned the river appeared as if it had suddenly given away, and hung down to the surface of the stream. The natural conclusion was that while Jennie was crossing the river the treacherous plank had given away and precipitated her into the water; for there had been a great deal of complaint for some time that the bridge was in a bad condition. They accordingly dragged the river, but without finding the body. For a fortnight her mysterious fate formed the ceaseless topic of conversation, and the gipsy's prophecy had become a horrible reality!

"During a few days of the period just mentioned, startling reports had reached the village, daily, that Jennie's ghost, spirit, or whatever you will choose to call it, had been seen haunting an old ruin, which was situated about a mile from the village. A party was formed, consisting of ladies and gentlemen, to investigate the truth of the story, and one bright, moonlight night we started for the ruin, which was an old stone building that had not been occupied for a quarter of a century, and was almost overgrown with ivy. And this place had been one of Jennie's frequent resorts. Many a time had her gay laughter awakened the echoes therein.

"The building was three stories in height. From the topmost window, the lower part of which was on a level with the floor, there protruded a slab of stone large enough for a person to stand upon. A man of average height could stand within the sashless window. With the luminous silvery rays of the moon shining upon it, the old building was a beautiful sight to behold, and one which I shall never forget. We all crowded together, hushed and awe-stricken, waiting for the phantom, if such there was, to appear. Ray Glyndon stood directly in front of us, facing the ruin. But a short time had elapsed before we beheld, gliding to the window I have mentioned so particularly, a figure robed in white.

"'Tis she, 'tis Jennie!' we all murmured simultaneously.

"The specter stood, distinctly outlined, within the window. We were certain we looked upon a being of another world. She stood there for about three minutes, when she moved forward upon the slab of stone I have described. Suddenly we saw Ray make a motion with her hands to the apparition, and heard her cry out:

"'For God's sake, Jennie, go off that stone.'

"Were we dreaming? Had we heard Ray address a phantom as if it were a human being? We had not recovered from our surprise before we beheld the slab of stone cleave the air, together with the ghost, which, judging from the velocity with which it descended, was composed of a more weighty substance than we had supposed. Ray, as she saw the stone glide into the air, with a heart-rending shriek sank to the ground. For a moment we did not move. Our blood was cold, and our limbs felt as if they were frozen to the earth. I don't know whose voice it was that aroused us from this benumbed state; but whoever spoke broke that horrible spell that was upon us, and with one accord we rushed forward and found a living, breathing human being almost crushed to death. 'Twas no spirit, but Jennie Griswold who lay at our feet, a poor, bleeding mass of humanity.

"The young men made a litter of branches of trees, to which we girls added our wrappings, and on which they tenderly carried her home. Ray seemed to be suddenly bereft of her senses. She sobbed wildly during our return, talked incoherently—raved, rather—and not one lucid word or expression would she vouchsafe in reply to our inquiries. We soon arrived at her parents' house with our unconscious burden. Our story was soon told to the bewildered, already long sorrow-stricken parents, and created a sad surprise. A physician was immediately sent for, and on his coming, after an examination, pronounced her injuries fatal. When Ray heard his decision her mind became tranquil, and she exerted herself to the utmost in attending on Jennie. She sat by her friend's bed till she died; and then they had to drag Ray away from the body.

"Before she breathed her last, Jennie explained the cause of her singular death. Ray and she had heard of the arrival of the gypsies before anybody else in the village, some how or other, and this suggested 'a good practical joke.' They at once went to the old fortune-teller, and prompted her to predict Jennie's tragic fate, which, as the sequel showed, she accordingly did, for which they paid her handsomely. The day of her disappearance she had placed her hat on the river's bank, and had also pushed the plank into the water. Ample provisions, and her white clothes, had been put in the ruins long beforehand. That night when the accident befell her, she had intended to return home with us—as per prior arrangement with Ray—in a far different condition to what she really did. She begged all to forgive her and Ray for the cruel joke, and then peacefully died. Ray Glyndon devoted her life thereafter to God and charity, as the best atonement for her sin, for such she considered it; and, although educated a Protestant, she joined a Catholic association, taking the name of Sister Marie.

"Girls, my story is finished, and the lesson I hope it will teach you is this: Never indulge in practical jokes, for you have heard the fearful ending of Jennie Griswold; so once more I say, let it be a life-long lesson for you both."

Railway Accidents in England and America.

The recklessness of Ameircan railway officials was once proverbial, if it not now; but English railroads are bearing off the palm in the number of accidents and in the number of lives destroyed. The list of casualties by rail in that country recently has been frightful, and the people of England have become alarmed to such an extent that a perfect panic exists among railway travelers, and threatens to bankrupt the railroad companies. As many as eight accidents in one day were recently announced by a cable dispatch, and scarcely a day passes that one or more does not occur. A Parliamentary return issued to the British Board of Trade gives the statistics of railway disasters for 1872 in the United Kingdom. The return is the first which has been prepared for an entire period of twelve months under the regulation of railways act, 1871. The total number of persons killed during the year, according to this return, was 1,145, and 3,038 were injured. The total number of passengers killed was 127—24 from causes beyond their own control, and 103 from their own misconduct or want of caution. The total number of passengers injured was 1,462, of whom 1,247 received their injuries from causes beyond their own control, and 215 from their own misconduct or want of caution. The number of railway servants returned as killed under the former head is 64, and under the latter 568; the injured in these two classes are 376 and 1,019 respectively. Seventy persons were killed and 53 injured while passing over railways at level crossings. Under the head of trespassers and suicides, 258 are reported as killed and 107 injured; and miscellaneous, not included in any of the preceding classes, 386 killed and 181 injured. A list is also given of the number of accidents unattended with loss of life or personal injury. It extends over thirty-two pages of the blue-book, but no summary is appended. It appears from one of the tables in the book that the total number of passengers killed on railways from causes beyond their own control from 1862 to 1872 was 271. In an introductory note it was stated that these returns are made by the companies themselves, and the great discrepancies between the number of accidents returned by the various companeis leads to a doubt whether they all make the return with equal care and completeness.

The Railroad Gazette publishes a tabulated exhibited of accidents in this country for the year beginning with September 1, 1872, and ending August 31, 1873. For the twelve months the following table presents the figures:

	Accidents.	Killed.	Injured.
September, 1872	71	24	104
October	90	29	102
November	103	37	114

The Panic and Americans Abroad.

The London correspondent of the New York Evening Post writes as follows:

The Yankee speculators, who have mines, railways, and concessions of other kinds for sale, are quietly folding their tents and stealing away. They know very well that in this market there is no hope for any American enterprise that requires money advances for the next six months. The aggregation of "generals," "colonels," and "commodores" is now devoted to hand shaking. With the light-heartedness characteristic of the country, they do not by any means despair of the whole "steamboat" some time or other, notwithstanding their inability to secure the "gang plank" at present. Many of these Mark Tapleys will go home in the steeage, or work their passage, if need be, rather than confess to poverty.

Letters of credit are looked at askance by everybody. England and the Continent are full of Americans who are really needy. A great many deposited their all in New York before they started on their tours, and they find themselves penniless now. Most of them, however, can get all the money they want by becoming personally liable where they draw. The local banks are helping to that extent, but they will not recognize nor listen to old letters of credit. Meantime sharpers are plying their trade. Self-styled Americans, who never saw the United States, except on a map, are telling doleful tales to kind hearted clergymen and widows all over England, and pocketing a "tidy income," of course.

Rousing the Sleepers.

On the 17th of April, 1725, John Rudge bequeathed twenty shillings a year to the parish of Trysell, Shropshire, to fee a poor man to go about the church and keep the people awake. Less liberal, Richard Dovey, of Farmcote, gave eight shillings to another parish for the same purpose; while in Cheshire the church warden performed this duty. As late as thirty years ago, a wand, forked at one end, so as to catch the nape of the neck, was employed; but, more gallantly, in another place, a fox's brush was at one end for the ladies, while the hard end was applied to the men.

The costly Devastation, the piece de resistance of the English navy, has experienced at last the long-wished for trial of her sea-going qualities. In clearing Eastern Bay, on the west coast of Iceland, she encountered very heavy seas, and her buoyancy elicited universal admiration.

A Submarine Railway.

The Minister of Public Works at Versailles, M. Desseilligny, has addressed a circular to the French prefects regarding the proposal of constructing a submarine railway between England and France. He states that a scheme has been submitted to the two governments by an Anglo-French Company to build a tunnel under the channel of about 34,000 meters long, connected with the railways on each shore by underground lines of about ten kilometers in length, the company asking no pecuniary assistance or guarantee, except the perpetuity of the exclusive right to work the railway and freedom from competition. The English Government replied that it saw no objection to the proposal, except so far as regarded the monopoly, to which it could in no case give its assent. Before any building arrangements were made, the principle of the project should be submitted to public examination. With this view, instructions have been issued to the Prefect of the Pas-de-Calais to open an inquiry, and at the same time the Minister thinks it desirable that a work of this international importance should be placed before the Chamber of Commerce, and he requests the prefects of the different departments to invite the chambers within their jurisdiction to favor him with their views on the project.

Christian-Unity Letter from Bishop Cummins.

A New York dispatch of the 14th inst. says:

The fact that on last Sunday the Dean of Canterbury, England, and Bishop Cummins, of Kentucky, in attendance here at the Evangelical Alliance, joined in the communion services in Presbyterian churches, contrary to the spirit and custom of the Episcopalians, and, as the High-Churchmen allege, in violation of the ecclesiastical order of the Church, has given rise to a spirited controversy among the Episcopalians. The act of the English Dean and the Kentucky Bishop having been publicly animadverted upon, Bishop Cummins has a written a letter vindicating his course and that of the Dean of Canterbury in the matter of their communion in Presbyterian churches. He says: "I deny, most emphatically, that the Dean of Canterbury or myself has violated an ecclesiastical order of the Church of England or of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country, or has been guilty of any open hostility to the discipline. There is nothing in the ecclesiastical order or discipline of the Church of England or of the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country forbidding such an act of inter-communion among Christian people who are in one faith and love, and one in Christ, their great Head. As far as I know, the liberal Episcopalians of New York rejoice in the action of the Dean of Canterbury, and thank God for it. When the Episcopal Church of England and the United States has been able to clear herself (which may God in His infinite mercy soon grant) of the deadly evil of ritualism, whose last development is the revival of the confessional—then, and not till then, may she become a 'haven of rest' to maimed souls, who would rejoice to see her united in one common bond of organic unity to all Protestant Christendom."

Wonderful Fertility of Peruvian Soil.

[Lima Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

In speaking of the wonderful fertility of the soil in Peru, I have never spoken of a little plant, or leaf, they have here, which I never met with in any other place or country. I do not know the botanical name, and I hope that some botanist or savant can give me the name and species. The natives take a simple pale-green leaf, something like a fern, and pin it to the wall with a common pin stuck through it—just pin it on to the plain adobe wall. Sometimes they fasten it up with a tack. The leaf itself is not so large as a geranium-leaf. Incredible as it may seem, from this leaf will spread out tiny tendrils and shoots, and delicate leaves will form, and will spread, and run, and cover the whole wall. I had one in my own side-yard, or corral, that covered the entire side of the wall, and it grew from one small leaf pinned on to the adobe to hold it in place. It becomes a thrifty running vine. I would not believe it possible but that I have seen it repeatedly and successfully tried. In the poorer houses, the natives plant a common comota (or sweet potato) in part of a glass of water, changing the water weekly, and leaving at least half the potato above the water. This glass is then placed in a corner of the room, behind a table-leg or a chair, on the floor, and near the wall. In a fortnight a beautifully green vine shoots from the top of the potato, and runs at will all over the wall, curling its long green tendrils around picture-frames, over curtain-cornices, anywhere you may choose to train it, and often covering and embowering a whole window—for the windows need never be closed for storm or rain. Yet I have repeatedly sent the same kind of potato to my friends in New York and at the West, and, in spite of all my directions and their attentions, the vine would never grow and the plant never flourish. I presume it requires other soil and temperature. I presume it requires other soil and temperature. But this is the country for flowers. Flowers bloom here perpetually, and in great abundance.

Judging by Appearance.

A good story is told by a Yankee editor, in illustration of the folly of judging from appearances. A person dressed in a suit of homespun clothes stepped into a house in Boston, on some business, where several ladies were assembled in an inner room. One of the company remarked in a low tone that a countryman was in waiting, and agreed to have some fun. The following dialogue ensued:

"You're from the country, I suppose?"

"Yes, I'm from the country."

"Well, sir, what do you think of the city?"

"It's got a tarnal sight of houses in it."

"I expect there's a great many ladies where you come from?"

"Oh, yes, a woundy sight; jist for all the world like them," pointing to the ladies.

"And you are quite a beau among them, no doubt."

"Yes, I beaus 'em to meetin' and about."

"Maybe the gentleman will take a glass of wine," said one of the company.

"I thankee; don't care if I do."

"But you must drink a toast."

"I eats toast what aunt Debby makes, but as to drinkin', I never seed the like."

What was the surprise of the company to hear the stranger speak as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen, permit me to wish you health and happiness, with every other blessing the earth can afford, and I advise you to bear in mind that we are often deceived by appearances. You mistook me by my dress for a country booby; I, from the same cause, thought these men were gentlemen. The deception was mutual. I wish you good evening."

Items for Housekeepers.

Alum or vinegar is good to set colors, red, green or yellow.

Sal soda will bleach; one spoonful is sufficient for a kettle of clothes.

Save your suds for the garden and plants, or to harden yards when sandy.

A hot shovel held over varnished furniture will take out spots.

A bit of glue dissolved in skim-milk and water will restore old rusty crape.

Ribbons of any kind should be washed in cold suds and not rinsed.

If flat-irons are rough rub them well with salt, and it will make them smooth.

If you are buying a carpet for durability, you must choose small figures.

A bit of soap rubbed on the hinges of doors will prevent them from creaking.

Scotch snuff, if put in the holes where crickets run out, will destroy them.

Green should be the prevailing color for bed-hangings and window-drapery.

The Tichborne Case.

The London correspondent of the Dundee Advertiser expresses a fear that the Tichborne case will extend to Christmas. The agent for the defendant has given notice to the prosecution of a number of new witnesses. It is said, indeed, that there are over 600 witnesses still to be examined for the defendant. This is, perhaps, an exaggeration, but it appears pretty clear that another two months will be consumed in hearing evidence. Another month would be a moderate allowance for the speeches of counsel and the summing up of the Judge. As showing the public sentiment on the case, the same correspondent adds that Tichborne bonds are in request.

Singular Suicide.

A curious case of suicide occurred in the New Hamshire State Prison at Concord recently. The man had been sentenced for a comparatively short time only, but in order to escape work he resorted to various means for making himself sick. It was found that he had several times been seen to take handfuls of sand, which had fallen to the floor from a sandpaper wheel, and swallow it. The result was fatal.

"PUTS" AND "CALLS."

A WALL STREET IDYL.

For six fair years, good wife of mine,
The world as married folks have known us,
Since first I put my lips to thine,
And gave to thee a ring as Bonus,
It scarcely seems so distant now,
And yet our ages show it, certes;
A matronly Five-Twenty thou,
And I'm amongst the Seven-Thirties.

Perchance when thou, with soothing air,
Hast called me "Duck!" I've been a lame one;
Or when thy mother styled me "Bear!"
I've been a Bull—though quite a tame one;
But if one's Shares of good intent
Are not what he is always large in,
At least I'm sure I never meant
That mine should have too small a Margin.

If e'er, that I was Short in Stock
Of patience, thou hast been a mourner;
Or I'd a Check from thee, to lock
My warmest feelings in a Corner,
Exchange of Notes on the above
Has quickly sped the mood disgusted,
And left us long in bonds of love,
With all our Dif'rences Adjusted.

Nor need I ask, of right,
What in our Days of Grace was proffered,
That thou should'st not Protest at Sight
Of poverty, if Draft were offered.
Thy promise then to bear with all
The chills of fate without a shiver,
In Fixed Security I Call
It's Verbal Contract to Deliver.

That, by a turn of Fortune's wheel,
I'm poorer than a young mechanic,
Is but enough to make us feel,
I'm sure, but merest passing Panic;
And if we can no longer dress
In cloth and silk of costly tissue,
We'll have our children, still, to bless,
Nor ever deem them Over-Issue.

Beyond the city's crowded ranks,
In humbler home and lesser striving,
A hearty Run upon the Banks
May bring our early youth's reviving;
And if the future of my life
Should be the present cloud's revoker,
I'll charge it to the dearest Wife
That ever blest a Broken Broker.

Humorous.

Ladies who light up well at night—Those who have lantern jaws.

A Western paper speaks of a new paper-mill which "will be made of brick 175 feet long."

The editor of a Nevada newspaper gives notice that he cannot be bribed with a five-cent cigar to write five-dollar puffs.

One of the English comic papers says of the system of taxation in that country: "It hardly presses on the rich and presses hardly on the poor."

A colporteur in Kansas was told that "this 'ere region hain't much on Bibles, but if you want to make money bring us out a load of shotguns."

It was once said of a miserly money-lender that he kept a trunk containing his securities near the head of his bed, and lay awake to hear them accumulate interest.

"Sir, I will make you feel the arrows of my resentment." "Ah! Miss, why should I fear your arrows when you never had a beau?" She quivered with rage.

Kate hates mustaches; so much hair
Makes every man look like a bear.
But Nellie, who no thought could fetter,
Blunts out, the more like bears the better,
Because, her pretty shoulders shrugging,
Bears are such glorious chaps for hugging.

First lesson in kissing—The gentleman should be a little the tallest. He should have a clean face, a kind eye, and a mouth full of expression instead of tobacco.

It was an Irish Coroner who, when he was asked how he accounted for an extraordinary mortality in Limerick, replied sadly: "I cannot tell. There are people dying this year that never died before."

A plumber had an Irish lad in his employ, and one day having occasion to use a piece of zinc, ordered him to get one twelve inches square. "Yes, sir," said Pat, "twelve inches square, but how long?"

A Sacramento man was found lying entirely naked on the stairs leading to a club-room, and when being removed by a policeman indignantly exclaimed: "You have no business to enter my room and take me out of bed."

Muslins.

A native woman with her fingers and spindle alone, and a native man with his toes and bamboo loom alone, will spin a thread and finish a piece of muslin which cannot, by the application of the most delicate machinery, be produced outside of India. There is one quality of Dacca muslin, for example, which is termed "woven air." It is made only for kings' daughters. So short is the staple of the raw material, and so brittle are its fibres, that it must be spun by a woman under 25, and before the dew has left the grass in the morning. As a substitute for natural moisture, the evaporation of water from a shallow pan is sometimes used, but the quality of the work in that case is inferior. And yet, though the most delicate and finest of fabrics, a piece of four yards in length by one yard in width often weighs less than one ounce avoirdupois; it is very durable and will wash.

Origin of the Grange.

A writer in Old and New says: The idea of the order of "Patrons of Husbandry" was originally borrowed from an association which for many years had maintained a feeble existence in a community of Scotch farmers in South Carolina. The objects of this Scotch society, so far as can be ascertained, appear to have been the purchase of all needed supplies from first hands and at wholesale rates, and the cultivation of more intimate and social relations among its members; that is, it was a secret co-operative industrial and social association among those already allied by mutual work, interest and sympathy. It was meager in number and narrow in influence to a degree that the fact of its existence was unknown beyond the limits of the little community affected by its institutions.

A Heap of News.

Writing of Manitoba as it was in the olden time, before communication was opened through St. Paul, and when the mail reached the settlement just once in six months, by way of Hudson Bay, Edward Eggleston tells of one enthusiastic resident, who took the London Times, receiving it in half-yearly installments, which he straightway spread out in a heap, oldest paper uppermost. Every morning he took off one paper, and thus kept up the sensation of having fresh news every day. He would lay down his paper in the midst of a battle and save the rest until next morning. He was nearly a year behind the world, but that did not matter—the news was fresh to him.

How a Brahmin Came to be Converted.

After the singing of a hymn, in which the congregation joined with a splendidly varied effect, the Rev. Dr. Sheshadri, a converted Brahmin, was introduced.

Dr. Sheshadri, in his queer costume, was the observed of all observers. He wore a white turban and a white overshirt, which contrasted well with the dark-brown of his face, and a figured dressing gown, a pair of black trousers, and a pair of boots completed his dress. In very excellent English, and with a clear, good voice, which was heard all over the house, save where a few ill-mannered persons were so rude as to drown it with the constant creaking of boots, and rustling of silk, and chattering of tongues. Dr. Sheshadri told how he had been led to abjure Hindooism and adopt Christianity. "For nineteen years," said he, "I was worshipped as God incarnate. Men and women prostrated themselves before me, and I believed that I was God indeed. The Brahmin is one who claims divine honors and receives them. When his people refuse or neglect to accord him such honors, he visits upon them the direst punishment. I had been taught that one of our gods drank down at one gulp all the water of all the oceans. Then I was taught the story of another god—a monkey, whose name was Ram. This god once lost his wife, and he was sore distressed. He sought for the lost one far and wide, but could not find her. At last one day he learned that she had been stolen and taken to the island of Ceylon. Forthwith he wrapped rags around his long tail, saturated them with oil, set them on fire, and visiting Ceylon, burned the whole island. This story was more than I could swallow, and I began to listen to those who were preaching about Christ, and then to study the Christian religion. It was not long before my eyes were opened to the truth. Then I came into the fold, and have labored in it ever since."

Dr. Sheshadri's speech was the feature of the evening. He was listened to attentively, and when he closed was greeted with a round of applause.—New York Sun's Account of Evangelical Alliance.

Fashion Notes.

BUGLE trimming is in fashion again.

JET is extensively used to ornament bonnets.

HIGH collars and Stanley scarfs are still the go.

IN gentlemen's fashions there is little, if any, change.

ON imported suits the polonaise and basque back is revived.

PURPLE will be one of the popular winter colors; also plum.

WALKING jackets of dark blue navy cloth are among novelties.

THE redingote appears in all the new costumes. In black velvet it is very elegant and stylish.

AMONG laces Valenciennes remains the favorite. It is a trifle more expensive this year than last.

LADIES are wearing overskirts sufficiently light to the figure to make caricatures of themselves.

POWDERED hair will be en regle for full dress occasions, as 'tis "all the rage" just now in Paris.

RUFFS and wristlets of every possible and imaginable style are now seen, from Valenciennes to white calico.

WHITE tulle, mull and India muslin will be the material most generally used for bridal costumes next winter.

PHYSICIANS have declared war against the white vail, dotted with black. They are said to be injurious to the eyes.

THE Elizabethan ruff is gradually growing higher and higher, and ultimately the ladies' heads will be hid from view.

BANDS of wide, black velvet, sewed down the front breadth of walking suits, is a style just introduced in New York.

SASHES are edged with wide lace and tied, as before, on the left side. Very wide watered ribbon should be worn, and the ladies say it is economy to buy the best.

A Dead Shot.

A Western paper describes the feat of a noted marksman, who, while engaged in a deer hunt, and occupying a stand, the rest of the party being employed in a drive, three fine deer, running abreast, were passing his stand, when he fired, killing two of them dead and severely wounding the third. It was a fine shot, undoubtedly, and one of which Natty Banks might have been proud. But a friend of ours, saw a better shot still, made by a naval officer on the bank of the Perdido river, in Alabama. A party of navy men, including four old Commodores, all of whom are now dead, went from the yard at Pensacola over to the Perdido on a hunt. A fine pack of hounds was turned loose, and the Commodores were placed in the most eligible positions for enjoying the sport, the host, who was remarkable for his skill with a gun, taking a post on one side, prepared to pick off any straggling deer that might come near him. The dogs soon gave tongue, starting several deer, but they ran wild, none of them coming near enough to either of the old sailors for a shot. Presently they saw a fine buck running rapidly in a direction that would bring him within easy range of the solitary gentleman, who was trying to amuse his guests. While they were waiting, full of excitement, expecting to hear him shoot, they saw another deer coming from an opposite direction, and taking a course that must bring them together near his stand. As they met he fired, and with the same rifle ball killed them both, and they fell not much more than a yard apart.—New York Sun.

Old Soldiers.

Gen. Manteuffel, who commanded the German army of occupation in France, has just been made a Field Marshal. Although 60, he is the youngest of the German Field Marshals, if the Crown Princes of Prussia and Saxony and Prince Frederick Charles be excepted. Count Moltke was nearly 70 when he received the baton at the end of the war, and Count von Roon was about the same age.—The two other Marshals, Herwarth and Steinmetz, are even older.

THE LATEST TRIUMPH OF TEMPERANCE.—We congratulate the temperance world on the success everywhere attending the use of VINEGAR BITTERS. Certainly no preparation containing alcohol has accomplished such cures of malarious fever, biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, lung complaints, constipation, and general debility, as we hear of from all quarters as the results of this famous vegetable specific. No true philanthropist will regret to see spirituous liquors expelled from medical use, if they can be safely dispensed with; and that they are not necessary in any case of sickness, whatever its character, appears at last to have been demonstrated. If public opinion is capable of making any impression upon the minds of the Faculty, they will ere long introduce the most popular of modern medicines into the hospitals, and prescribe it in their practice. The millions have given the article a fair trial; it has more than answered their expectations, and no theoretical opposition can shake their faith in it. 13

WHEN MONEY is scarce and times are hard, then, if ever, there is need of life insurance. Low rates should be sought, however, coupled with adundant security, and these are offered by the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America, E. A. Rollins, President. Branch office at Philadelphia. Agents wanted everywhere. No better company can be found.

RAILROAD CONDUCTORS should wear the Elmwood or Warwick collar; because they will keep clean longer and look better than any other.—[Com.

A WORD IN SEASON.—At this season many of our readers will be making up lists of publications for which to subscribe with the new year, and every one should take the Milwaukee Monthly. It is an excellent and popular magazine, and although largely made up of original and entertaining stories, each number contains many short, readable articles on varied and important subjects. A Fashion Department, finely illustrated, and talk upon every subject pertaining to house and home, which make it a valuable book for ladies. All manner of charming and useful things are given for premiums to clubs. Send stamp for specimen copy, sent free. Address,

DR. R. V. PIERCE: For the past six months I have used your Golden Medical Discovery in my practice, and in that time I have tested its merits in severe coughs, both acute and chronic, in chronic diseases of the throat, severe cases of bronchitis, general derangement of the system, constipated condition of the bowels, and wherever a thorough Alterative or blood purifier has been indicated. In all cases I have found it to act gently yet thoroughly and effectually in removing the various diseased conditions, and bringing about a healthy action throughout the system.

DR. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT RESTORES THE HAIR.—It seems to magnetize the scalp, removing all dandruff and roughness of surface, giving it a brilliant gloss. It should be applied once in 24 hours, brushed in with a soft brush.

It will greatly promote the growth and luxuriousness of the hair. It makes a superb hair dressing; for this purpose it may be perfumed with Bergamot or any of the essential oils.—[Com.

THE PUREST AND SWEETEST COD-LIVER OIL is Hazard & Caswell's, made on the sea shore, from fresh, selected livers, of the Cod only, by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York. Ayer's Ague Cure,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or misasmatic poisons,

℞ Has been widely used, during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chills and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery or Debility follows the cure. Indeed, where disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints it is an excellent remedy.

DR. RADWAY'S

SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

Tumor of 12 Years' Growth Cured by RADWAY'S RESOLVENT.

PRICE $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

What Foolish Ideas are entertained by many persons in regard to purgatives. It seems that there are persons who think they cannot be cured of bilious complaints without purging themselves until the "internal machinery" is almost destroyed. Now the facts are these: A mild corrective that will stimulate the liver to healthy action is what is wanted in cases of this kind, and the experience of many years has proven that Dr. Smith's Celebrated Old Style Bitters is the best remedy known to produce this effect. It not only acts on the liver but purifies the blood, and so regulates the entire working machinery of the system upon a correct and scientific principle as to produce healthy and vigorous action, causing a free and natural flow of all torpid and stagnant bilious collections, and at once restoring those who will use it to full health and vigor. It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that every family should keep on hand and use this the best remedy known for bilious complaints. For sale by all Druggists. Address Union Medicine Co., Nos. 6 and 8 North Second-st., St. Louis, Mo.

As a pain killer there is nothing to equal Dr. Smith's Golden Liniment. There is no pain it will not subdue, no cramp it will not cure. It is equally good for Man or Beast. Try it; try it; try it.

ROSADALIS

ROSADALIS

THE GREAT ALTERATIVE AND BLOOD PURIFIER.

It is not a quack nostrum. The ingredients are published on each bottle of medicine. It is used and recommended by Physicians wherever it has been introduced. It will positively cure SCROFULA in its various stages, RHEUMATISM, WHITE SWELLING, GOUT, GOITRE, BRONCHITIS, NERVOUS DEBILITY, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood. Send for our ROSADALIS ALMANAC, in which you will find certificates from reliable and trustworthy Physicians, Ministers of the Gospel and others.

Dr. R. Wilson Carr, of Baltimore, says he has used it in cases of Scrofula and other diseases with much satisfaction.

Dr. T. C. Pugh, of Baltimore, recommends it to all persons suffering with diseased Blood, saying it is superior to any preparation he has ever used.

Rev. Dabney Ball, of the Baltimore M. E. Conference South, says he has been so much benefitted by its use, that he cheerfully recommends it to all his friends and acquaintances.

Craven & Co., Druggists, at Gordonsville, Va., say it never has failed to give satisfaction.

Sam'l G. McFadden, Murfreesboro', Tennessee, says it cured him of Rheumatism when all else failed.

THE ROSADALIS IN CONNECTION WITH OUR

KROMER'S ANTI-BILIOUS PILLS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

CONSUMPTION And Its Cure.

WILLSON'S

Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

The Sun.

NEW YORK, 1873-4. WEEKLY, SEMI-WEEKLY, AND DAILY.

THE WEEKLY SUN is too widely known to require any extended recommendation; but the reasons which have already given it fifty thousand subscribers, and which will, we hope, give it many thousands more, are briefly as follows:

It is a first-rate newspaper. All the news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment, and always presented in a clear, intelligible, and interesting manner.

It is a first-rate family paper, full of entertaining and instructive reading of every kind, but containing nothing that can offend the most delicate and scrupulous taste.

It is a first-rate story paper. The best tales and romances of current literature are carefully selected and legibly printed in its pages.

It is a first-rate agricultural paper. The most fresh and instructive articles on agricultural topics regularly appear in this department.

It is an independent political paper, belonging to no party, and wearing no collar. It fights for principle, and for the election of the best men to office. It especially devotes its energies to the exposure of the great corruptions that now weaken and disgrace our country, and threaten to undermine republican institutions altogether. It has no fear of knaves, and asks no favors from their supporters.

It reports the fashions for the ladies, and the markets for the men, especially the cattle markets, to which it pays particular attention.

Finally, it is the cheapest paper published. One dollar a year will secure it for any subscriber. It is not necessary to get up a club in order to have THE WEEKLY SUN at this rate. Any one who sends a single dollar will get the paper for a year.

THE WEEKLY SUN.—Eight pages, fifty-six Columns. Only $1.00 a year, no discounts from this rate.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY SUN.—Same size as the Daily Sun, $2.00 a year. A discount of 20 per cent. to Clubs of 10 or over.

THE DAILY SUN.—A large four page newspaper of twenty-eight Columns. Daily Circulation over 120,000. All the news for 2 cents. Subscription price 50 cents a month, or $6 a year. To Clubs of 10 or over, a discount of 20 per cent.

The Greatest Cattle Raiser in the world.

Samuel W. Allen, a native of Kentucky, who has resided from infancy in Texas, and is now a citizen of Harris county, in that state, is the largest cattle raiser in the world. He is the owner of the following ranches: First Rancho Grande—the largest on the continent—embraces an area eighty miles long and forty wide, and lies between the Colorado and Nevada rivers, extending through the counties of Matagorda, Lavacca and Jackson. On this one ranche alone Mr. Allen herds 120 000 cattle. 2. The Home Ranche, situated in Harris county, pastures 60.000, and includes an area of a little less than half that of the Ranche Grande. 3. The San Berar do Ranch is in Fort Bend county, and pastures 35,000, making a grand total of two hundred and fifty thousand (250,000) head of cattle owned and handled by one man, and subsisted and fattened upon the native grasses and spontaneous growth of a comparatively small section of the great territory of Texas. Besides the prodigious number of cattle, there are 3,000 horses which are kept constantly in use by herders and branders, of whom at least four hundred are employed by Mr. Allen at good wages, At a low estimate of ten dollars per head, the value of Mr. Allen's cattle may be put down at $60,000; making a total valuation of 5,560,000. Sixty thousand calves are cranded by him every year to keep up the supply. These amounts represent the capital of the chief meat purveyor of beef for the city of New Orlean and the adjacent counties of the Gulf Coast, without estimating the value of his lands, which are more than ducal in extent if not in value.

* * *

The Record of Marshall Bazaine, who is now on trial, was a very brilliant one before the German war. He entered the army in 1831, at the age of 20, and in the following year so distinguished himself for bravery in Africa that he received the cross of the Legion of Honor on the field. In the Crimean war he had command of a brigade of infantry, and for his conduct at the seige of Sebastopol was made a Division General. In 1863 he had the dignity of Commander of the Legion of Honor conferred on him, subsequently received the Grand Cross. In 1894, he took command of the Mexican expedition, succeeding Gen. Forey, and was in command of one of the main divisions of the French army when the Franco-Prussian war commenced. It will be a sad end, however, to his military brilliancy if he is declared guilty of the charges against him, which can only be expiated by death.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Being under my immediate direction, they shall not lose their curative qualities by the use of cheap and impure articles.

DISTRESS IN WASHINGTON.

The ruinous failure of the First National Bank and the suspension of the National Metropolitan and five other banks have produced a most serious state of things in this community, where the banking capital is limited, and the people at the best are dependent upon restricted resources.

All the solvent banks have been obliged by the pressure to confine their discounts of favors within the closest lines, so that the derangement has fallen upon the strong as well as the weak.

One neccessary effect of this abnormal condition is to stop the payment of all taxes, which is not a subject of regret, as it must react on the District Government, and perhaps help to bring about relief from Congress in some substantial form.

The large discount allowed for prompt payment of taxes was operating with some success when the crash came, and perhaps one-fourth of the total was collected during the month of August and a part of September Now, the gates are shut down tightly and are not likely to be soon reopened

Certain class of certificates are receivable for special assessments, but although they have fallen to half their nominal value there is neither disposition nor abilty to profit by the opportunity to get rid of a most obnoxious and oppressive form of taxation.

In spite of all this Shephard and his crew are going on as if they were willing or able to pay, when their treasury is notoriously bankrupt. Contractors cannot meet a fourth of their engagements, and there is no market for District bonds, certificates or obligations of any kind.

The sole reliance of the Ring is upon Congress, and their hope is fortified by the immense success of last winter when nearly four millions were obtained in six weeks. They have induced the President to believe that every attack on their corruption is moved only by political hostility to him and to his Administration.

Hence it is proposed to make the new scheme for bleeding the Treasury an Administration measure, in the expectation that it will command more favor when reccommended In the message. As the President endorsed the illegal conduct of Babcock at San Domingo when he assumed to make a convention with Baez by which the President was committed to use his influence with Congress for annexation, it is not doubted that he will sustain him and his corrupt confederates now.

The only finished part of the city is in the new northwestern end, which is almost entirely without population A Ring was formed, to include various Senators and Representatives, for the purchase of that outlying district. When the property was secretly bought at the lowest rates, then the plan was disclosed.

Streets and avenues were opened in all directions, paved with concrete or or wood, railroad lines connected with Georgetown and the extreme points of Washington, gas and water introduced and everything else that the use or usurpation of power could accomplish In fact the whole force was thrown there in order to make the speculation an immediate success.

The cost of this immense work falls mainly upon the body of tax payers who have no interest in the job, and upon the National Treasury for all the avenues of reservations, which have been thus improved for the benefit of these venal jobbers.

Other parts of the city have been maltreated with the grossest outrage and partiality. At the approach of winter, when it would be wholly impracticable, with abundant means, to complete the works that have been begun and laid out, the Board of Public Works have cut down streets three five, eight, and even ten feet, destroying hundreds of fine residences and valuable property, without a color of reason but shameless jobbery.

They contrived these operations so that the streets shall remain in this chaotic condition until spring, for no other reason than to coerce legislation. Last year when the first raid was made on the Treasury a cry was raised that the poor laborers were starving at Christmas, because the Government had not paid the contractors.

A million and a quarter was obtained by that clamor, and two-thirds of the whole sum was appropriated by Cooke and his rotten banks to redeem the certificates which they held and had shaved at exorbitant discount.

It is intended to repeat this game on a larger scale, if Congress will venture to plunder the Treasury again for the benefit of an organized gang of theives. Although it was expressly conditione, when the first money was voted last January, that no work on public property should be undertaken without the previous authority of Congress, Babcock, acting in collusion with the Ring, has permitted them to go on recklessly, and to repave streets in front of public building that were only put down in the last twelve months and paid for in July.

As Gen. Babcock is wholly indifferent to the exposures which have been made effecting his integrity as a public officer, and as an officer of the army has not asked for a court of inquiry. Congress cannot hesitate to ardeo an investigation as soon as the committees shall be announced.

The public work must be remeasured strictly in every part by the best military and civil engineers, to be named in a resolution for that purpose. In that way only can the truth be reached. There must be no whitewashing or partisan engineering. The people are entitled to know if their money was stolen, and how it was done if frauds were committed.

This District Government is as rotten as the First National Bank The Governor of the one and the President of the other were appropriately united in the person of Henry D. Cooke. But if it is to be abolished, care must be taken that this vile Ring ascendancy shall not be perpetuated by a mere change of names. That is the great danger to be guarded against, since the President's appointment of Shepherd in defiance of public opinion and his shameless endorsement of the outrages perpetrated here right under his own eye.

If a commission to govern the District is to be substituted for the existinh oligarchy, then let the names of the men who are to compose it be inserted in the bill, so that they may be known and discussed before Congress becomes committed to another experiment.

DEADLY STRUGGLE ON A TIGHT ROPE.

Little did the tens of thousands of men, women and children who thronged the public sbuare of Agram, Caoatia, on the 15th of August. anticipate that they were about to witness a spectacle such as has, perhaps, never been seen before—a mortal struggle in mid-air. The occasion of the gathering was a performance on the tight rope. The acrobats, Andreas Kolter and Francis Perogwitch, were to appear on the rope, which had been stretched from a window in the fifth story of the court house to a window in an opposite house, a distance of 250 feet. The acrobats were to meet each other mid way, and then to pass each other. When the clock struck twelve, the acrobats emerged from their respective windows, dressed in tights, and without balance poles. Kolter walked rather cautiously, while Perogwitch came to meet him from the opposite direction, with a nervous, quick step. At last they met, and the suspense of of the crowd underneath changed the next moment to a feeling of indescrible horror. Perogwitch suddenly uttered an angry exclamation, and dealt Kolter a terrible blow on the head. Kolter staggered and fell, but in so doing succeeded in clutching the rope with one hand, while with the other he grasped the leg of his assailant. Pergowitch now feel likewise, but passed his right arm around the rope, so that he hung upon it in comparative security. And now began a life and death struggle. Kolter, with his right hand, tried to drag Pergowitch from the rope, Pergowitch kicked Kolter with his right foot, and with his left hand endeavored to loosen his antagonist's hold. No one was able to interfere, and the result it was easy to forsee, must be the death of one or both the acrobats. Many women fainted, while strong men wept like children. What added to the general despair was the appearance of Kolser' young wife at the open window from which her husband a few moments before had set out upon his fatal walk. Her piteous screams were heard above the din below, and her appeals to Pergowitch to spare her husband's life would have moved the heart of an Apache. The struggle in mid air lasted perhaps a minute, when Kolter suddenly uttered a last cry and lost his hold. He fell to the ground striking it violently, and expired instantly. While the people gathered around the corpse of poor Kolter, his murderer on the rope managed to get on his feet again. With a diabolical expression on his face he uttered a yell of triumph.

The Prefect of Police ordered Pergowitch to surrender. In case he should not do so in five minutes, he would be shot down like a dog. Finally he raised himself to his feet and ran quickly to the court house window, where he surrendered, begging that he might be protected from violence. There was great danger of his being executed by the people, who who loudly clamored that the murderer be given up to them; but the military, by a bayonet charge, cleared the public square Pergowitch being asked what caused him to perpetrate the crime, said that there had been a grudge between himself and Kolter, ever since the latter had married young Rosita Serganoff, a Polish girl of rare beaty. Kolter in a fit of jealously, had told him he knew one or the other of them must die on this account.

Andreas Kolter was the youngest member of the distinguished family of acrobats of that name.

DOT MONISH.

[From the St. Louis Republican.]

"Ware ish der gasheer?" ejaculated the breathless Teuton, as he bounded up the steps and into the door.

A courtly gentleman made the bland response, "I am the cashier, sir. What can I do for you to-day?"

"What can you do vor me? Sacrament! Dot ish a h—ll ut a node, aind it? Do vor me? Heer Gott donnerwetter und seifenblasen! I wants dot monish—mine god, vot I make depost with this tam bank poorty soon last summer und—"

"We have temporarily suspended payment, sir, by an arrangement similar——"

"Arrangement similar, der suyvel!" broke in our Teutonic friend. "Vot do I vant mit your tampt arrangements? I vants dat monish—five thousand dollers vat I make deposit here all der vile, und I vants him poorty quick too, oof you don't vants some droobles right away."

"Calm yourself, my friend, and let us think this matter over. I shall be glad to certify your checks for your balance with us. and—"

"Cerdify nodings! Vat you tinks I vas a tam fool? Here! here! (pounding the counter frantically with his fist,) I vant dot monish—dot gold—sferg cent. und I vants him right avay queek, owdt oder I make you a heap o' droobles pooty soon! Geet me dot monish—dot monish—dot ish all vot I vant! Make him owdt queek und I goes righd avay off, und you can go mit der tuyvel und your tam pank!

Seeing there was no way of reasoning with his excited customer, the the cashier turned to his paying teller and said, "Mr.——, cash this man's check for his balance is full."

The Chicago dealer in "sheep cloding" nervously drew up the check and the urbane teller counted out the sum called for. The Teuton drew in one good, long, breath, counted his money carefully, put it in his breast pocket, and went his way a happy man. The cashier went back to his office and had been seated their some minutes, when the prominent nasal appendage of his Teutonic customer again overshadowed the counter, and his voice was again heard; "Mr. Gasheer, I vood like to shpeek mit you somedings."

Thinking that perhaps his customer had recovered from his fright and desired to deposite his funds the cashier responded quickly and came forward to the counter.

"Well, sir," said he, "what is the matter now"

"Vell, you see, ven I hear aboud dis ding mit der banks I vas in Shecago, und I must koomed rihgt avay quick und I dinks dot it vill be all righd ven you bay my leedle expense down here und pack home und—"

"Pay your expenses," broke in the cashier. "Pay your expenses. Well that is an idea, to be sure. See here my friend, how many brass bands do you suppose could be supplied with instruments from that check of yours, and then have bronze enough left to make an equestrian statute of Jim Fisk? About how many six gun batteries of twelve pound Napolean howitzers were melted down to make that check anyhow?"

The excited individul, from Chicago eyed his interlocutor with the injured air of one who thinks he has been refused a very reasonable request, and then sadly preceded his coat tails out of the bank. He had gut his money.

Fathers of girls whose suitors are guilty of the detestable practice of shilly-shallying, now require a bont that the marriage shall take placed within a certain time. It must be a rather difficult matter though, to selec just the critical stage of the courtship when the young man will be in a mood to respond to such a demand.

It appears that there has been a ground swell the other way in Ohio and Iowa this year.

OLD FARMER BROWN.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

From the harvest-field, old Farmer Brown came home with a look of care
He threw his hat on the floor, and sat down in his old splint-bottomed chair;
He wiped the sweat from his dripping brow, and pulled out his old jack-knife;
He whittled away to himself awhile, and called to his little wife.
From her quaint and tidy kitchen, she came through the open door,
With her sleeves pinned up to her shoulders and her skirt pinned up before.
She looked as faded, wrinkled and worn as the folds of her pingham-gown,
When she saw the haggard and hopeless look on the face of Farmer Brown.
Then down in her rocking-chair she sank, in a sort of a helpless way,
Nor spoke one word, but listened and looked to hear what he might say.

"Hannah, I'm sick a-livin' here, an' a-workin' from spring to fall
A-raisin' 'taters an' corn to sell, that don't bring nothin' at all.
Here we have worked together for forty years like a pair of slaves,
An' that old mortgage ain't lifted yet that I owe to Gideon Graves.
That judgment-note o' Deacon Dunn's will soon be a fallin' due,
An' where the money's a-comin' from, why, I can't tell, nor you.
I'm kept in sech a worry an' fret by all of these sort o' things,
That I have to sell the stuff that I raise right off for what it brings.
It costs so much for my taxes now, an' to keep the wolf away,
That I haven't no chance to make a cent, an' that is what's to pay.
Hannah, we've both on us grown old, an' our children all are gone;
There is no one now that is left at home for us to depend upon.
I ain't as strong as I used to be, nor as able to work, I know;
But I've got to set these matters square, an' the farm'll have to go.

"Half o' the world lives idle, with plenty to eat an' wear,
An' the ones who work the hardest have often the least to spare.
The farmers work till their forms are bent, an' their hands are hard an' brown;
The workmen delve in the dust an' smoke o' the workshops in the town;
The sturdy sailors bring to our shores the wealth o' foreign lands;
An' the other half o' the world subsists by the work o' these hardened hands.
An' this is one o' the reasons why I can't pay what I owe,
While you an' I are a-gettin' old, an' the farm'll have to go.

"I've worked in the woods in the winter-time, I've plowed an' sowed in the spring,
I've hoed and dug through summer and fall, an' I haven't made a thing.
Sometimes I lie awake all night, an' worry, an' fuss, an' fret,
An' never a single wink o' sleep nor a bit o' rest I get.
I think o' our grown-up children, an' the life they've jest begun;
They've got to hoe the same hard row as you and I have done.
I think o' the politicians, an' the way they rob an' steal,
An', the more I think o' farmin', the poorer it makes me feel.
The speculators buy up our cheese, our butter, our wool an' hay,
An' they sell 'em again for more'n twice as much as they had to pay.
They bleed us in transportation, they fleece us everywhere;
They cheat us on our provisions an' the very clothes we wear.
They live in their lofty houses, on the best that can be found,
Their wives wear dazzlin' diamonds, an' their children loaf around;
In the summer they go to the seashore an' the springs to make a show,
An' that is the way our butter an' cheese an' our corn an' 'taters go.

"We work in the sun all summer, raise turnips an' corn on shares,
That the railroads an' politicians may cheat us an' put on airs.
They carry the reins o' power, an' will till we fill our graves;
They rule an' ruin the markets, an' we are a pack o' slaves.
What's to be done? God only knows. I've failed in many ways
In tryin' to lay a leetle by to ease my declinin' days.
I never have been a shiftless man; I've figgered; I've worked an' tried,
While the old farm's been a-runnin' down since the day father died.
I've borrowed money to pay my debts, an' I've watched the interest grow,
Till it fairly got the start o' me, an' the farm'll have to go."

Then the little wife of Farmer Brown stood up upon the floor,
And she looked at him in a kind of way that she never had before.
The furrows fled from her shriveled cheeks and her face grew all aglow,
"I never will sign the deed, John, an' the farm shall never go.
There's jest one thing to be done, as sure as you an' I are born;
You must join the GRANGE an' vote, John, if you would sell your corn.
Hope an' prayer are good, John, for the man who digs an' delves,
But Heaven will never help us, John, unless we help ourselves.
I ain't as chipper an' smart an' spry, nor as strong as I used to be,
But I've got a heap o' spunk, John, when it's started up in me."

Over the old man's furrowed face the tears began to flow.
He never had felt more proud and strong since their wedding long ago;
A golden gleam of heavenly hope illumined his soul's despair,
And, kneeling down on the time-worn floor, both bowed their heads in prayer.

—Our Fireside Friend.

WHY I EXCHANGED.

Some five years ago I was a subaltern, in a marching regiment, and quartered in a large garrison town in England. My duties consisted of the usual round of morning and afternoon parades, visiting the men's dinners and teas, and other regular work. In addition to this we had, occasionally, to mount guard, and to pass twenty-four hours in a sort of half imprisonment.

It is one of the regulations of the service that when officers or men are on guard they should always be in a state of readiness to "fall in" on parade in a moment's notice. If you feel very sleepy and desire rest, you must take it while you are buttoned up to the throat and strapped down at the heels; a lounge in an arm chair, or probably a little horizontal refreshment upon a sofa, is the extent of rest which an officer on guard is supposed to indulge in.

Among my brother subalterns in garrison it was our usual practice to infringe upon this strict letter of the law; and when the principal part of our duty had been accomplished we used to indulge ourselves by divesting our limbs of their armor, and seeking refreshment between the sheets of a little camp bed that was placed in the inner guard-room.

It was a part of the duties of an officer on guard to visit all the sentries during the night, the time for visiting them being usually an hour or so after the field officer had visited the guard; the field officer being Colonel or Major who was on duty for the day, and who came once by day and once by night to see the guards and to see that all was as it should be. There was no exact limit to the number of times that the field officer might visit the guards, but it was the usual thing, and had become almost a custom, for him to come once a day and once by night, so that after the last visit the subaltern usually waited an hour or so, walked round the limits of his post, visited all his sentries, and then turned into bed.

It was a bitter cold morning in January that my turn for guard came on. I marched my men to the post, relieved the old guard, and then, having gone through the regular duty and dined, endeavored to pass the time until the field officer had visited me. The previous evening I had been at a ball in town, and in consequence was very tired and sleepy, and looked with considerable longing to the period when I could refresh myself by disrobing and enjoying a good snooze.

At length I heard the welcome challenge, "Who comes there?" which was answered by the response, "Grand rounds," and "Guard, turn out!" was a signal which I willingly obeyed, for I knew that in an hour afterward I should be in the arms of the god of sleep.

Slipping on my cloak and cap, and grasping my sword, I placed myself in front of the guard and received the field officer, who briefly asked me if everything was correct, directed me to dismiss my guard, and rode off without saying "Good night," a proceeding that I thought rather formal.

Giving directions to the sergeant to call me in an hour, for the purpose of visiting the sentries, I threw myself into my arm chair and tried to read a novel. The time passed very quickly, as I had a nap or two, and the sergeant soon appeared with a lantern to conduct me round the sentries.

It was a terrible night, the wind blowing hard, while the snow and sleet were driving along before it. The thermometer was several degrees below freezing, and I felt that I deserved much from my country for performing so conscientiously my arduous duties. The sentries were very much scattered, and I had to walk nearly two miles to visit them all. I accomplished my task, however, and returned to the guard-room, where I treated myself to a stiff glass of grog, and throwing off my regimentals I jumped into bed, feeling that really deserved the luxury.

In a few moments I was fast asleep, not even dreaming of any of my fair partners of the ball, but sound sleep. Suddenly I became conscious of a great noise, which sounded like a drum being beaten.

At first I did not realize my position, and could not remember where I was, but at last it flashed across me that I was on guard, and that something was the matter. Jumping out of bed, I called to know who was there.

The Sergeant answered in a great hurry, saying:

"Sir, the field officer of the day is coming, and the guard is turning out." I rushed to my boots, pulled them on over my unstockinged feet; thrust my sword-arm into my large regimental cloak, which I pulled over me; jammed my forage cap on my head, and, grasping my sword, looked to the outward observer as though "fit for parade."

I was just in time to receive the field officer, who again asked me if my guard was correct. I answered, rather in a tone of surprise, and said: "Yes, sir, all correct."

I could not imagine why my guard should be visited twice, as such a proceeding was unusual, and perhaps my tone seemed to imply that I was surprised. Whether it was that, or whether a treacherous gust of wind removed the folds of my cloak and exhibited the slightest taste in life in the end of the night-shirt, I know not; but the field officer, instead of riding off when he received my answer, turned his horse's head in the opposite direction and said:

"Now, sir, I want you to accompany me around the sentries."

Had he told me that he wanted me to accompany him to the regions below I should scarce have been more horror-struck, for already I had found the change of temperature between a warm bed in a warm room, and the outside air—and to walk two miles on a windy, frosty night, with no raiment besides boots, night-shirt, and cloak, was really suffering for one's country and no mistake.

I dared not show the slightest hesitation, however, for fear the state of my attire might be suspected, though I would have given a week's pay to have escaped for only five minutes. A non-commissioned officer was ready with a lantern, and we started on our tour of inspection.

The field officer asked several questions connected with the position and duties of the sentries, to which I gave answers as well as the chattering of my teeth would permit me. The most nervous work, however, was passing the gas-lamps, which were placed at intervals of one or two hundred yards. The wind was blowing so fresh that it was with difficulty I could hold my cloak around me, and conceal the absence of my undergarments. Every now and then an extra gust of wind would come round a corner, and quite defeat all the precautions which I had adopted to encounter the steady gale. I managed to dodge in the shades as much as possible, and more than once ran the risk of being kicked by the field officer's horse, as I slunk behind him when the gas might have revealed too much.

It was terribly cold, to be sure, the wind and snow almost numbing my limbs. I had a kind of faint hope that the field officer might think that I belonged to a Highland regiment, and if he did observe the scantiness of my attire, might believe that that kilt would explain it. I struggled and shivered on, knowing that all things must have an end, and that my "rounds" must come to end before long. But I feared that I could not again get warm during the night.

We had nearly completed our tour, and were within a few hundred yards of the guard-room, when we passed the field officer's quarters. I fondly hoped that he would not pass them, and that he would dismiss me at the door, but I was rather surprised to see a blaze of light come from the windows, and to hear the sound of music. It was evident that there was a "hop" going on inside, and I already began to tremble from a sort of instinct that even worse misfortune was yet to attend me.

My premonitions were true, for upon reaching his door my persecutor, in a cheerful tone, said:

"Well, we've had a cold tour; you must come in and take a glass of wine, and perhaps a waltz will warm you."

"I'm really much obliged," I hastily answered, "but I should not like to leave my guard."

"Nonsense, nonsense, man—the guard will be all right; you must come in."

This "must" he said in quite a determined tone.

I felt desperate, and again declared that I thought I should be wrong to leave my guard.

"I'll take the responsibilty," said the demon; "so come along;" saying which, he grasped my arm, and almost dragged me into the porch of his quarters.

When we entered the house and were exposed to the light of the hall lamps, I fancied I saw a slight twinkle in the eye of the officer, and I began to wonder whether he really knew of my predicament, and wished to have his joke. He gave no other intimation, however, that I saw, but quickly took off his cloak, and said that I had better do the same. Seeing me hesitate, he said, "Come, look alive; off with it."

Further remonstrance I found would be useless, so that there was no help for me but a full confession. Summoning my courage, and fearing to hesitate, I blurted out, "Colonel, I've no trowsers on."

"The deuce you haven't!" he said. "Well, you'd better go and put them on, and then come here as soon as possible, and have a glass of something warm."

I rushed out of the quarters, half determined not to return. I was fully awake now, and shivered like a half-drowned dog; but no sooner had I dressed myself than the Colonel came over to say that a quadrille was waiting for me.

I determined to put a bold face on the matter, and entered the drawing-room, where a party of about fifty had assembled. It was evident by the titters of the young ladies, the grins of the men, and the subdued smiles of the dowagers that my story was known.

The Colonel had told it as a good joke to the Major, who had whispered it to his wife, she had breathed it into the ear of two of her friends, and in about ten minutes every person in the room knew a young subaltern had unwillingly gone his rounds in his night-shirt.

As long as I stayed in that garrison I was a standing joke. When the girls saw me they always looked away and smiled, and it seemed as impossible for me to obtain a serious answer from any of them as for a clown to preach a sermon. They even seemed to be afraid to dance with me, fearing, as I afterwards heard, to look at my legs, lest I might be deficient in some article of raiment.

I soon exchanged and went into another regiment; and years afterwards I heard my own adventure related in a crowded drawing-room, all the details of the story being true except the name of the prisoner—my misfortune having been attributed to an unfortunate fall.

I never went to bed on guard after that night.—Charing Cross.

A Girl Murdered and Packed in a Trunk.

A letter from Rio Janeiro gives particulars of a murder in Maranhan of a young girl by Judge Pontes Visqueiro, aged 65. The Judge, it seems, was infatuated by the girl, who was only 16 years of age. Proving unfaithful to him, as he thought, he became greatly enraged against her, but left the place for a year, that he might forget her. On returning, accompanied by a man employed to assist in the murder, he enticed the girl to his rooms, and, as she entered, she was seized by the accomplice, who choked and gagged her. The Judge then compelled her to inhale chloroform, and when she fell insensible he stabbed her repeatedly, and almost severed the head from the body, and bit her savagely in his rage. Some time before the Judge provided himself with zinc lining for a traveling case, and into this case the body, all broken, was forced, and the cover carefully soldered down. In a day or two the girl was missed, when the Judge's house was searched by the police, and in the garden in the rear of the premises the body was found interred. Four persons supposed to have been concerned in the horrible affair were arrested, but the Judge, owing to his exalted station, could only be placed under survellance at the time.

Use for Fruit, Vegetable and Oyster Cans.

Throw them in the fire, and let them unsolder. They will spring open about one inch. Punch holes through each of the four corners, large enough. Take a piece of twine, put through the holes and tie the can together. Set it on a piece of board or shingle cut just large enough for it to rest upon. Fill up the can with prepared soil, and you have a superb pot, or can, to start flowers or other plants in. When your plant is large enough to put out, dig a hole large enough to set the can in; take away the bottom, set the can in it, cut the strings, and the can springs open; slip it up over your plant, fill up with dirt, and your plant won't know it has been disturbed. The old way, we sometimes ruin the plants by jarring the spots to loosen the dirt, so that it will come out. With the cans I have never lost any, nor even checked their growth in the least. I even start poppy, larkspur, etc., in them.

TITLES.—An anecdote on "Titles in the United States," which Mr. Jefferson used to tell in relation to the subject, which is authentic, is too good to be lost. The anecdote has been repeated by one who has heard Mr. Jefferson mention it. In the convention for forming the Constitution of the United States, it was proposed that titles should be given to high officers of the Government, and the proposition met with favor. The discussion of the subject had gone on for some time, when Mr. Franklin arose, and with great apparent gravity remarked: "That as this matter seemed to be seriously entertained, and might be carried, he had to suggest one title which would be new and appropriate—it was a title for Vice-President—and it was 'His Most Superfluous Highness!'" There was not much more said about titles after this.

Slightly Out.

An agricultural journal, given to using ideas not its own, rather "put its foot into it," recently, in giving "a few illustrations of very neat country houses adapted to the farm and village lot, which readily explained themselves; and if not desired in full, might suggest ideas to the intending builder." Unfortunately one of the illustrations was a picture of Queen Victoria's Palace at Osborn, Isle of Wight, and how that could be considered as a neat house adapted for a village lot or farm, the editor failed to explain or suggest. Borrowed feathers do not always suit the wearer.

The company stayed till morning, and took supper and breakfast. There is a difference between the customs of 1765 and 1873.

THE season approaches when the boy of the period turns his mind to meditation. As the hour of 8 p. m. strikes, he softly withdraws from the table where he has been engaged in digging the putty from a nail-head, and unostentatiously deposits himself back of the stove to think. We are particular to emphasize this word, because there is an impression on the part of his parents, and his eldest sister, who has the honor of escorting him to bed nights, that he is going to sleep. They go so far as to openly express this belief, but he stoutly denies it, and immediately proceeds to demonstrate the gross injustice of the insinuation by humming some familiar piece. Pretty soon the humming ceases; there is a significant movement at the table, and then it is resumed again, and continues for five minutes, when it gradually dies out, and all is silent back of the stove. When the boy comes to again, he is being lifted to his feet by his waistband, and cuffed on the head to indicate that it is after 10 o'clock. He makes a desperate attempt to find where he left off on the tune, but ignominiously fails, and five minutes later is stumbling up stairs, with an interested and active sister in his rear, and firmly but faintly maintaining that he was not asleep, but only thinking.—Danbury News.

Importance of Forest Culture.

The farmers of this country are very slow in appreciating the importance of forest culture, notwithstanding that it can be made extremely profitable and requires very little labor. At this day, notwithstanding the constant decrease in the supply of lumber and the more than corresponding increase in the demand for it, millions of acres of land covered with good forest trees are annually burned over and the timber wasted in order to prepare the land for cultivation.

The great forests of the Western States are fastly disappearing; the most of those in the Eastern and Middle States went along ago. In the whole United States but one vast tract of timber is left untouched; that covers about one half of Washington Territory and one third of Oregon. Here the yellow pine thrives in the greatest perfection, some of the trees reaching 300 feet in height; but the Northern Pacific railroad will soon open these lands to the axe of the lumberman, and it is estimated that it will not require more than ten, or at the most twenty, years to clear the most of the area now occupied by these unbroken forests.

The demand for lumber increases in the United States at the rate of twenty-five per cent. per annum; the decrease of forests is at the rate of 7,000,000 acres annually. Few people have any idea of the immense value of the wood which is used for purposes generally considered comparatively unimportant. The fences in the United States are now valued at $1,800,000,000, and it costs annually $98,000,000 to keep them in repair. By far the greatest proportion of these are of wood. The railroads of the United States use 10,000,000 ties annually, costing from fifty to eighty cents each, and these have to be renewed once in every seven years. In 1871, 10,000 acres of forest land were stripped of their timber to supply fuel for the single city of Chicago. In twenty years scarcely anything will be left of the vast forests of Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota, and too late our farmers will see how short-sighted they have been in not making provision for supplying the great demand for lumber which this wide-spread destruction is certain to cause.—New York Sun.

How Paris was Improved.

C. C. Fulton, writes to the Baltimore American: The city of Paris has a costly municipal government, which hesitates at no expense to make the city beautiful, clean, and healthy, and it has no "rings" to manipulate the public funds. It has something to show for every outlay, and the people have the satisfaction of knowing that every dollar levied on them is economically spent. There is something tangible to show for it, as is the case with a giraffe just purchased for five thousand francs, to replace the one eaten up by the Commune. Public functionaries in Paris never grow rich off their small salaries, and as they are poorly paid, there is no scramble for them. Twelve hundred francs (about $220) is almost the highest salary paid to any municipal officer, and there is such a system of checks and balances that fraud or unfair dealing is wholly impossible. A police officer receives from one thousand two hundred to one thousand five hundred francs per annum, or from $200 to $300. The highest salary under the government is to the head of the Public Department, which is twelve thousand francs or $2,400. This is the most important office under the city government. There are twenty-two Mayors, one for each arrondissement or ward of the city, whose principal functions relate to births, marriages and deaths, and one Prefect of the Seine, whose functions correspond very much with those of our own Mayors, he having authority over all parts of the city. In connection with the Monte de Piete, or city pawnbroker establishment, there are three hundred officers, whose combined salaries amount to 501,200 francs, being an average of about $333 each. Some receive more than this amount, and some less. The yearly average of money that passes through the hands of these three hundred officers is nearly $8,000,000, so that it will be seen the positions they hold are equal in responsibility to any under our city government.

Was it Spontaneous Combustion?

Miss Lucy Fergusson, a wealthy lady of Fincastle, Va., was burned to death a few months since in a manner which strongly suggests spontaneous combustion. A report of the occurrence says: "It is known that she was subject to fits. She was about 30 years of age. Her house being seen open excited suspicion, when Mr. James McDowell and a colored man named Jamieson instituted a search. They visited the kitchen, but saw nothing of her, but finally procuring a light, they made a further investigation, and were horror-stricken to find only left the head of the unfortunate lady, which was dressed as she appeared at church, but her entire body, bones, entrails, etc., had been reduced to ashes. She, or what remained of her, was lying across the old-fashioned hearth, but in the fire-place, some eight feet back, and of stone, there remained scarcely a handful of coals. How the catastrophe occurred, and how her remains could be so effectually destroyed without the burning of the kitchen, is a matter of conjecture.

JOHN BRIGHT, who was recently re-elected to Parliament, made a great speech a few days ago in Birmingham, in which he reviewed the political topics of the day. In his allusions to the relations of Great Britain and the United States, he once more appeared as the staunch friend and advocate of this country. Referring to the constant talk about the humiliations of the Washington Treaty, Mr. Bright indulged in some plain home talk, and notified his hearers that the real humiliation of England was between the years 1861 and 1865, and that, if the press and aristocracy of England had observed ordinary fairness at that time, there would have been no occasion for the treaty at all.

LICENSED, FOR WHAT?

Licensed—to make the strong man weak;
Licensed—to lay the wise man low;
Licensed—a wife's fond heart to break,
And make the children's tears to flow.

Licensed—to do thy neighbor harm,
Licensed—to kindle hate and strife;
Licensed—to nerve the robber's arm;
Licensed to whet the murderer's knife.

Licensed—thy neighbor's purse to drain,
And rob him of his very last;
Licensed—to heat his feverish brain
Till madness crowns thy work at last.

Licensed—like spider for a fly,
To spread thy nets for man, thy prey;
To mock his struggles, suck him dry,
Then cast the worthless hulk away.

Licensed—where peace and quiet dwell,
To bring disease and want and woe;
Licensed—to make this world a hell,
And fit man for a hell below.

Humorous.

THE scientific conundrum of the day is: What did Io die of? Iodide of potassium.

"HAVE you heard my last song?" asked a music writer of a gruff critic. "I hope so," was the reply.

THOUGH Shakespeare positively doth affirm it,
And to dispute it may not be discreet,
Yet I cannot believe that which we call flour
By any other name would smell as wheat.

AN Iowa editor wrote: "During the past week we have been visiting the Solons of the country;" and his constant subscribers think that is a funny way to spell "saloons."

"THERE!" said Jones, as he wrathfully pushed away the pie which his landlady had just served him, "that stuff isn't fit for a pig to eat, and I ain't going to eat it!"

OFF and on. The man who gets off may get offer, but he can't hope to reach the superlative; while the man who gets on, we are told, may get honor, and, by possibility, honest.

AT a hotel-table one boarder remarked to his neighbor, "This must be a healthy place for chickens." "Why?" asked the other. "Because I never see any dead ones hereabouts."

A MAN in blouse—scene Paris, of course—presents a bottle of perfume to his beloved, saying: "When you smell this you will regret that your Creator did not make you all nose."

A DRY-GOODS merchant of Hartford was asked how he spent his evenings. His reply was, "At night I store my mind, and during the day I mind my store." He was alive at last accounts.

CATCHING a little Tartar—"So you don't care about donkey-riding, Miss. And why?" "Oh, I've got a pony, and one doesn't care about donkeys after that, you know!" "Has a pony got more legs than a donkey, then?" Missy (who don't like to be chaffed)—"Yes; exactly twice as many as some donkeys that I know of."

JONES dropped in at a closed bar the other day and purchased a glass of his favorite beverage. As he munched the customary clove, he observed that the bar-tender had returned him short change. "Well," said the gentleman of the shirt front and diamond pin, "we'll owe it to you." "But what kind of security can you give me?" asked the wary Jones. "Suppose you take a lean on the bar," was the reply.

A WODOWARD avenue business man found a counterfeit 50-cent scrip among his currency, the other day, and he put it in his vest, and that afternoon gave it to a little girl begging on the streets. When he came back from tea, he found the same piece of scrip in the drawer again, and, questioning his clerk, he learned that a little girl had brought it in, bought a stick of gum, and gone away with 49 cents good money. That bank has suspended on currency payment to beggars.—Detroit Free Press.

Historical Items of Illinois.

Illinois in 1829 ranked the twenty-third State in population, and in 1870 the fifth.

The first railroad built in Illinois was the line from Springfield to the Illinois river; at the ceremony of breaking the ground, in 1838, Daniel Waldo, Esq., of Meredosia, had the honor of casting the first shovelful of dirt.

Rev. Thomas Lippincott (father of C. E., present State Auditor) organized the first Sabbath school in the Territory of Illinois, in the summer of 1818, three miles south of Alton. This was the summer before Illinois was admitted as a State.

The first school taught in Jacksonville was in the winter of 1826-7, by the Hon. William Thomas, who is still a citizen of the same town.

The town of Upper Alton inaugurated the free school system three years before it was a law of the State.

A cottonwood tree, planted by Bernard Thompson in 1843 (the father of Judge A. J. Thompson, of Bethel, Morgan county, Ill.,) measures fourteen feet in circumference.

Rev. Thomas Randle, of Upper Alton, is the oldest living member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the State, having been seventy-five years a member, and a preacher sixty-five years.

Cigar Steamers.

The two cigar steamers of Mr. Ross Winans, of Baltimore, make frequent trips in the British Channel, although their officers take pains to prevent any knowledge of their capacity for speed from becoming public. One of these steamers was built at Cherbourg and the other on the Clyde. The latter is about 400 feet long, and is built on a different plan from the original cigar steamer, which now lies at her wharf in Baltimore. Instead of a wheel in the center the vessel has two propellers at the extreme points of the cigar. The cigar portion of the hull is submerged, and an eye-witness describes the whole appearance of the vessel as he saw it recently in the harbor of Southampton as "that of an ordinary ocean steamer perched on the back of a whale." Mr. Winans hopes to obtain a speed of twenty miles an hour by propulsion alone with his strange craft.

GLASS bonnets have appeared. They are formed of a tissue woven by fine glass threads, and may be said to be the glass of fashion fitted to the mold of form. Ladies who wear them must deny themselves the pleasure of criticising their neighbors, on the principle that it is dangerous for those who live in glass houses to throw stones.

Money-Grams.

CITIZENS of Iowa have subscribed $50,000 to the endowment of Tabor College.

NEBRASKA computes her wealth at $70,000,000.

GEORGE SAND has an annual income of 100,000 francs.

THE Odd Fellows of Wyandotte, Kan., are spending $10,000 on a new hall.

THE boot and shoe manufacturers of Portland, Me., have a working capital of $375,000.

DELAWARE peach-growers claim a loss of $200,000 on this year's crop.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., claims to have $2,124,000 invested in local industries.

THE National Grange Patrons of Husbandry have $30,000 on deposit in a New York city bank.

MINERS estimate that at least $30,000 worth of silver ore is brought into Ogden, Utah, daily.

THE sum of $800,000 will be expended in constructing a new tunnel through Bergen hill, N. J.

IT is said that $2,000,000 are to be invested in a mammoth boot and shoe factory at Indianapolis, Ind.

MR. GLADSTONE receives $37,500 per year for his services as Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer.

MARFORI, husband of the ex-Queen of Spain, complains legally of his wife's extravagance, asserting that since residing in Paris her income has dwindled from 1,000,000 francs annually to 500,000 francs.

THERE were 4,285 life insurance policies issued in Maryland in 1872, insuring $10,096,018, and 16,603 policies insuring $46,967,155 were in force upon the lives of citizens of Maryland at the close of last year.

A BAPTIST chapel in the city of Paris has just been completed, capable of seating 600 people, at a cost of $60,000.

A Triumph of Art—A Paper Church.

There is a paper church actually existing near Bergen, which can contain nearly 1,000 persons. It is circular within, octagonal without. The relieves outside and the statues within, the roof, the ceiling, the Corinthian capitals, are all of papier-mache, rendered water-proof by saturation in vitriol, lime water, whey and white of egg. We have not yet reached this audacity in our use of paper; but it should hardly surprise us, inasmuch as we employ the same material in private houses, in steamboats and in some public buildings, instead of carved decorations and plaster cornices. When Frederick II. of Prussia set up a limited papier-mache manufactory at Berlin, in 1776, he thought that paper cathedrals might, within a century, spring out of his snuff-boxes by the slight-of-hand of advancing art. At present we confess to a predilection for substantial brick and stone in the matter of churches. But there is no saying what we may come to. It is not very long since it would have seemed as impossible to cover eighteen acres of ground with glass as to erect a pagoda of soap-bubbles, yet the thing is done. When we think of a psalm sung by 1,000 voices pealing through an edifice made of old rags, and the universal element bound down to carry messages with the speed of light, it would be presumptuous to say what can and what cannot be achieved by science and art, under the training of steady old Time.

AMONG the recent arrivals at Fulton, Arkansas, was M. W. Dickson, a ranchman of Brown county, Texas, where he has five thousand head of cattle. A few weeks ago he was attacked by Comanches and Kiowas, who shot at him. Thirteen bullets took effect in his body—one in his right shoulder, six in the breast and abdomen, four in the left arm, one in the right side of the neck, and one in the back of the head. He was rescued before the Indians had time to scalp him, and had to stay at home two weeks or so on account of his wounds.

IT RUNS LIKE A PRAIRIE FIRE!—DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS runs like a prairie fire. The fame of the Temperance Tonic is, however, but poorly exemplified by this figure of speech; for a prairie fire runs only in one direction, whereas the reputation of the Bitters spreads toward all points of the compass. There is not a square mile of inhabited territory in the United States where this meritorious preparation is not appreciated. If any theoretical gentleman thinks he is prepared to show that there is "nothing in it," we advise him to go to the Prairie States, in the Mississippi Valley, to the deltas of the Southern rivers, to New England, in fact, anywhere within the limits of "Uncle Sam's real estate," and ventilate his views. By so doing he can raise a heartier and more general laugh than has ever yet shaken the sides of an intelligent people. Persons who have been cured can't help laughing at other people who tell them that the medicine which saved their lives is a failure. 14

A MARBLE FAMILY.—The durability of marble is daily exemplified. Here is a family in Massachusetts consisting of 14 Marbles; Silas Marble, the father, is 88; his wife is 81; their twelve children are all living and married; the youngest is 40 and the oldest 63; and the progeny of young marbles promises to be very numerous.

FOR Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Depression of Spirits, and General Debility, in their various forms, FERRO-PHOSPHORATED ELIXIR of CALISAYA, made by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic. As a stimulant tonic for patients, recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal. If taken during the season it prevents fever and ague and other intermittent fevers.—[Com.

OUR READERS should be careful to notice that PROCTER & GAMBLE'S Stamp is upon the bars of their Motlled German Soap, as all good articles are imitated, and this soap being so popular, other manufacturers have copied their stamp.

The Jewel in her Crown.

Chicago is justly proud of her two years work in rebuilding her ruined edifices, and symbolizes her restoration in the great Exposition building, a model of architecture, covering six acres of ground and built in ninety days. But among all her merchant buildings, for solidity, spaciousness, perfect adaptation to its business, splendid lighting, artistic finish and beauty, there is none equal to the great jewelry store of N. Matson & Co., corner of State and Monroe streets. And the rich and varied stock of watches, jewelry, silver and plated ware, clocks, bronzes, toilet and Russia leather goods, etc., are a fit setting to the handsomest jewelry store in the world. None can fully comprehend the new Chicago without seeing this jewel in her crown of glory. The name of the firm is a synonym for integrity and fair dealing throughout the West.—[Com.

NONE but a physician knows how much a reliable alterative is needed by the people. On all sides of us, in all communities everywhere, there are multitudes who suffer from complaints that nothing but an alterative cures. Hence a great many of them have been made and put abroad with the assurance of being effectual. But they fail to accomplish the cures they promise, because they have not the intrinsic virtues they claim. In this state of the case DR. J. C. AYER & Co., of Lowell, have supplied a COMPOUND EXTRACT OF SARSAPARILLA, which proves to be the long-desired remedy. Its peculiar difference from other kindred preparations in the market is that it cures the diseases for which it is recommended, while they do not. We are assured of this fact by more than one intelligent physician in this neighborhood, and have the further evidence of our own experience of its truth.—Nashville (Tenn.) Farmer.

HIGH LIVERS, those indulging in ease and pleasure, and those of sedentary habits, can prevent Boils, Carbuncles, Gout, Red Skin, Eruptions, Pimples, Constipation, Piles, Drowsiness, Biliousness, and other conditions induced by such habits, by taking from four to six of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets once a week, or, better still, one or two each night. Twenty-five cents a vial, by all Druggists.—[Com.

THE season for coughs and colds is rapidly approaching, and every one should be prepared to check the first symptoms, as a cough contracted between now and Christmas frequently lasts all winter. There is no better remedy than Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. For all diseases of the throat and lungs it should be used internally and externally.

A FAVORABLE NOTORIETY.—The good reputation of "Brown's Bronchial Troches" for the relief of Coughs, Colds, and Throat Diseases, has given them a favorable notoriety.—[Com.

LUNG FEVER, common cold, catarrhal fever, and nasal discharge of a brownish color in horses, may be checked at once by liberal use of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders.

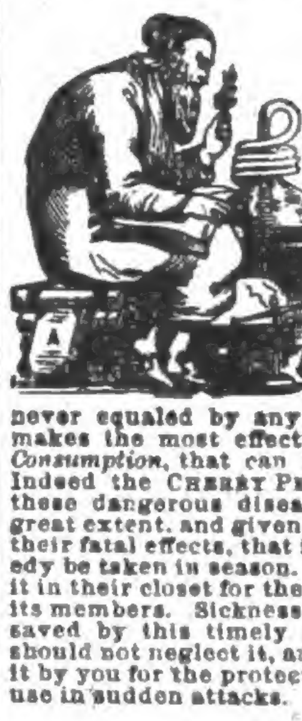
Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

For Diseases of the

THROAT AND LUNGS,

SUCH AS

Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.



The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

CONSUMPTION
And Its Cure.
WILLSON'S
Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by

J. H. WILLSON, 83 John St., New York.

DR. A. TRASK'S
INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing diseases is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame: every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it copes as readily with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Breast, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

D. RANSOM, SON & Co., Propr's, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, will cure a cough in one-half the time necessary to cure it with any other medicine, and it does it, not by drying it up, but by removing the cause—subduing irritation, and healing the affected parts. For all cases of Hoarseness, Suppression or Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Severe Chronic or Lingering Coughs, it will be found to surpass any medicine that has ever before been offered to the public. While it cures the severest Coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By its great blood purifying properties, it cures all Humors from the worst Scrofula to a common Blotch or Pimple.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum or Tetter and the worst kind of Pimples on the face, Boils, Carbuncles, Sores, Erysipelas and Blotches among the hair. Eight to twelve bottles are warranted to cure Running of the Ears, corrupt or Running Ulcers, Scrofula and the worst forms of Secondary and Tertiary Diseases. Two to six bottles, Liver Complaint. $1.00 or 6 bottles for $5.00, by all Druggists. Manufactured at the World's Dispensary, Nos. 80, 82, 84 and 86 West Seneca St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

Thursday, Nov. 6, 1873.

Governor Allen's majority is 817. The remainder of the State officers elected are Republicans. Welch the State Treasurer, gets in by the tightest squeeze, having but 177 majority·

◆

Pensylvania official returns give Gordon, for Supreme Judge, a majority of 14,294, and Mackey, for State Treasurer, 25,352. Quite a falling of from the 80,000 the Radicals have been rejoicing over from that state for ten or fifteen years past.

◆

In his Thanksgiving Proclamation it pleases General Grant to say that "frugal industry is receiving its merited recognition and its merited reward," The tens of thousands who are being thrown out of employment will hardly accept that as a reason for thankfulness·

◆

Owing to the panic 50,000 laborers have already been discharged in New-York City. A President with a salary of $50,000 a year and Congressmen drawing $625 per month, furnishes a cheering contrast between labor and capital.

◆

We have a pretty good showing of Democratic Governors now in the Eastern, Middle and Western States. There is Connecticut, New Jersey, West Virginia, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri and Georgia. These States constitute a full third of the population of the United States.

◆

Negro slavery continues to exist in Cuba, mainly through the indirect aid afforded the Spanish Government by the Grant Administration. Had the United States realy been neutral between the parties the Cubans would, before this, have gained their independence, and would have abolished slavery. The negroes of the United States might as well make a note of this, as well as the old white Abolitionists·

◆

"One of the bitterest opponents the government had during the rebellion" is what the Warsaw Indianian calls the newly elected Governor of Ohio. —A more unjust charge has never been made. Bill Allen was a staunch supporter of the government in its contest with treason and rebellion. He is a patriot in the fullest sense of the word; he is a progressive Democrat; he is an honest man; he is an honor to Ohio, an honor to his party, and he will prove himself a model Governor. Ligonier Banner.

◆

The Chicago Times says the paying out of silver at the sub-treasuries will commence to-day at New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and at Boston and Chicago, to-morrow. It appears from the dispatches that the system adapted by the secretary of the treasury is to pay five dollars in silver on every check or other demand; but to pay the employes of the government the whole amount of their salaries in the metal currency. It is not altogether clear why this performance should be exhibited toward officeholders.

◆

A Washington letter about Treasury clerks has the following bit of information: "Ladies have their pay deducted for every day's loss of time — One received a telegram announcing her mother's death. She had the expense of the journey to and from the funeral and was docked six days. And so this Administration that is peripatetic, and votes an increase for its members whenever it feels pinched for money, does what was never before done in the history of the Government stop the salaries of the underpaid clerks for sickness and for death of relatives. If only Secretaries and heads of bureaus cut off their own salaries for absences, their clerks would not complain."

◆

Hon. James Hughes, a well known citizen of this State, died near Washington City, at his temporary residence one day last week. Judge Hughes was one of the most marked and conspicious characters in Indiana, and in the point of clear cut talent outweighed all his contemporaries. He filled several important stations in public life, and as a member of congress and judge of the court of claims, made a reputation that almost any man might be proud of. His last official position was that of State Senator from the counties of Monroe and Lawrence. In the session of '71 he organized and led the opposition to Cumback, and to him, probable, more than any other man, Mr. Pratt owes his election to the senate.

The Contest in Prussia.

The dismissal of Gen. Von Roon with the restoration of Prince Bismark to power as the head of the Prussian Ministry proves that King William has abandoned all thought of temporizing with the Roman Catholic Church, and that the controversy will be carried steaeily forward to the bitter end.

It is well known that the laws concerning ecclesiastical affairs which have produced such widespread excitement in Prussia originated with Bismarck, and that his purpose is to bring the Church under the rigorous control of of the State. The other members of the Cabinet were not ready for his extreme measures, and the King hoped to find some means of avoiding them. Bismark insisted upon the adoption of his policy entire and unqualified, and when this was refused he resigned. The Government, however, has not got on well without him, and now he is brought back and will have everything his own way,

The conflict between these great antagonists—the Roman Church, with its vast spiritual power and the devotion of eight millions of Catholics on the one side, and the most perfect political machine and strongest Government of our day, backed up by sixteen millions of Protestants on the other—will now, doubtless, be more rapidly developed; but who can say when we shall be able to record its close?

◆

Neither Governor Hendricks nor Hon Geo. H. Pendleton could find time to make political speeches in Ohio till after the election was over, As soon as Allen was elected they found time to join in the rejoicings. They were just a little too prudent this time.—Louisville Commercial.

This sort of talk, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, is quite common with Republican newspapers. So far as the foregoing paragraph concerns Mr. Pendleton, it is inaccurate. Mr. Pendleton did deliver some speeches before the election, and they were of considerable service. As to Mr. Hendricks a few words of explanation may not be out of place. Mr. Hendricks was invited to come over to Ohio and lend us a helping hand. It has been customary in years past to call on Mr. Hendricks for a little oratory in this State when the fight was on, and he seldom failed to come to time. He has made many speeches in this State.

He is a native of it, and his heart has always gone out to his brethern in the days of their struggles. It is worthy of remark, however, that very little talent finds its way from Ohio into Indiana when the Guelphs and the Ghibellines are filling the air over there with warlike sounds. If Mr. Thurman ever made any speeches in Indiana the circumstance has escaped our memory.

In this canvass Governor Hendricks was placed in a peculiar position. Last year the leading Democrats of Indiana entered the coalition with the Liberal Republicans in good faith. It was understood that if the Liberal Republicans would come up to the support of the Democratic State ticket in October, the Democrats would vote for Greeley in November. The Liberal Republicans kept the faith and Mr. Hendricks was placed under personal obligation to them for the handsome triumph which fell to his share. We have reasons to know that Mr Hendricks sympathised with the Democracy of Ohio in their recent struggle, but he did not feel like alienating his Liberal Republican friends by making an active canvass for a straight Democratic ticket. Again, Mr. Hendricks is the Governor of Indiana. He feels a little delicacy about going up and down the country delivering political harangues. He doesn't consider it etiquette. It is true that Noyes and other unscrupulous creatures of that ilk have roamed about the country making war upon Democracy wherever they could find it while holding the truncheon of the Chief Executive, but nobody ever thought any more of them for doing it, and we have yet to learn that they ever derived any especial benefit therefrom. Unless our information is very defective, Governor Hendricks believes fully to-day that only through the instrumentality of the Democratic party, and through the steadfast devotion of the Democratic party, can the country be wrested from the rule of Radicalism and corruption.

Sheriff's Sale,

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed from the Clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court on a case wherein Jacob B. Casebeer is plaintiff and George W. Gordon & Mary C. Gordon and Stephen B. Ward are defendants, requiring me to make the sum of seven hundred and four dollars and sixty four cents, with interest on said decree and costs, I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, on between the hours of 10 o'clock A. M., and 4 o'clock P. M. of said day, at the door of the Court House in DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits, for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate to-wit:

Saturday, the 29th day of November, 1873

Commencing at the north-east corner of lot number one hundred and forty-two, (142) running thence south sixty-six (66) feet, thence west sixty-six (66) feet, thence north sixty-six (66) feet, thence east sixty-six feet, (66) to the place of beginning, all in the original plat of the town of Auburn DeKalb Co. Ind.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said decree, interest and costs I will at the same time and place, expose at public sale the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge paid decree, interest and costs.

Sale will be made without any relief whatever from valuation and appraisement laws.

Now comes the Plaintiff, by A. F. Pinchin, his Attorney, and files his complaint herein, together with an affidavit that said defendants, Francina Erwin, William Erwin, Mary Hall and Lanson Hall are not residents of the State of Indiana.

Notice is, therefore, hereby given said Defendents unless they be and appear on the first day of the next term of the DeKalb Circuit Court, to be holdon on the 2d Monday of December, A. D. 1873, at the Court House in Auburn, in said County and State, and answer or demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in their absence.

Witness, My name and the seal of said
SEAL. Court affixed at Auburn, this 29th day of October, 1873.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Roads very muddy.

School Books at Davenport's.

Manstoffer has been bailed out of jail.

The roads leading to this place are very muddy.

Mr. Lillie, the stone paver, is making a good job on Seventh street.

The telegraph poles are already in position on the Eel River road to Butler.

From the rush of business at Johnson's lately, at Waterloo, upper the reduced price list we imagine the money crisis does not effect his business.

If the weather remains good, that pacing match will come off next Saturday, Nov. 8. Look out for a lively race, and be sure to see it.

J. M. Robbins has purchased one-half of the lower saw mill of W. Richmond. It is now owned by Mitchell & Robbins.—The logs are rolling in lively.

Several bottles of brandy have been resurrected in the woods near the Junction, said to be the alelged property of Sponogle, dealer in boots & shoes, late of the junction.

An exchange says: "Nilsson is more careless in the use of her voice since her marriage." Jones says such carelessness is not confined to Nilsson. He realizes it sometimes when he is wiping dishes.

"Chambertine" is the name of the new color; or, rather it is the new name for a very old color. If you want a dress pattern of wine-colored silk, it is "the thing" to ask for chambertine.

The new liquor store must be doing a good business, as the way bill at the depot shows shipment of 6 kegs on Oct., 15th' 6 kegs on Oct., 17th, and 6 kegs on Oct., 21st, making eighteen kegs in less than a week.

Literary Society.—A fine literary society has been organized here, and meets every Tuesday evening at the School House. There was a large attendance last Tuesday evening, and the exercises were instructive and interesting.

Thanksgiving day will arrive on the 27th. We are accustomed to celebrate that day with turkey, but we fear it will be a failure this year, because we have no turkey. No one should infer from this that we would accept one. Oh, no!

See the new advertisement of Abright & Shepherd. They will soon be quartered in their new store in the Ensley block, and will have one of the best and most extensive stocks in their line ever seen in the county.

To guard against fires, look out for defective flues, repair broken stoves, keep your pipe in good condition, put no ashes in boxes or barrels; and last, but not least, keep a pretty efficient household police upon the coal oil business.

The Auburn Courier grows eloquent over the completion of the Eel River Rail road to Butler. We rejoice with Thomas. The citizens of Auburn have done themselves credit in their endeavors to push this great enterprise to a successful termination.—Col. City Post.

The city Treasurer of Fort Wayne is a defaulter to several thousand dollars besides a spurious bond which was not detected by the council. He is a Democrat but was placed upon both tickets last year, so great was the confidence reposed in him.

Petit Jurors.

The following is the list of petit jurors for the December term of Circuit Court: T D Meese, C Comeskey, Jesse Rodenbaugh, A D Goetschius, Alex McClure, Peter Shaffer, R Chilson, M Long Sr., John Grube, Sol Barney, Cyrus Watters, and J P Wyant.

The trial of Mr. Strebe for assault with intent to kill, came off last Thursday. Owing to the fact that Mr. Humes, the prosecuting witness was unable to attend, the case was dismissed. Mr. Strebe has since been arrested, and bound over to court in the sum of $1500.

Some talk of organizing a Literary Society of the best talent in town, for the purpose of mutual improvement and the entertainments of the public during the winter. A decidedly good and laudable enterprise. Last winter we had nothing of the kind, but we trust that something of the kind will be introduced this winter.

Sidewalks.

Our town Marshal advertises for bids for the construction of certain sidewalks, in another column. He also announces that he is ready to receive the tax for 1873 Though money matters are quite close, we hope that all will be enabled to pay up promptly.

Unless our patrons pay up more prompt we will be compelled to reduce our paper somewhat. We are now printing them a large quanity of reading matter, more than we are able to at the present rate of paying up. We should like to continue the Courier as it now is, and if all pay up we can do so.

Musical.—Prof. Bennett, the gentleman who was with us a few weeks last winter, has returned and will remain during the coming the winter. He desires to get up several classes in vocal music here, and at other points in the county. Mrs. Bennett, a fine player, will be here in a few days and will give instructions on the piano and organ. Mr. Bennett is a good teacher and we trust that he will succeed in organizing several large classes in the county. An awakening in the musical interest is what we want.

The Columbia city Commercial says, much to the regret of every citizen of South Whitley, our station agent, Mr. E. S. Shaner has been removed from this place to Auburn. Mr. D. C. Grover has taken his place here, and I only hope he may prove as acceptable to the people as Mr. Shaner. Mr. S. takes the best wishes of all our people with him to his new home, and we all congratulate the people of Auburn on their good fortune in getting him as a citizen of their place.

A prominent attorney in Rogue's Row got into trouble last week. The baggage master on the Eel River railroad mistook the gentleman's shoes for Saratoga trunks and checked them through to Detroit. The attorney wanted to get off the train at Denver, but was compelled to go on to Detroit, and to pay for "extra baggage." E. D. Loomis is an obliging and gentlemanly conductor, but he couldn't change the destination of those shoes simply to accommodate a lawyer.—Logansport Pharos.

Have you visited the new shoe store yet in the Odd Fellows' Building, north of the Court House? If not you should do so at once, just to see the large and complete stock of Boots & Shoes of every variety, that fill that large store room. But the prices are the greatest feature of the establishment, being so low that you will be surprised. Their prices are the same as at their wholesale house in Fort Wayne where they buy goods in large quantities and can afford to sell cheap. Satisfy yourself by visiting this house.

Election of Directors.

At a meeting of the Stockholders of the Detroit, Eel River & Illinois Railroad Company held at Columbia City last Thursday the following named gentlemen were chosen directors for the ensuing year viz: James S. Collins, Columbia City, John L. Davis, Auburn; George E. Adams D. D. Dykeman, Logansport; Wm. W. Crapo, New Belford, Mass; James F. Joy, C. H. Buhl, Allan Sheldon, Theodore D. Buhl, Detroit; D. L. Quirk, Ed. F. Uhl, Ypsilanti, Mich.

Teachers' Institute.

Our citizens should not forget that the next session of the Institute will be held at Auburn next week commencing on the tenth, and lasting five days. About 100 teachers are expected to be in attendance. Heretofore the citizens of the place, at which the Institute has been held, have generously provided quarters for those in attendance, and the same will be expected of the people. We must not be behind our neighbors, though we do not like this arrangement of boarding round. A committee will wait upon all to ascertain the number each family can provide for, and we trust sufficient liberality will be shown to accommodate all who may attend.

Last Friday evening was Halloween.—We did not think of it until a great big cabbage struck our door, and then somehow we thought of it. To mischievous boys it meant an evening during which licence was given to certain innocent sorts of mischief. It is the evening on which ghosts are fabled as walking abroad and airing themselves. Its the boys that do the mischief, though, and blame it on the poor shadowy, shivering ghosts.—Among the elder juveniles along the journey from childhood to maturity it was an evening of sport of a less rude nature.—The games with which the boys and girls amuse themselves on this occasion are numberless, and many, indeed most of them, are hallowed with age.

Sharp Work.

Mr. Editor:—

In our town quite a large number of prosecutions for criminal acts, have within the last two weeks been commenced and carried through, and our jail is pretty well filled with culprits. We are glad to chronicle the fact that the law officers appear diligent and vigilant. But while this is the case, we have to mention the fact that a number of our best citizens condemn certain things done by these officers. We refer to the practice of keeping warrants for arrest and papers to commence proceedings until the close or after the business hours of the day, and then commencing suits, serving warrants, and hurrying them off either to the examining officer or jail, and then doing all that can be, to intimidate, press into trial, refuse bail, deny the right to obtain an attorney, and other things that would be a digrace and wrong even to a murderous modoc. We like to see fair play. When a man is charged with a crime, treat him as a man until he is proven guilty. Let him have a fair and impartial trial. let him have time to get witnesses, and procure counsul, and then if found guilty punish him soundly. Of all things low, under-handed, cunning, is most disreputable, and in time re-acts only upon its authors.

Wall Paper and Window Shades, at Davenport & Co.'s

The brick work of the Cool building hasbeen completed.

Tinners are busy engaged in putting on the roof of the Cool building.

Trains will begin to run regularly on the Eel River road to Butler by next Monday.

A splendid cobble stone drain is being put in along seventh street opposite the court house.

We would call attention to the stock of albums just received by Davenport & Co. The designs all new, and prices very low.

Estrayed or Stolen.—Our devil has been missing since Tuesday. One cent reward is offered to the finder.

We doff our hat to those two popular young gentleman, D. D. Snyder and C. D. Hare, for a nice lot of tender squirrels, the first we have had this season.

E. Vordermark & Sons have the the largest and best stock of boots and shoes ever brought to this place. They are receiving goods almost daily. Go and see them. Sign of the Big Shoe.

Defiance, Ohio, Oct., 27th, 1873.

Ed. Courier:—

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company have partially suspended work for the winter, west of this point, probably owing to the pressure in the money market They complain bitterly of the trouble in getting currency, claiming they have plenty of European Exchanges. I think one reason of the suspension was the uncordiality with which the company was received by the people along the line, they seeming to take delight in throwing in the way of and embarrassing the work in every way possible. The work between Deshler on the Dayton & Michigan road and Defiance, has been partially suspended also, so that in fact I do not think they expect to reach Defiance this winter, probaby not before June next year, when it will probably be resumed all along the line. I understand a project of uniting the B. P. & C. and Canada Southern from Defiance to Chicago is talked off. Its this way, the C. S. have already a road in operation to Toledo, and they also control the Wabash, so you see its a practicable project, which your map will show you. It is a less number of miles from Toledo to Chicago, by way of Wabash road to Defiance, thence via B. P. & C., to Chicago, than by the "Air Line" or L. S. & M. S. R. R.

Why wouldn't it be practiable to unite them at or near Auburn, as I understand a part of the Canada Sounern is already constructed.

C. B. Squirs.

Mr Editor:

I see a communication signed by "Justice" in last week's issue of the Courier, that tells something about matters and things that "seems a little singular to 'Justice,'" and goes on and winds up with what he thinks a fearful stab to the heart of DeKalb County's best institution. He says that the fair at Waterloo was a humbug all the way through.

Now then, it "seems to me," by the way that Justice talks, he would rather see this "spirit of hatred" increased than diminished between the two towns. Does "Justice" know that an organization like this agricultural association, requires time to perfect every department, so that all may move with success. Probably there were some defects, but in the main, the fair at Waterloo was a success, as all the people in my neighborhood will testify. But "Justice" has been outraged, humbugged and swindled by this "humbug" at Waterloo. I suspect the reason, "Justice" has attempted to see some of the wonderful things within the walls of the "bumbug" by climbing said walls, but some enterprising "police" yanked him off, thereby compelling "Justice" to contribute some of his "filthy lucher." Thus you see "Justice" has been swindled.

That there is a "spirit of hatred" existing between the two towns is evident, to their own shame we say. Why not drop old grudges, shake hands and become friends. Cease being laughed at by "outsiders," as two quarrelsome old maids. Unite as one people, and support the great enterprises that tend to build up and increase the wealth of your growing county. Stand by each other politically, and as christians work together, remember "united we stand, divided we fall.

IMPARTIAL.

Jackson, T. P. Oct., 26th 1873.

Several of our citizens visited Columbia City last Thursday. They report two blocks having been built there this year that would do credit to places of far greater pretentions. Our friends made the round of the printing offices. Davis was spokesman for the party when they visited the Commercial. Baker, the effable editor entertained them and they were pleased. They went next to the Post Davenport was spokesman. Brown was not in, and the compositors were too busy to do the agreeable.

Mrs. Burlingame, who has been ill for many long weary months died last Monday, and was buried on Tuesday, at 2 P. M. She was in her 65th year, and appeared to enjoy good health up to a year or more ago, when that terrible disease, cancer, appeared, which caused her death. She has been a resident of the county for over twenty years. Thus one by one the old pioneers are dropping off.

We are using the Dixon American pencil, better than the foreign Faber, to be found at Davenport & Co's.

Teacher's Institute.

The DeKalb county Teachers' Institute, will be held in Auburn, commencing on Monday, November 10th, 1873, and continuing in session five days. Accommodations will be provided for all who come.

Let us have the largest attendance ever witnessed in Northern Indiana. No teacher can afford to be absent from the county Institute.

James A. Barnes,
County Superintendent.

The following is the latest reindition of Mary's Little Lamb, and is published for the benefit of the gentlemen exclusively. It certainly has the merit of originality:

Mary had a little lamb,
With which she used to tussle;
She snatched the wool clean off its back
And stuffed it in her bustle,

And when he saw the had been fleeced
He in a passion flew,
So Mary got upon her ear
And stuffed the lamb in too.

We have been known in Fort Wayne many years to be the most successful clothing house ever opened in the city. It is not only our liberal advertising that has made us popular but our fair and honorable dealings, with those who have stood by us since we have been in the business. In selling them nicely made clothing at reasonable prices they have advertised us. With the 20 years experience we have had since boyhood, we profess to know the wants of every one and what class of goods are wanted. Therefore we can say that we can fit a boy of the small size up to the largest man in the grade of goods, from the finest to the lowest grades. We caution those who are not acquainted in this place to enquire for us before you drop in some other place where they have been trying to imitate our well established place. It is to your own interest as well as to ours to come direct to us at the popular Red Front, No. 5 Keystone Block.

Good common suits for men from $6 to $10, Cassimere suits from $9 to $20, fine cloth suits from $12 to $25. Cloaks from 3 to $25, with or without saques, men's working pants from $1 50 to $2.50, children, boys and youths suits from $3 up. We also keep a large line of hats, caps, shirs, underwear, gloves and many articles too numerous to mention, at exceeding low prices.

DEATHS.

WOOD—On Oct. 29th, 1873, Minnie A. Wood, aged 7 years, 8 months and 18 days.

On Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock, Oct. 29, 1873, Minnie passed from her home on earth to her home in heaven. She was a child deveted to her school, to her Sabbath-school and to her home.—When autum dropped her wreath of gaudy foliage, when winter's vanguard of chilly wind had come, and when the sky had shrouded itself in its cold and sable mantle we laid Minnie, loved Minnie, precious Minnie in her little dormitory to sleep 'till the winter of time be past, and in the spring time of the resurection to awake in new, surpassing beauty, clad with glory and immortal youth but, Minnie, still the same and forever more.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

Gen. Thomas Cadwallader, a son of Col. Lambert Cadwallader, of Revolutionary fame, died recently at Trenton, N. J., aged 86.....The Deputy Postmaster of Wilmington, Del., has been arrested for embezzlement....Many of the New England manufacturing establishments have been compelled to shut down on account of the monetary stringency. Others are running on short time.

The Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania has adopted a clause forbidding the granting of passes by railroads except to employes....Charges of immense frauds on the revenue, based upon the affidavit of a discharged clerk, are made against the extensive New York house of Woodruff & Robinson. The frauds, it is said, amount to over $2,000,000....Ex-Postmaster Stewart, of Pittsburgh, will be tried on three indictments—embezzlement, forgery and perjury....The manufacturing districts of Connecticut are represented to be in an unfortunate condition. It is said from 15,000 to 20,000 operatives and factory hands have been thrown out of employment.

Whitelaw Reid, of the New York Tribune, and Dana, of the Sun, have been indicted for alleged libel on Judge McCue....The Hartford City Hall has been partially destroyed by fire....Harry Bassett, the famous running horse, was distanced in a race at Baltimore, the other day....There has been another heavy decline in Vanderbilt stocks, at New York, caused by rumors of heavy defalcations in the Lake Shore, Toledo, Wabash and Western, and other companies.

The New York Board of Aldermen have atoned for a great many short-comings by making the handsome donation of $50,000 to the Memphis Relief Fund....Phelps, the defaulting Cashier of the New York State Treasury Department, has been committed to jail for trial in default of $15,000 bail....The furniture factory of John H. Morrill, in New York city, was destroyed by fire last week. Loss, $150,000. A watchman was burned to death while trying to extinguish the flames. ....A dispatch from Providence, R. I., says the Spragues are seriously embarrassed. Their assets are said to be $7,000,000 more than their liabilities, and want of current funds is the cause.

The serious results of the panic still continue. The extensive print works of Garner & Co., at Little Falls, Cohoes, Rochester, Pleasant Valley, Newburg, and Haverstraw, have shut down, discharging 10,000 men. The pay-roll of this firm amounted to $500,000 monthly. Other extensive factories, of various kinds, have suspended work, or have reduced wages and time. The prospect looks gloomy for the winter....The third trial of Edward S. Stokes for the murder of James Fisk, Jr., has been concluded at New York, and resulted in a verdict of manslaughter in the third degree. The prisoner was sentenced to four years' hard labor in the Penitentiary. ....Three persons—a man and two women—were recently run over by a train of cars at Frankfort, N. J., while attempting to cross the track in a wagon. They were horribly mangled, and lived but a short time.

The West.

The Farmers' Convention concluded its session at Chicago on the 23d of October. Various resolutions bearing on the transportation question were offered, discussed, and voted down, the final result being the adoption of the following substitute: "We demand the construction of railroads, and the improvement of water communication between the interior and the seaboard, the same to be owned and operated by the General Government, for the purpose of affording cheap and ample transportation, and to protect the people from the exactions of monopoly."

William Bebb, formerly Governor of Ohio died at his residence in Rockford, Ill., on the 23d of October, aged 71....The steamer Vienna, of Cleveland, was recently lost in a gale on Lake Superior. All the crew and passengers were saved. Loss about $100,000.... Gov. Beveridge, of Illinois, has issued a proclamation ratifying that of the President naming the 27th of November as a day of thanksgiving and prayer....Rev. John S. Spaulding succeeds the late Dr. Randall as Missionary Bishop of Colorado, Wyoming and Mexico....Some of the parties engaged in the lynching of Delos Heffron, at Salem, Ind., have been arrested and will be prosecuted.

Wintermute, the assassin of Gen. McCook, at Yankton, Dakotah, has been admitted to bail in $50,000....The National Board of Trade has concluded its labors at Chicago, and adjourned to meet at Baltimore on the second Tuesday in January next. On the subject of transportation, the only definite resolution that was adopted by the Convention was one declaring that the only complete and permanent restraint upon unreasonable exactions must be sought in the development of natural water routes, and favoring the improvement of the canals and rivers to promote this end. Resolutions favoring reciprocity with the South American States, and the establishment of something in the nature of a National Clearing-House, were also passed....The St. Louis banks have resumed currency payments....The new international railway bridge at Buffalo has been completed....Large and valuable deposits of cinnabar have been discovered in Northern Arizona....Hon. Samuel W. Fuller, a distinguished member of the Chicago bar, is dead, aged 51....John C. Heenan, the once noted pugilist, died recently at Denver, Col., of hemorrhage of the lungs....Joseph Puffenberger, the engineer of the coal-train that collided with the passenger express on the Chicago and Alton road near Lemont, Ill., on the 16th of August, resulting in the killing of twenty persons, has been tried at Chicago on a charge of manslaughter, and acquitted....A whole family of five persons were recently killed by a stroke of lightning, near Blue Rapids, Kansas.

A confidence operator literally captured the town of Gilman, Ill., a few days ago. In the short period of one day he borrowed all the money and bought all the live stock in the town, and made large contracts ahead. He then borrowed a horse and buggy and decamped. A short time after his departure there was a lively farmers' movement in Gilman, which resulted in the capture of the operator....Hon. W. A. Porter, for the last six years Judge of the Superior Court of Chicago, died suddenly in that city, a few days ago, aged 48 years.... The United States Senate Transportation Committee were at Cincinnati on the 27th and 28th ult. In a conference with the committees of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, statistical reports of the commerce of the Ohio river cities and towns were read, footing up $760,000,000 annually; of the commerce of Cincinnati, together with the rates of freight by rail and water, compared, and the steamboat interest. The joint committees presented a recommendation to Congress to improve the navigable rivers, to construct a great water line with its own officers, and retain control of the same....The Ute Indians have consented to go on their reservation in Colorado.

The house occupied jointly by John and Jonathan Robbins and families, in Mercer county, Mo., was burned on the 28th ult. Two of their children perished in the flames, two were fatally burned, and two others escaped. The parents were absent when the fire occurred....A fire in East St. Louis, on the 28th ult., destroyed Morse, Dagget & Co.'s lumber mill and several adjoining houses. Loss, $50,000 to $75,000.

The prosecution against the parties engaged in the Heffron hanging scrape, in Washington county, Ind., has been abandoned by the Attorney-General on condition that the organization shall be broken up. Measures have been taken to ferret out the members of similar associations in Clarke and Crawford counties....At Wichita, Kansas, the other day, two noted desperadoes, Beddy and Rowdy Joe, got into a warm conversation over corn-juice, when revolvers became the game, in which the two took a hand, and both understood. The result was a double funeral, and a wounded spectator, who caught a ball on the fly.... The steamer Continental, loaded with several hundred roughs en route to witness the bruising-match between Allen and Hogan, was seized by the Illinois authorities, the other day, a few miles above St. Louis, and the principal movers in the affair arrested and bound over for trial. The roughs avow their determination to carry out the programme at all hazards, and the Governor of Illinois has dispatched to the Mayor of East St. Louis 100 stand of arms and a quantity of ammunition. ....An old man named John St. Clair, who lacked but a few days of being 105 years old, was run over by a train of cars and killed, at Fort Wayne, Ind., a few days ago....A man named Lemmel was instantly killed by a wad fired from a cannon, at Londonville, Ohio, while jollifying over the election of Allen.... The Catholics of Iowa have 94 churches, a membership of 100,000, and 55 schools, attended by 8,065 pupils....Centerville and Richmond, Ind., have for some time been quarreling over the county-seat question, and the matter has at last culminated in open war. The other day a mob gathered in Centerville, and, after laboring all day with fire-arms and stones, at last blew down the jail doors with connon and effected an entrance. An army of Richmonds took the field, marched on the enemy, compelled them to evacuate Centerville, and captured their artillery. Casualties—Killed, 0; wounded, 0.... Two men were frozen to death, a few nights ago, on the prairie near Kidder, Mo....John Edwards, of Cincinnatti, went home a few evenings ago in an intoxicated condition, and abused his family. His oldest son, Richard Edwards, becoming enraged at his conduct, seized a pistol and shot him through the abdomen, inflicting a death wound....The Modocs have at last reached their final destination, and will hereafter be "at home" on an island in the Platte river, near Fort McPherson, Colorado, where there are no lava beds.

The South.

The ravages of the yellow fever in Memphis were graphically depicted by a gentleman from that city, at a meeting held in St. Louis, a few days ago, to raise means for the relief of the sufferers. He stated that out of a population of 55,000 but 10,000 remained, and of these 1,000 were sick; and that over 2,000 widows and orphans were dependent upon charity. The latest accounts from the afflicted city represent that the disease is abating, and that many of the absentees are returning.

A shooting affray recently occurred at Cave City, Ky., between D. L. Graves, proprietor of the Mammoth Cave Hotel, and E. Wilcoxson, resulting in the death of the former... The cheering news comes from Memphis that the yellow fever has been routed, and that the city is beginning to assume its old-time business aspect....The bale of cotton which was donated by Col. Creed Taylor, of Arkansas, for the benefit of the orphans at Memphis, and sold in that city for $1,500, and subsequently shipped to St. Louis and sold there for $90, was forwarded to Cincinnati, where it was again sold for $2,038.08. It will be shipped East and resold....Lloyd L. Clary, editor of the Cumberland (Md.) Times, was recently shot and killed by John M. Risley.

The business part of the town of Americus, Ga., was recently destroyed by fire, involving a loss of over $300,000.

Washington.

President Grant denies the report that he has written a letter favorable to the issue of the $44,000,000 currency reserve. This money, he states positively, will be used for no other purpose than to meet the current expenses of the Government....A statement of the operations of the free postal delivery system for the year ending June 30, 1873, has just been made, which shows that the letter-carriers, during the year, handled 875,315,673 packages, at a cost of $1,422,495, showing a large increase over last year. During the year thirty-five new postal diliveries were established.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Times says: "Senator Carpenter's friends declare that he has sufficient documentary evidence to prove conclusively that the Long Branch scandal, involving his reputation and the wife of another man, was without foundation. The husband of the woman, it is said, is willing to testify that there was nothing wrong done, but that his wife was merely placed under Senator Carpenter's protection."....The receipts of conscience money for the past fiscal year amounted to $3,000, against $25,000 for 1872. This leads to the conclusion that there is a stringency in the conscience market....The important announcement is made from Washington that Secretary Richardson has decided to begin paying out silver for greenbacks or fractional currency, dollar for dollar. The amount ready to put afloat is between $150,000 and $200,000. ....The internal revenue receipts so far have fallen about $2,000,000 on account of the panic, estimated upon averages obtained before it began. It is estimated that the total receipts for the coming year will fall several millions below the figures of last year.

It is authoritatively announced that the Comptroller of the Currency will advise the issue of an additional $25,000,000 of national bank notes, in lieu of re-distribution from the amount now in circulation, to Southern and Western banks, and it is altogether likely that Congress will accept his recommendation.

It is stated that at no distant day an important order will be issued removing all Federal troops from the Southern States, except those garrisoned at the regular forts on the sea coast....A Washington correspondent states that Government Architect Mullett will take strong ground against the practice of ordering public buildings in so many small cities. At the last session such buildings were authorized in various parts of the country, but fortunately, by an oversight, no appropriation was made for quite a number of them, and an effort will be made to have the authority given repealed....It is stated that President Grant will recommend to Congress the issue of a new Government bond, bearing 3 65-100 per cent. interest, and exchangeable for greenbacks at the will of the holder....Nearly 400 mechanics and about 1,000 laborers have been discharged from the Washington Navy Yard, owing to the money running short.

Vienna Van Buren is in Washington, laboring to clear his skirts of the corruptions charged against him.

Foreign.

The King of Saxony is dead....The news from France is encouraging to the friends of the Republic. The Monarchists are less hopeful, and have determined not to hasten the reopening of the Assembly. The Bonapartist organ, Le Gaulois, publishes a document signed by many Deputies who favor a plebiscitum protesting against the restoration of the monarchy without consulting the country. The Deputies of the Left Center have adopted, by a unanimous vote, a resolution in favor of a Conservative Republic. M. Say, on behalf of the Left Center, refused to listen to the overtures of the Duke D'Audiffrel Pasquier for a coalition with the Right Center. M. Pereire, whose intentions were previously doubtful, has declared in favor of the Republic....The Spanish Carlists claim an important victory over the Republican troops in the province of Gerona....Trouble between Spain and France is threatened. The former Government has sent a note to foreign powers complaining that French vessels in Spanish waters have been lending aid and encouragement to the insurgents.

A Paris dispatch says Count de Chambord has assured foreign powers that his policy, should he ascend the throne, will not be aggressive, and that he will not attempt to reinstate the Pope in his temporal possessions.... The testimony against Marshal Bazaine grows more damaging as the trial progresses. A railway inspector of Metz testifies that Bazaine rejected an opportunity to seize large depots of provisions from the German army. ....An immense demonstration in favor of amnesty for Fenian prisoners is to be held in Dublin on the 23d of November. It is believed there will be 1,000,000 people and 500 bands in attendance.

A Paris journal has been suppressed for publishing articles violently hostile to Count de Chambord....A dispatch from Central Asia brings intelligence of frightful scenes in Khiva. Upon the evacuation of that city by the Russian troops the Gourmeds revolted, and plundered and destroyed the town. In addition to these excesses, the Usbecks slaughtered 1,600 of the emancipated Persians....Twenty-five Bonapartist Deputies in the French Assembly have signed a document protesting against the constitutional monarchy scheme. This accession to the ranks of the Republicans gives the disposition of the question into the hands of the doubtful members, of whom there are thirty or forty....A company has been formed in England, with a capital of $10,000,000, for the purpose of laying another cable telegraph between that country and the United States, the American terminus to be somewhere on Long Island.

It is reported that the Spanish insurgents at Cartagena are completely demoralized. Even the convict soldiery are in open revolt, demanding money and clothing. The Intransigente vessels obtained 20,000,000 reals by plundering the merchantmen of Valencia.... It is announced that the Spanish Government will send 5,000 more troops to Cuba before the end of November....The Russian Government has arrested many Catholic priests in the Diocese of Chelm, where a vast politico-religious conspiracy has been discovered among the clergy....The steamship Ismalia is over a month due at Glasgow from New York, and it is believed she is lost.

Several mercantile failures in London are announced....The preliminary elections for the Landtag have been held in Germany. A cable dispatch says that the Progressionists carried Berlin, the Liberals eight or ten of the provinces, and the Clericals one, Munster. The result, therefore, is a victory for the Government, so far as appears....By the arrival of the steamer at San Francisco, we have advices from China and Japan to the 8th of October. A son had been born to the Emperor, but he survived only a few minutes. A normal school and a Christian church on a liberal basis as to faith, have been established at the capital. The most important intelligence from China is that the Government is taking active measures against the ships engaged in the coolie trade. Hon. J. A. Bingham had arrived and entered upon his duties as United States Minister.... Political.

The Republican majority in Pennsylvania is about 25,000.....The irrepressible Andy Johnson delivered a speech in Washington a few days ago, in response to a serenade, in which he gave his views on Cæsarism, the Constitution, finace, panics, etc. He made no allusion to the Surratt matter.

The Apollo Hall Democracy and Republicans of New York city have formed an alliance......According to a Cedar Rapids dispatch, the Iowa Senate stands: Republicans, 35; opposition, 15; Republican majority, 20. The House stands: Republican, 51; opposition, 49; Republican majority on joint ballot, 22.

The official majority of Allen, for Governor of Ohio, is 817....The official vote of Pennsylvania stands: State Treasurer—Mackey, Republican, 244,009; Hutchinson, Democrat, 218,570; Mackey's majority, 25,439. Supreme Judge—Gordon, Republican, 238,472; Ludlow, Democrat, 224,734; Gordon's majority, 13,748....John F. Potter, of Roger Pryor bowie-knife notoriety, is a candidate for the State Senate on the Liberal Democratic ticket in Walworth county, Wis.

General.

The Senate Committee on Transportation, arrived at Richmond, Va., on Oct. 22, and after inspecting the first level of the James River and Kanawha canal and ship-locks, examined a number of witnesses, including Col. Whitcomb, Mr. Babcock Craighill, Gen. Haupt, and other eminent engineers, with a view of ascertaining the practicability of the proposed completion of the canal, and the construction of a tunnel for a canal of the length of nine miles. The opinion of the engineers was to the effect that the tunnel and canal could be completed in five years at a cost of $14,000,000....The last report of the season on the condition of the corn crop has been made by the Statistician of the Department of Agriculture. It shows a falling off of 250,000,000 bushels on the crop of last year, and 4 per cent. less area planted. The only States which report an average crop are Georgia, Florida, Arkansas, California and Oregon.... The Canadian Parliament met at Ottowa on the 23d of October. The address of the Governor-General commends the report of the Commissioners appointed to investigate the Canadian Pacific railroad scandal, and urges upon Parliament the importance of providing immediate means for resumption of work on that road. The establishment of a Dominion Board of Agriculture is also strongly urged. Riel, the Manitoban rebel, who, it was stated a few days ago, was en route to Ottawa to take his seat in Parliament, did not turn up, and it is now stated that he is hiding in Manitoba, fearing arrest and prosecution.

The National Board of Trade, at its recent session in Chicago, adopted a resolution demanding that American citizens shall be permitted to buy tonnage wherever built, and be granted an American register for the same. The question of reciprocity with Canada was disposed of by recommending a treaty with Great Britain that will facilitate the exchange of commodities with Canada and secure for American vessels the use of Canadian canals connecting common waters. Resolutions were also adopted favoring the simplifying of the assessment of ad valorem duties, and in favor of asking Congress to encourage and facilitate the manufacture of distilled spirits for exportation....The news from Ottawa, Canada, indicates that the Macdonald Government is likely to retain its power....The great ship Three Brothers, formerly the steamship Vanderbilt, the largest sailing vessel in the world, recently left San Francisco for Liverpool with a cargo of 4,300 bushels of wheat, valued at $190,000.

Since the 30th of June last, 2,417 miles of new railway postal service has been put in operation, making a total of 65,680 miles of such service in the United States....The real effects of the late panic are beginning to be very seriously felt among the manufacturers in various localities. In Pittsburgh, many of the iron and glass factories are closed. Many of the paper and cotton and woolen mills in and about Philadelphia have either closed entirely or are running on reduced time. In New York city, the effects of the panic are visible in the dullness of some of the ornamental trades, and in the determination of employers to reduce the wages of carpenters and masons. From the New England manufacturing districts come very discouraging reports. Many of the cotton and woolen mills are shutting down, and others curtailing their working forces. Already thousands of poor operatives are thrown out of employment, with a prospect of the number being doubled or trebled before the winter has fairly set in.

The Government, which has on hand about a quarter of a million dollars' worth of silver, has commenced paying it out from the Sub-Treasuries, in sums, however, not exceeding five dollars upon any check, the balance to be paid in paper. In no case, however, will silver be exchanged for greenbacks or fractional currency....In the Canadian Parliament, on the 27th ult., Mr. Mackenzie, the leader of the Opposition, introduced a resolution severely censuring the Government in connection with its action in the Canadian Pacific scandal. It is virtually a motion of want of confidence, and both parties claim a majority on the test vote. ....Joseph Arch, the great English agricultural labor agitator, has deferred his tour through the United States until next spring and summer. He has left Canada for England.

The base-ball championship question is now settled, and the Boston Red Stockings will fly the whip pennant another year.

FARMERS' CONVENTION.

Synopsis of the Proceedings of the National Convention of Farmers, Held at Chicago.

The first National Convention of the Patrons of Husbandry convened at Chicago Wednesday, Oct. 23. Delegates were in attendance from Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, Indiana, New York and Canada.

C. D. Beeman, of Iowa, was elected temporary Chairman, and S. M. Smith and S. T. K. Prime, temporary Secretaries.

Mr. Beeman, before taking the chair, made a short speech, in which he said that he was en route to New York to organize a State Grange. This question of cheap transportation is one of vital importance to the farmers of the great Northwest, when it is considered that 400,000,000 bushels of grain are yearly shipped eastward, and that the farmers pay for feightage to the seaboard twenty-five cents per bushel more than they should pay if the charges were honestly registered. Cormorants in the guise of transportation companies are preying upon the producers, and farmers must guard their interests well.

A permanent organization was effected by the election of the following officers: James M. Allen, President; S. M. Smith and S. T. K. Prime, Secretaries.

Mr. Flagg read to the Convention a telegram from Hon. William Windom, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Transportation, inviting them to confer with the committee, at their sitting in St. Louis, by delegates or otherwise.

Mr. A. G. Searles, of Kankakee County, Ill., offered the following resolutions, which were laid on the table:

Whereas, Railways have been built by large grants of public lands and by subsidies granted them by towns, villages, and cities through which they passed; and,

Whereas, They have the power granted them by the State to run their line of road through our farms, and even through our houses and barns, if they come in the way of their line of road, and appropriate our property to their use without our consent and against our wishes and desires; therefore,

Resolved, That railways are public domain, and as such should be under the control of Congressional law; and

Resolved, That we call upon Congress to enact a general railway law and put them under the control of a Department of the Government, or a Bureau of the Government, called the Department of Railway Transportation, that shall establish a uniform tariff of maximum rates per mile on the roads, and rates per ton on water transportation from place to place.

The following Committee on Resolutions was appointed: C. D. Beeman, Iowa; A. G. Dalton, Illinois; N. G. Lockhart, Indiana; J. W. Kellogg, Wisconsin; M. M. Hoonton, Illinois; J. S. Morton, Nebraska; Thomas T. Smith, Minnesota.

Mr. J. S. Morton, of Nebraska, offered the following resolution, which was adopted by the Convention:

Resolved, That a committee of three citizens of Illinois be appointed by the Chair to report to this Convention the effect upon producers and shippers of the legislation on railways in Illinois, and whether they advise similar legislation in all the States.

The question of water transportation was brought before the Convention in the following resolutions offered by Mr. Coffeen, of Illinois:

Resolved, That the first duty of the people is to subject all transportation companies or corporations to the restraints of law; and,

Resolved, That it is their next duty to urge the making of a ship channel from the Atlantic seaboard, by the way of the lakes and the Mississippi, to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico by the National Government; and,

Resolved, That it is our next duty to urge the Federal Government to assist in the building of a double track railway between the Eastern and Western sections of country.

A long, spirited, and somewhat desultory discussion ensued, and the resolutions were finally disposed of by referring them to the Committee on Resolutions.

After some business of an unimportant nature the Convention adjourned.

SECOND DAY.

The second and last day's session of the Convention was largely occupied with a carefully-prepared address on railroads and transportation, by Mr. Flagg, at the conclusion of which the Committee on Resolutions made its reports, which substantially embraces the following propositions: 1. That Congress pass a maximum freight and passenger tariff between States, and that Legislatures regulate rates within States. 2. That Congress open water-routes from the Mississippi river to the seaboard. 3. That the people be urged to support home manufactures. 4. That the prospect of the early completion of the double-track freight road from New York to Omaha is a matter of congratulation. 5. Urging the people to free themselves from debt. 6. Opposition to special legislation. 7. Thorough organization of the farmers for self-protection. The first resolution was passed. The second brought out a long discussion, during which numerous substitutes and changes were made and tabled, the final result being the adoption of the following resolution:

"We demand the construction of railroads and the improvement of water communications between the interior and seaboard, the same to be owned and operated by the General Government for the purpose of affording cheap and ample transportation, and to protect the people from the exactions of monopolies."

The third, fifth, sixth and seventh resolutions were unanimously adopted, but the fourth was lost.

Resolutions were also adopted urging the importance of speedy legislation on the transportation question, and recommending Farmers' Associations to furnish the Railroad and Warehouse Commission with information on which to prosecute suits.

At the evening session, the only business of any general importance was the passage of two resolutions, one advising the farmers to hold back their live stock products until they could get a fair price—$6 per hundred on hogs being considered a fair price; the other recommending other States to improve upon the Railroad law of Illinois, after which the Convention adjourned sine die.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Oct. 25.]

The Farmers' Convention, before its final adjournment Thursday evening, passed the following resolution, a practical indorsement of which is now sought in the National Board of Trade.

"We demand the construction of railroads and the improvement of water communications between the interior and seaboard, the same to be owned and operated by the general Government, for the purpose of affording cheap and ample transportation, and to protect the people from the exactions of monopolies."

It should be stated, in justice to the Convention and the class it represented, that the resolution was declared adopted on a viva voce vote, although the noes appeared about as numerous as the ayes.

The Cornell Tragedy.

[Ithaca Cor. New York Sun.]

The Kappa Alphas do not deny that they took Leggett to Six-Mile Gorge because of its adaptability for their mummeries. They had used it before, and the facilities which it offer for scaring candidates have never gone unappreciated. They claim, however, that the ceremonies were to have been concluded at a point a little further up. The theory generally accepted here, and which is indorsed by most of the students who are not members of the K. A. Society, is that Leggett was taken to the gorge to frighten him. He was blindfolded with an elaborate arrangement of straps and buckles, so that he could not possibly get a glimpse of his surroundings until the moment came for the terrorizing. Some of the students went down under the overhanging cliff and fixed the colored lights. The paraphernalia for the masquerade had probably been arranged by those who had previously arrived. Horrible masks and costumes of devils were donned. Then the fires were lighted, and the victim was led to the very verge of the cliff. At a signal, like the firing of a gun close to his ear, or some equally unsuspected or bewildering noise, the blindfold was snatched off. With the noise still ringing in his ears, and held by two fellows in the garb of demons, the scene before him was calculated to inspire the acme of terror in a body already bewildered. The glare of light flashed up from a yawning gulf at his feet, dazzling his eyes that had been so suddenly uncovered. Demons danced and howled, with firebrands waved above their heads, around an empty coffin. Every device that could heighten terror was displayed. The horrible scene was so suddenly flashed upon him, and was so far beyond anything that he had expected, that for an instant in his bewilderment he forgot that it was all a farce. Recoiling from the counterfeit hell that yawned at his feet, he toppled Lee and Watson, who were holding him, and the three fell over the precipice.

President White and Profs. Morris, Schaffer, Heart and Crane, of Cornell University, are members of the Kappa Alpha Society. It is not supposed, however, that any of them participated in the fatal initiation, although Prof. Crane was near enough at hand to be brought to the spot immediately after the fall. This connection of the society with the professorship, and the fact that its members are among the wealthiest and most socially pretentious among the students, is believed to explain the attempt to suppress a thorough investigation. The slipshod method of the inquest, the absence of searching inquiry, and the impotent conclusion, show how nearly this attempt was successful. The students were allowed to answer or refuse to answer as they chose, and, consequently, the evidence was so garbled and distorted as to be nearly worthless. The admission that whisky was taken along to revive the victim, should be faint under their treatment, was about the only important fact that slipped out.

The Last of the Modocs.

[Redding, Cal. (Oct. 24), Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.]

The arrival this afternoon of the remainder of the celebrated band of Modocs created quite a sensation among our people generally. From every quarter of the country people came in, expecting to see something grand. But the Modocs, though historical, are anything but attractive in appearance. A more filthy, insignificant looking band of Indians could not well be imagined. Princess Mary and the widow of Jack were the most observed. They were each arrayed in a deep mourning of tar and ashes for the death of their kindred. All look as though they had lain out all winter under an ash-heap. They left here on the cars at 9:30 to-night for their new home in Wyoming Territory. Capt. Hasbrouck, with twenty men of Light-Battery B, Fourth Artillery, and Company G of the Twelfth Infantry, will escort them to Cheyenne.

"Betsey and I Are Out."

Petroleum V. Nasby tells how Mr. Will Carleton's most famous poem came near being lost in his waste barrel. "Betsey and I Are Out," was first sent to the Toledo Blade in Mr. Locke's absence, and his partner looked at the verses and threw them into the waste basket, which, as Nasby says, "happened to be a barrel." When he came home, Mr. Locke went fishing in the barrel, and the first thing he pulled out was this poem, which happened to catch his eye. Whereupon the senior partner mildly inquired in tones of thunder, "Dock, don't you know any better than to throw away such stuff as that? We'd better print it." The last verse was lost in the fragments, and the editor wrote to Mr. Carleton, asking him to complete it. But he kept no copy, and had to write another ending.

Jute.—The jute market is attracting attention in India, and it appears to be now conceded in Calcutta circles that this fiber, rather than cotton, is destined to be the permanent staple of India. In the two years between 1870 and 1872 the shipment of jute from Calcutta rose from 910,000 to 1,500,000 bales. At the same time the fiber has been applied to more delicate purposes, and a demand for finer qualities has sprung up.

The Southern peanut crop is an entire failure this year.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE

The Chicago Exposition—The Building—Number of Visitors—Educating Influence—The Panic—An Exchange Mart—Field, Leiter & Co.—Kimbark Bros. & Co.—Rathbone, Sard & Co.—Phelps, Dodge & Palmer—Belding Bros. & Co.—J. W. Griswold & Co.—A. H. Andrews & Co.—Cushman.

Chicago, Oct. 27, 1873.

An Exposition of the products of the West, as a memorial of the great fire, and of the wonderful transformation of the last two years, was a design worthy of the people who wrought the greatest miracle of the age. The sudden destruction of a great city, by a fire which has no parallel in history, astonished the civilized world. But its rebuilding, with far greater solidity, completeness and splendor, in two years, is the wonder of modern times, and deserves the commemoration which the Great Exposition is designed to give it. It associates the event with science, art, manufactures, commerce, agriculture, and all the productive industries of the country, and is typical of the energy, enterprise, large-mindedness and executive ability of Chicago.

THE BUILDING.

Within ninety days, a mammoth building, covering six acres of ground, uniting strength and symmetry, utility and beauty, in an eminent degree, was erected, at a cost of $250,000, and filled with the products of nature and art in all conceivable forms. Such an achievement—though possible to half a dozen cities—every one instinctively feels belongs wholly to Chicago. The Exposition itself, considering the brief time allotted for preparation, is a marvel. Characterized largely by what this utilitarian age calls the useful, the æsthetic, the beautiful and artistic have conspicuous place.

THE NUMBER OF VISITORS

has been unprecedently large, on gala days reaching as high as 60,000 or 70,000. Probably a third of a million people have already been gladdened by what they have seen in this exhibition. And the number is increasing instead of diminishing. To a great multitude this Exposition will be a lifetime revelation and wonder, with no rival in the past or future.

THE EDUCATING INFLUENCE of this Exposition must be very great. So many false ideas will be corrected, so many new ones suggested, so many conceptions enlarged, and so much juster estimate be formed of man's inventive genius and skill, and of the Protean, kaleidoscopic and wonder-working world in which we live. The good it will accomplish in this respect will far outweigh its cost, aside from the stimulus it will give to thousands to excel in their own departments of labor. The marked success of the Exposition would have been still greater but for which startled the country like a whirlwind, and swept away fortunes at a breath. And though all suffered more or less from its effects, yet the solidly established and prudently managed houses weathered the blast bravely. And here in Chicago, whose bankers and merchants set an example for her sister cities, the chief inconvenience was the distrust begotten of the panic, which temporarily prevented the use of their own resources. But business quickly resumed its normal condition, and the bursting granaries of the West, whose gateway is the Garden City, compelled the currency of the East and the gold of Europe to flow hither in a constant stream, to purchase food for the hungry.

THE PANIC,

AN EXCHANGE MART.

Chicago is the great distributing point for the West for all the necessaries, conveniences, and luxuries of life, and her wholesale houses, in character, enterprise, and extent of business, rank next to those of New York. At the head of the dry goods trade here are whose wholesale store, 190 by 200 feet, at the corner of Madison and Market streets, gives six acres of floor room; who sell $20,000,000 worth of goods a year, and give employment to over 1,200 people. Their retail store of iron and marble, 160x150 feet, at the corner of State and Washington streets, is a model of beauty and elegance, whose magnificent exterior is unrivaled as a dry goods palace in this country, and suggests the character and extent of the business conducted within. The unparalleled success of this firm, which, in a few years, has distanced all competitors, is the fruit of integrity, enterprise, and financial ability, and inflexible adherence to business principles. They always have a complete stock of the best goods, both in respect to style and quality, and sell at the lowest prices. Of course, a house whose goods require about fifty per cent. more floor room than is contained in the Exposition Building is an exposition of itself, fully representing the growing greatness of Chicago and the Northwest.

FIELD, LEITER AND CO.,

Of first-class representative houses exhibiting goods at the Exposition, we notice

KIMBARK BROS AND CO.,

80 to 84 Michigan avenue, the largest Western dealers in heavy hardware, iron, steel, nails, wagon and carriage material, blacksmiths', miners,' mechanics' and machinists' tools. They have a perfect show, especially of wagon and carriage goods, and have the largest and best stock of any house in the West.

RATHBONE, SARD AND CO.,

who have the largest and best display of stoves and heaters—the fruit of thirty years' experience. Fifty-eight of the prominent patterns out of the 200 which they make, here represent their success. Their specialties, the Fearless and Acorn Cook, and the Brilliant Base Burner and the Acorn heating stoves, challenge competition. All are sure of a good stove who get Rathbone's.

PHELPS, DODGE AND PALMER

(boots and shoes), 48 and 50 Wabash avenue, are live men, large dealers, and a reliable house, whose trump card is their glove-fitting boot, which has won them hosts of customers.

RAW SILK, SEWING SILK AND MACHINE TWIST.

The best show is by Belding Bros. & Co., who took the first premium at Cincinnati in 1870 and '72, and at St. Louis in 1870, the only places where their goods were ever exhibited.

J. W. GRISWOLD AND CO.,

54 Madison street, Chicago, the largest and best stock of cloaks, cloakings, laces, trimmings and ladies' underwear in the West, distancing all competitors.

A. H. ANDREWS AND CO.,

166 to 170 Madison street, Chicago, have the finest display of office, school and church furniture. They are live young men, who have built up an immense trade by anticipating the public wants, introducing the latest improvements and making the best goods.

CHARLOTTE CUSHMAN

is playing at McVicker's to crowded audiences.

A Child Born with a Tail.

A physician of Lexington was lately called to perform a painful but necessary surgical operation upon a young child. The child had come into the world with a real, unmistakable tail, several inches long, which, like all other narratives, ran out to a fine point. The vertebral posterior had continued steadily to grow, and had curled under in such a manner as to necessitate its removal. The amputation was undertaken and successfully performed a few days ago, and the infant is in a fair way to recover. —Lexington (Mo.) Caucasian.

A WARNING TO WIVES.

What Befell a Danbury Husband, All Because his Wife Left her Hoopskirt Lying on the Floor.

We had a visitor Saturday afternoon. He was a square-built, heavy man. When he came in, he took a seat opposite us, and after a preliminary examination of our features, propounded the following singular, but rather important question: "Did you ever hear tell of a woman leaving a hoopskirt on the floor in front of the bed?" We thought over the subject for a moment, so as not to seem hasty in our judgment, and briefly intimated that we had not any knowledge of this peculiarity of the sex. "Well, nor I either, till last night," said he. "And so you did hear of it last night?" we asked. "I rayther think I did. I rayther think I did," he repeated. Then he pulled up his pantaloon legs, disclosing a shin bone that looked as if it had passed the night in a smoke house fighting flies, and a bruise at the top that must have called forth the liveliest expressions of wrath when received. "Do you see that?" he asked. As we were looking directly at it, and we answered in the affirmative, "Well, young man," he explained, "I've got another one like that on my back, an' the gol darndest shaking up generally, you ever saw." He paused a moment to readjust his pantaloon leg, and then continued. "You see I was taken a little bad in the night with pain in my stomach. I had been over to the fair, an' must have eat something that didn't agree with me. I guess it was about three o'clock in the mornin' when I begun to feel the gripin'. I thought, at first, I'd lay still, an' it might pass over; but it kept gitting worse, an' finally I got up to look for the camfire. It was darker than blazes [a favorite and pertinent simile with the masses.—ED.], an' I had to hitch round kinder carefully for a match. I expect I got on the wrong side of the bed in the dark, for the first thing I knowed one of my feet catched in something an' kinder pitched me ahead, then the other foot catched an' pulled me up again, an' then both legs got tangled up in the infernal hoops, for it was the old woman's hoopskirt, an' some of the ribs got atween my toes, an' smarted like thunder, an' when I undertook to move one way it would pull me back another, an' finally it got catched on to a cheer, an' I suddenly went over to wunst, the cheer, too, an' I struck my arm across the foot board of the bed, an' liked to have wrenched my shoulder off, an' that threw me to one side, kinder, an' I came plump with the top of my head agin the mantel, an' just made every timber in that house shake as if a thunder-bolt had struck it. It's a great wonder it hadn't killed me; as it was, it set the old woman to screamin' like a stuck pig, an' for two or three minutes it made me dreadful sick an' dissatisfied. You can bet that when I got on my feet I made short work of that hoopskirt. It aint hardly worth mentionin' in the paper, I don't suppose, but I thought it might be a good thing to just warn the women against leaving hoopskirts on the floor nights, an' puttin' people's lives in danger, you know." Here he stopped, and leaning back in his chair with a sigh of relief at an oppressive duty performed, eyed us for a moment with considerable and rather uncalled for anxiety. Then rising, and replacing his hat, with another sigh asked us if we had engaged our potatoes for the winter, and finding that we had, and there was no probability within the scope of earthly comprehension that we should need any pot cheese, he sighed once more and took his leave.—Danbury News.

A Wonderful Story.

[Boston Cor. Chicago Journal.]

The Boston papers have published a remarkable account of the appearance of Christ to a Mrs. Sherman, of Piermont, N. H., which shows conclusively the lady's belief in the actual manifestation of Christ's healing power upon herself, personally exercised by the Savior. A condensed statement of the narrative may not be without interest. Mrs. Ellen C. Sherman is the wife of the Rev. Moses Sherman, of Piermont, Grafton county, N. H., where her husband is the pastor of the Methodist Church. She is described as a person of good mental powers, and of a deeply religious nature. She is about 35 years of age, and previous to her sudden recovery, which she attributes to the personal exercise of Christ's healing power, had been an invalid for many years, during the greater part of the time being confined to her bed. Up to the close of August, she says, in a letter published in the Mirror, she had not thought of anything but to pass her days in the bed of sickness; and as she looked forward to years of suffering in a bed-ridden state, she felt she must have more help from God to enable her to bear this life-burden with perfect submission and patience—and she wished to be able to say, "Thy will, not mine." Her heart cried out in the imploring language of the leper of old, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean," and the voice answered, "I will, be thou clean," and with the words came the cleansing power of Christ's most precious blood, and she was cleansed. She was distinctly conscious of Christ's presence, which seemed to fill the room like a cloud. "I never," she says, "in all my life, had such a view of God's love in saving sinners." She felt that her sick and worn body was but a poor offering to make Him for his dwelling in return for such wonderful love. But the Spirit said, "He is able to restore and fit it up for His own temple." Then she knew the design of the Great Physician, whose presence had been such a comfort and strength to her, and when the voice asked her, "Believest thou that I am able to do this?" and she averred her belief in this miraculous power, she was conscious of His nearer approach to the bedside, and she felt His healing breath upon her face and heard the words, "And He breathed on them, and said, receive ye the Holy Ghost." The warm breath passing invigoratingly through her body brought with it the feeling of returning strength and life. After a while she was told to move, and for the first time in several months found herself able to do so. Then came the command, "That the people may know the Son of Man hath power on earth still to forgive sins, arise and walk," and, obeying, she arose and walked across the chamber. This was on the night of the 27th of August.

From that time she commenced to regain the old-time strength and vigor she had not wholly possessed for fifteen years, and in a week she was able to make quite a little journey. In public and private she took all occasions to bear evidence to her complete recovery and the miraculous means by which it was accomplished. Of her firm conviction of the actual spiritual appearance of her Savior, and the manifestation of His healing power, there can be no doubt. Her character and that of her husband, the Rev. Moses Sherman, for veracity are equally beyond doubt. Of her cure, to whatever means it is attributable, there is no doubt.

The Burial of the Modocs—Executioners' Perquisites.

The correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin thus describes the scene immediately following the Modocs' execution:

"Having dispatched my message, I remained behind to witness the closing scenes of the tragedy. In exactly half an hour from the falling of the drop, the bodies of the hanged were cut down and placed in their coffins, which were then removed to the blacksmith's tent, where the shackles, which had partly been disengaged, were entirely removed and the remains put in decent order for burial. Only the necks of Capt. Jack and Black Jim were found to have been broken. I saw strands of the rope with which Jack was hanged, and the locks of his hair shorn off as perquisites by the executioners sold as high as $5 apiece. While this was done the troops were removed from the ground by companies and dismissed. After that the remains were taken to the graves which had been dug for them at the west side of the guard-house, and the interment completed. The Klamath Indians, about 500 or 600 in number, were marshaled in column by their sub-chief, David Hill, and moved away.

"Some, probably relatives of the victims, appeared stricken with grief and filled the air with their mournful wailing. The majority manifested indifference. I have been informed by their chief that there is not the remotest possibility of any further difficulty between the whites and the remaining Modocs. They consider the punishment of the Modocs proper and just. He said that while some of the Modocs at Yanoix may be angry for a while, they will soon forget it.

"I have just been informed by Gen. Wheaton that John Schonchin has made an earnest and pathetic appeal to him for the custody of the children of Schonchin, his brother, who was executed this morning, whom he desires to educate in love and respect for the whites. The General informed him that, owing to his loyalty to the whites and his fidelity to treaty stipulations, he would use his strongest efforts to get the request granted by the President.

"Early this morning Scar-Faced Charley, Steamboat Frank, Hooka Jim, Bogus Charley, and all others of the Modocs who have temporarily enjoyed freedom, were placed in confinement in the stockade."

A Woman's Community.

[Boston (Oct. 23) Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

The establishment of a woman's community within the limits of the town of Woburn, about twelve miles from Boston, was begun yesterday by the formal raising ef the frame of the first building. In this community all the land is to be owned by women, and so far as the management of the affairs of the village is coucerned, woman suffrage is to be realized to the extent of the utter political disqualification of the sterner sex. The members of the community are obliged to assent to a constitution which is to govern it, but further than this they are unrestramed; except, however, that they are expected to attend at least once a week upon the unsectarian service to be held. The occupation of the residents in Aurora village will be varied, and industrial schools are provided to fit persons for the different kinds of work to be done, including a domestic school for instruction in home duties. Each homestead is to be accompanied with a garden; and gardening and fruit-raising will be a favorite occupation. Co-operative schemes are also planned. One of these, and that which has been pushed nearer to realization than any other connected with the enterprise, is the establishment of a laundry, where full facilities are to be afforded for doing work on a large scale, and bringing money into this, thus far, decidedly needy village by competing with famous Troy laundries. About one thousand persons are committed to the enterprise, though they are not all women, and not to be residents. The site of the village is a wilderness, and it offers all manner of obstacles. The community is called the Women's Economical Garden Homestead League, and it is established by an act of the State Legislature.

Good-by, Jay!

A morning paper thinks it of sufficient importance to the public to announce that Mr. Jay Gould, whilom partner of the late James Fisk in a series of stupendous audacities, which on a lesser scale would be called frauds, and more recently one of the most dashing gamblers of Wall street, is about to withdraw from business. He has already given up the Presidency of the New Jersey Southern Railroad, and been succeeded by Mr. Suratt, the late General Manager; and it is said that he is about to close his arrangements with the several firms through which he conducted his various "operations." The public, if it has any feeling on the subject at all, will be only glad to learn that the retirement is likely to be final. If it had taken place ten years ago we should have been saved many scandalous exhibitions that have rendered our name for commercial morality a byword and a disgrace.—New York Post.

THE average receipts of the Chicago billiard saloons reach $5,000 a day.

Fashions.

[From the New York Evening Mail.]

JET has secured its old place in fashionable favor.

NEVER before has lace been so much worn as now.

CAMEL'S HAIR lace is the latest novelty in trimmings.

THE "Coronet" and the "Caftan" are the newest things in bonnets.

THE "Directorie basque" is one of the newest inventions in ladies' garments.

THE "Persian" colors are much in vogue just now; they are very rich and very expensive.

THE most stylish dresses this season will be as plain as possible. Black silk will be the favorite material for street wear.

SOME few gentlemen, whose taste in dress is for the gaudy, but not neat, are wearing light silk waistcoats for full dress.

YOUNG LADIES who sigh after high-backed silver combs need only to hunt among their grandmothers' relics to find "just the thing."

CUT steel has superseded oxidized silver for belt-buckles, chatelaines, and the like. Small jewelry of this material is also coming into fashion again.

THE most gaudy garments will be worn in the house this winter, such as sleeveless jackets of scarlet cloth, embroidered in Nile-green, gray and violet.

IT is considered "the thing" to wear a small feather stuck in the hat-band; but there's no necessity of wearing half a bird, as some fellows do.

NECKLACES will be much worn this winter. A new style is of square blocks of gold, enameled with Pompeiian designs on the six sides, and joined by six light chains.

THE styles in ladies' dresses have now got back as far as the days of Catharine de Medicis. At this rate we shall soon have reached the styles prevalent in the Garden of Eden.

THE new color predicted to sweep everything before it this winter is as yet unnamed. It is described as looking like spoiled preserves, and will be worn in polonaises over black silk.

A LADY in New York says she does not want to be lectured about extravagance, when, to her knowledge, the young man of the period brings home bills of $80 for neckties, and $250 for a few pair of ivory and oxidized buttons, and a night-gown of blue India silk, puffed and ruffled in sinful fashion, for $60, and half a dozen of raw silk underwear, at $18 the set, and Balbriggan socks for $2.75 a pair, and a dozen lawn ties for $7 apiece.

Beauty and Brains.

Some newspaper-writer revives the lamentable truism that literary women are seldom beautiful. Their features, and particularly their foreheads, are more or less masculine. But there are exceptions to all rules, and Miss Landon was an exception to this one. She was exceedingly feminine and pretty. Mrs. Stanton, likewise, is a pretty woman, but Miss Anthony and Mrs. Livermore are both plain. Maria and Jane Porter were women of high brows and irregular features, as was also Miss Sedgwick. Anna Dickinson has a strong masculine face; Kate Field has a good-looking, though by no means pretty, one; and Mrs. Stowe is thought to be positively homely. Alice and Phœbe Carey were both plain in features, though their sweetness in disposition added greatly to their personal appearance. Margaret Fuller had a splendid head, but her features were irregular, and she was anything but handsome, though sometimes in the glow of conversation she appeared almost radiant. Charlotte Bronte had wondrously beautiful dark-brown eyes and a perfectly shaped head. She was small to diminutiveness, and was as simple in her manner as a child. Julia Ward Howe is a fine-looking woman, wearing an aspect of grace and refinement and great force of character in her face and carriage. Laura Holloway resembles Charlotte Bronte both in personal appearance and the sad experience of her young life. Neither Mary Booth nor Marion Harlan can lay claim to handsome faces, though they are splendid specimens of cultured women, while Mary Clemmer Ames is just as pleasing in features as her writings are graceful and popular.

Unhappy Wall Street.

If you go down to Wall street you will find the bluest, most "tired," hopeless, woe-begone set of unfortunates to be seen anywhere. The bottom is all out. Everything is going to the "demnition bow-wows," and a general "bust-up" is as firmly believed in as the Second Advent is by the Millerites. Just now Wall street is a good place to keep away from, if you want to be cheerful and to keep your head clear and level. But outside of that limited arena of sacrifice of gored Bears and lacerated Bulls, the aspect of the situation is quite cheerful. While Lake Shore stock is running down to most melancholy depths of depression, the road is doing an unparalleled business—having earned nearly $2,000,000 more this year than during the same time last. The earnings of about twenty-five roads show an increase of receipts last month over those of September, 1872, of more than ten per cent. Of course there are sensible men by the thousands here and across the water who will "pick up" the low stocks. The vast produce movement does not stop in sympathy with Wall street dullness.—New York Mail.

The Tarantula in Kansas.

On Sunday last about 12 o'clock, while Mr. Samuel Vallier, chief of the Quapaw Indians, living three miles south of Baxter, was going about his farm, he was bitten on the toe of one foot by a large tarantula. He immediately started for the house, but a short distance, and by the time he reached it the pain from the bite was so severe that he was unable to sit up, and threw himself across the bed. The insect had crawled up his clothing, and soon after he lay down it gave him the second bite in the region of the small of the back. This, with the other bite, charged his system with poison almost as quickly as if by electricity. Medical aid was immediately summoned, but before it reached him he was too near gone for it to do any good. And in the most intense agony he lingered until about 10 o'clock that night, when death relieved him from his sufferings.—Baxter Springs (Kan.) Republican.

Prairie Fires—Twenty-four Persons Burned to Death in Nebraska.

The intensely dry weather of the past season has rendered everything almost as combustible as gunpowder, and already the reports come in thick and fast of the destruction of life and property by fire on the prairies.

On Thursday afternoon last, near Webster, Saline county, Nebraska, a shocking fatality occurred to Mrs. Jacob Morry, who was teaching school in a wooden building in the center of a large prairie. Some thirty scholars were in attendance, mostly very young children. About 2 o'clock a dense cloud of smoke, rolling up from the south, gave warning of the approach of fire. Realizing the danger, Mrs. Jacob Morry, the teacher, instantly dismissed the school, and taking the little ones under her protection, started for a place of safety. She scarcely made a quarter of a mile before the flames of the prairie came dashing up with lightning speed. The grass was as dry as tinder, and the fiery element swept on with resistless power. It was an awful hour for the poor woman, and yet she never shrank from the terrible danger, but pressed on with the children to reach some spot where all would be secure. All the brave woman's efforts were in vain. The fire monster described a circle within which were the doomed victims, and escape seemed impossible. Still she struggled on, and finally succeeded in placing twenty of the children beyond the reach of danger, and then, having done all that a human being could do, the poor woman, with six of the little ones, perished in the flames. Four others of the children barely escaped with their lives, being terribly burned. No sadder sight could be conceived than the spectacle of those six little charred and blackened corpses, lying side by side with that of their brave teacher, on a lone prairie in Nebraska. And yet, perhaps there were seven more angels in heaven.

A gentleman who came in from the West last evening from Fairbury, Neb., says that the whole country has been burned over south of that place; that the destruction of property is immense; and that in Republic county alone seventeen persons have been burned to death.

On the line of the St. Joseph and Denver Railroad, from Alexandria to Hastings, the entire country has been burned over, resulting in the destruction of considerable property.

Near Astell Station, on the same road, a great deal of property has been destroyed by fire. Among the heaviest losers is Capt. Frank White, who had 800 bushels of corn and 100 tons of hay destroyed. About half a mile of the ties on the St. Joseph and Denver track were burned, and Conductor Billy Williams had to relay it, as well as indulge in much profanity, before he could get his train over the road. Many other citizens in the vicinity also lost largely in stock and grain.

From various other points in Kansas and Nebraska we hear of prairie fires, resulting in loss, but are without particulars.—St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette.

Narrow Escape from a Dreadful Disaster.

The New York Evening Post tells a story of a narrow escape from a terrible railroad disaster. An Albany passenger train and New York passenger train reached Tivoli bridge almost simultaneously. The night was intensely dark, and a heavy storm of wind and rain swept over the country. The signal light had been extinguished by the wind, and each engineer was ignorant of the presence of the other near the bridge. Both trains were started over the bridge, and when near the center came into collision, smashing the headlights of the locomotives and parts of their machinery. A truck was also thrown violently against the girders of the bridge. None of the passengers were hurt.

An Inch and a Half of Land.

The highest price ever paid for real estate was not either in London nor New York, but in Boulder, Colorado, where two lots are worth about fifteen cents a front foot. Two adjoining proprietors have gone to law about one and a half inches on the dividing line. The case has been in progress only two years, and when last tried occupied the time of one judge, four lawyers, one high sheriff, one crier, forty-six witnesses, three constables, and twelve jurymen for six days. This was the first trial, and the costs therefor amounted to $1,542.65, and how many more trials there may be can't be foretold, for the jury didn't agree.

The Cornell Tragedy.

Gen. M. D. Leggett, father of the Cornell student who was killed by falling from a precipice last week, writes to the Washington Star that his son received the consent of his parents to join the secret society; and continues: "Mortimer was there of his own free will, and was with his own chosen friends. In the ceremonies of that awful night, those students had in view Mortimer's pleasure and profit, and had no more expectation of danger or accident than he had. I cannot, therefore, find it in my heart to especially blame those young men nor Cornell University."

The Cattle of Europe.

According to a report lately read by Herr J. Ruegg, at a scientific meeting at Seeberzig, in Switzerland, all the cattle in Europe amount to 94,700,000 head. Of these Germany owns 13,000,000; Austria, 12,000,000; France, 12,000,000; Great Britain, 10,000,000; Turkey, 9,000,000; Spain and Portugal, 4,500,000; Denmark, 4,000,000; Italy, 3,500,000; Sweden and Norway, 2,500,000; Holland and Belgium, 2,000,000; Greece, 1,000,000; and Switzerland, 1,000,000. The little Republic of Switzerland figures at the head of the list in proportion to its extent and population, owning 208 head of cattle for each thousand acres, and 567 head for each thousand inhabitants. Spain has only 39 head for each thousand acres of its superficies.

A Clerk's Blunder, and the Consequences.

An old lady who lives a little distance from the small village of Quesby, Vt., writes a friend, went to the store in that place a few days ago for a pot of paint, with which she designed ornamenting her kitchen floor. She told the clerk, who went down stairs to prepare the decoction, to put in plenty of drying material, and he honestly intended to do so, but missing some pomatum from one side of his mustache, the loss so annoyed him that he omitted paying that attention to the order which it required, and instead of turpentine, poured in a generous quantity of sirup. That evening the old lady painted her floor, and the next morning made an examination of it to test its condition. When she opened the door, her cat, which was following, playfully jumped into the room and then stopped. The old lady immediately shewed the animal, but it didn't shew. It pulled away and tore one foot from the floor, and set it down again to pull up another, which necessitated pulling up the first one again. Then it tried the experiment over again, but with the same result. Finally it lifted one foot, and kept it up until the other was lifted. This gave the animal the appearance of trying to stand on its head, but its plaintive cries indicated that such was not its purpose. While thus raised, it attempted to lift the third foot, but in so doing fell over, and came down on its side in the paint, and there it stuck, clawing the air with its paws, and spitting forth the most venomous sounds. The old lady got a board, and laying it to the cat, succeeded, with some difficulty, in rescuing it. But she could not understand why that paint should be so moist. In the afternoon she tested the floor again with her finger, but the paint was still sticky. The next morning it was the same, and also in the afternoon. The third morning there was no improvement, nor any in the afternoon. She was astonished. When she touched her finger to the paint this time, she transferred her finger to her tongue, then opened her eyes a little wider, and tasted again. After that she put on her things, harnessed her horse, and started for that store. And that evening the clerk shaved off his mustache, and buried his pomatum in the solitude of the forest.—Danbury News.

An Extraordinary Case.

[New York Cor. Chicago Times.]

It is asserted on the authority of one of the most prominent physicians of Brooklyn, that one of his patients, Miss Mary Fancher, aged 25, residing at the corner of Myrtle avenue and Downing street, has not eaten anything for ten years. She broke down her nervous system by over-study while at school, and in 1863 was thrown from a horse and dragged behind a street car, the combined effect of these accidents being to completely paralyze her. Every day she has horrible spasms, and the most heroic treatment has no apparent effect upon her. Her teeth are tightly set, and sight, hearing, and the power of deluglition are entirely lost. At first food injections were given her, and when it was found that she could get on better without them, they were stopped. Emetics have since been administered at intervals, but they have disclosed no traces of nourishment. She has also been visited at the most unexpected hours, sometimes late at night, but always with the same result. She has actually worn out the springs of her bedstead, and she lies in a regular nest she has made for herself. Her arms are drawn up, and her legs are intertwined in a most remarkable manner. Her mind appears to be perfectly clear, and by fastening the necessary instruments to her fingers, she can write and embroider beautifully. Sometimes she goes into a trance, lasting from two hours to four days, and while in this condition possesses unmistakable clairvoyant powers. She can tell the time by various watches set to deceive her, read unopened letters, decipher the contents of a slatr, report the gossip of the neighborhood, tell the color of the article held behind her head, and even prophesy events that are about to happen. Before her illness she was engaged to be speedily married to a wealthy young man, who still continues unremitting in his attentions to her, although her case is pronounced hopeless.

How the Old Horse Died.

Gen. Otto Frederick Marshall, of the town of Wheeler, Steuben county, owned for twenty-two years a horse that died a short time since, apparently because he felt himself injured or slighted by his master. The horse was 28 years old and appeared as well as usual. Gen. Marshall had driven him to the postoffice, a distance of one mile and a half, once a day, during all that time. Every day, unless it was Sunday, the old horse made his regular pilgrimage, driven by his owner, to the postoffice. At length one evening, a short time ago, the General thought he would drive another horse and leave the old horse at home. On his way back from the office he met the old horse, who evidently surmised that something wrong had happened, and had broken out of the pasture. The old fellow made his trip as usual to the postoffice, and returning, entered the pasture, laid down and died.—Turf, Field and Farm.

Schonchin.

Old Schonchin, brother of the man who was hanged with Capt. Jack, is the noblest Modoc of them all. After the execution, he went to Gen. Wheaton, and, taking him by the hand, said: "To-day I have seen my only brother die—not the death which the Great Spirit sends quietly to all good men—but the hard death of the broken law. We had but one father, but one mother. There is a fiery pain in my heart, but I know the white man's law is good. He brought this trouble upon himself, and I take the white man's hand and say it is well. Many, many times have I gone into the Modoc country to talk to him, and to try and persuade him to come and live with me at Yainox. He would not take my advice. You know I have never broken the law, and I tell you again that I never will. I wish to take the children of my brother and be a father to them. I hope you will let me have them, that I may take them to my home at Yainox and take good care of them. I will teach them that the white man's law is good." Gen. Wheaton assured Schonchin that he would represent the matter to the head of his department, and ask that the four children be placed in his care. He said to Schonchin that he had long known his good name, and that in consideration of that fact he would try and get them for him. The old chief then bade the General good-bye, and accompanied by Schonchin Jim, his son, sorrowfully rode homeward.

Fatalities from Lightning.

The human mortality from lightning is not generally on a large scale, and might be very much reduced by precautions on the part of builders; so thinks the Building News. Arago estimated that the number of deaths from this cause amounted in France to about 70 in the year; Bondin calculated that from 1835 to 1852 1,308 so perished; none in November, December, January and February, but most in June and August. The lowest rate is assigned to Belgium, and the next to Sweden, the United States and England being about on a par. As a rule, however, these fatalities do not occur inside a structure of any kind. The peril, as experience shows, is less in a crowded town than in a villege or in the open country, and, naturally, the more elevated structures are the most liable to be struck. Fuller, indeed, in his "Church History," asserts that there scarcely ever existed a great abbey in England which had not been, at one time or another, wholly or partially destroyed by lightning, and his citations, taken in comparison with the records of our times, are certainly remarkable. In all cases it is the spire, the tower, and the dome which has been mutilated. As to ordinary habitations, all sorts of theories are in vogue on the subject of danger and safety. Some rely on thick glass in the windows, and some on register stoves; others recommend stone roofs instead of slate, and others tell timid people that they should live in a hollow. It is contended on this side that there should be at least possible admixture of metal in the combination of an inhabited structure; and on that, that all the bells beneath the roof should be kept continally ringing, just as, in obedience to an old superstition, cannon are fired at sea. The mass of evidence upon this topic points, however, to the one conclusion already suggested, that a good lightning conductor is the solitary safeguard; but that, unless good, it is worse than none.

Specie Resumption.

A Washington dispatch of the 27th says: Pursuant to the views regarding resumption expressed by the President and Secretary of the Treasury recently, the Director of the Mint has been making extensive arrangements for the coinage of both gold and silver to an extent heretofore unprecedented, so as to be ready for the resumption of specie payments, there now being large quantities of these metals awaiting coinage. The first step in resumption has been taken, it having been ascertained to-day from the Secretary of the Treasury that the Government will pay out silver as soon as it can be profitably and conveniently coined for that purpose.

WHAT ONE MANUFACTORY WILL DO.—One manufactory employing a hundred men will support an additional five hundred people. Three hundred families will disburse annually, on the average, $250, or $75,000 in the aggregate. This money will be drawn into the the town from the outside, where the manufactured goods are consumed, and the interest of this $75,000 at ten per cent. would be $7,500. These hundred families, too, would require a hundred houses, thousands of yards of cotton and woolen goods, thus giving health and impetus to every branch of industry.

A BIG STATUE.—The immense granit statue for the National Cemetery is reported to be fast approaching completion at Westerly, R. I. This colossal representation of an American soldier will be put upon its feet about the first of January. The statue is made of two blocks of granite, and when up will stand twenty-one feet high; thickness across the shoulders, five feet two inches; feet, thirty-six inches long; hands, twelve inces wide; fingers, fifteen inches long; mustache, thirteen inches long, etc.

A HIGH-PRICED HORSE.—Mr. E. Z Simmons has purchased the trotting gelding Jim Irving from his owner, Mr. James Irving, for the sum of $50,000. This is the largest price ever paid for a trotting horse, and as Mr. Simmons is a very experienced turfman, and superior judge of horses, he must have been satisfied that Jim Irving was decidedly the fastest trotter in the world before he paid this price.—Wilkes' Spirit of the Times.

THE following definitions of terms used to designate the velocity of the wind will be found valuable for reference: Light air, 0.1 mile; light breeze, 5 miles; gentle breeze, 10 miles: moderate breeze, 15 miles; fresh breeze, 20 miles; strong breeze, 25 miles; moderate gale, 30 miles; fresh gale, 45 miles; strong gale, 50 miles; heavy gale, 70 miles; storm, 80 miles; hurricane, 100 miles and upward per hour.

THE newest thing in dresses is the "suit of armor," made of steel-gray silk, black velvet and steel ornaments. The jacket of black velvet is perfectly covered with finely-cut steel stars, the overskirt has a heavy fringe of steel pendants, and a tablier of steel ornaments runs down the front. The hat is a small Turkish turban with a steel vigrette.

A RAINY DAY'S WORK.—A lady who wanted needles on a rainy day when it was too wet to go out for them, bethought herself of investigating her pincushions. The search became successful and interesting, and on going through her stock she had 447 needles. Certainly it was no needless search.

IN Paris smooth hair is the fashion, although some ladies destroy the beauty of the new arrangement by pasting "cats' paws" on either side of the face.

THE late Mr. Schonchin closed his speech on the Fort Klamath gallows with: "All I have now to say is, let Schonchin die."

ST. NICHOLAS FOR NOVEMBER.

The first number of St. Nicholas has just been issued. Pictorially, it is [illegible]e most beautiful magazines in the country, being enriched by designs from the pencils of Miss Hallock Sol Eytinge, Miss Ledyard, Sheppard, Stephens, Bo'les, Beard, and others.

The reading matter is varied and bright. There are thirty three articles, so ne for the very little ones some for the oldest of young people and some for every age between. Wefind in its broad, well printed pages, poems by William Cullen Bryant, Celia Thaxter, Lucy Larcum, and others. There is a capital humat fairy scetch by Rebecca Harding Davis. Donald G. Mitchell contributes a characteristic article, entitled "Who wrote the Arabian Nights?" and the first chapter of a serial story by Frank R. Stockton are given. A salutatory by the conductor, Mrs Mary Eap's Dodge, is sure to reach the heart of every child reader —and the hearts of their fathers and mothers as well. Among the stories we find a charmingly told ac count of a fairy's visit to a bee hive by Annie Moore; an exceedingly funny little story by Margeret Eytinge, and lively tales by Paul Fort and J. S Stacy. Lucretta P. Hale tells the adventures of a doll, Noah Brooks has a capital article for boys, called "by the Sea," and Olive Thorne talks about a certain "old Fashioned Hat."

There are also interesting descriptions of zebras, passenger pigeons, the curious inhabitants of the Farrallone Islands, and the Piute Indians, besides bright little "Jingles" and a whole page in large type for little children with big eyes. We must not forget to mention as an admirable feature a short story in German for the benefit of youngsters who are learning that language. A simil r French story is anounced for the next number. Then "Jack in the Pulpit," a curious fellow who is full of little bits of wit and wisdom, holds forth most entertaingly; and there are capital notices of juvenile books, intended for those who will read the books and a puzzle department that will certainly sharpen the wits of the youngsters.

Grant's Doctrine that Angbody will do for a Member of the Cabinet.

Unlike all his predecessors, President Grant holds that the members of the Cabinet occupy a position like that of officers on a General's staff, Anybody, he thinks, will do.

Other Presidents have appointed for secretaries of the several departments some of the greatest men in the country—always leading men in their own party. The consequence has been that every previous occupant of the White House has surrounded him self by a body of statesmen with whom he could consult on the great measures of his administration.

But Gen. Grant carried with him into the White House his arbitrary military principles. Inferior men, so that they were pliable and obsequious, answerd his purp se better than superior ones. He believed in personal, arbitrary government, and only required men to obey and execute orders.

The result is that we have the miserable nincompoop Richardson for secretary of the Treasury, placing the money of the Government without security in the tottering bank of the Cookes.

What other things this same secretary has done we hope to learn by a Congressional investigation. Then we shall know more of the results of Grants original and unique views on the subject of a Cabinet.

Ever since Victoria Woodhull indicated to the world that her bosom was the receptacle of a secret respecting the character for chastity of the Rev' Henry Ward Beecher, there has been a lurking notion in the minds of many that Henry was not one of those whose piety had steeled him against the lusts of the flesh, and whose preaching corresponded with his practice. They will not be surprised then to hear that Henry holds rather loose sentiment on some things, and is not afraid to express them. At the recent Evangelical Alliance in New York he is reported as follows: "Now, I had rather have been the prodigal son than his brother. He was to stingy to get drunk. He was to cautious, to cold, too unsympathetic to sin lasciviously. He was lean, mean, stiff and proper. He was going to heaven like a mummy." Henry is a "brick" and no mistake.

A Photograph room is not a good place to sulk in. A short time since a boy employed as assistant at Erie got spunky because he couldn't have a holiday, and leaned against the door-post in a brown study. The photographer is a quiet joker, and instead of berating the boy, he slyly adjusted the lens, took a negative, and next day presented the youth with a copy of the most life-like illustration of sulkiness ever seen.

Geo. Wm. Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekley, goes back on Gen. Grant, In a lengthy article relative to the salary grab, in which that infamous measure is handled without gloves, Geo. Wm. says that the best course for individual Republicans to pursue, with regard to this question, "is to regret, not defend, the action of the President."—Everything indicates the early decay of the Republican party. The best men of the organization, all over the country, are deserting it with the rapidity that rats leave a sinking ship.—There is nothing, to-day, that hold Radicalism together except the "cohesive power of plunder," and that will not last when the thieves begin to quarrel over their swag. The anti-monopoly movement, now agitating the nation, is just as certain to succeed, in time, as that "fate is always busy, rudely our fortunes moulding."

WISHART
PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Andy and the Worm.

Well, one day Andy was digging in his very own garden just after a shower, when he spied a big worm.

Worms are pleasant things. I don't think that anybody would make a pet of one, and although I've tried very hard, I can not say that I really love them myself; but I'm not afraid of them, and neither, I am glad to say, was Andy.

He didn't run away as fast as he could, tumbling over all sorts of things until he reached the house, nor did he dance up and down screaming "oh! oh! oh!" when this worm came out of the ground. Not a bit of it.

He sat quietly down on an overturned flower pot and looked at the worm in silence for at least two minutes, and the worm raised its head a little (worms can't raise their heads very high) and looked at him.

At last said Andy, "You're not pretty."

"I am not," answered the worm.

"You can't dance," said Andy.

"I can't," said the worm.

"Nor sing," said Andy.

"Nor sing," repeated the worm.

"You don't know your letters, even," said Andy.

"I don't," said the worm.

"Butterflies can fly," said Andy.

"They can," said the worm.

"Bees hum," said Andy.

"They do," said the worm.

"You can't do anything," said Andy.

"I CAN," said the worm, so loudly (for a worm) that Andy tumbled off the flower-pot, he was so very much astonished.

But quickly picking himself up, he sat down again, and asked, "What?"

"Something that bees, birds, and even boys can't do," answered the worm, wriggling a little, as naughty girls do when they say, "So there now you think yourself something great."

'Let's see," said Andy.

"Take your little spade and chop me in two," said the worm.

"Oh, no," said Andy, "that would be wicked."

"Well, don't you ever do it unless a worm asks you to," said the worm, "then it's all right. Now I'm ready, go ahead."

"Are you sure you're in earnest?" asked Andy.

"Quite sure," answered the worm.

"And won't it hurt you?" asked Andy.

"Don't ask so many questions; do as I tell you," replied the worm.

"And why?" said Andy; but seeing that the worm was turning away from him he seized his little spade and and chopped it in two, and lo! and behold! one-half crept off one way and one-half the other.

"Well, sure enough," said Andy, "I don't believe I could do that. Good bye Mr. Worm—I mean two Mr. Worms."

"Good-bye" said the head, and "good bye" said the tail; and they both crept under the ground and left Andy to ask, "And why?" until this very day.—Mrs. Margaret Eytinge, in St. Nicholas for November.

Properly "Excused."

Recently a juror approached the clerk of the Supreme Judicial Court and stated that it would be impossible for him to serve.

"Why not?" inqured the clerk.

"Because I'm deaf," responded the juror.

The clerk had reasons for incredulity and so informed the deaf man in a whisper that he would report his case to the Judge. Turning to his Honor, he said: "Mr. Badman, of Manchester, desires to be excused."

"What are his reasons?" asked his Honor, without raising his eyes from the paper he was reading.

"He says he is deaf," replied the clerk.

"He is excused," replied the Judge quickly; "if he is deaf, we don't want him; if he is a liar, we don't want him."

Mr. Badman is at home now.

Frightful Figures.

The frightful ravages of the yellow fever in Memphis may be conceived from the fact that out of a population of 55,000, 12,000 of which is a large estimate for the remaining, 1,500 have died, 1,200 are now sick, over 2,000 families are drawing rations from the Citizens' Relief Committe Commissary, and 1,200 orphans are in the different asylums. The Masonic fraternity has taken care of two hundred sick, and lost fifty members. The Odd Fellows have nursed one hundred and seventy-five, and lost forty-six members. The police have lost ten members, and fourteen were sick at last accounts. Five Catholic priests, five Protestant ministers, and six physicians have died.

How Judge Pettit Was Sold.

"It is said of Judge Pettit in the days of his early Judgeship that: In effect, it was then the Judge's favorite brag that his wedding fees kept him in pocket money, and paid all his tobacco and whisky bills. One day I found out that five young fellows had just arrived in town with their girls, in order to get 'spliced." They were all from one township, and wanted to get married together. I went with them to the County Clerk's office to get the licenses, and when they then asked me what squire would be likely to marry them the cheapest, I artfully suggested the old judicial joker for that purpose. "How much will the Judge charge for it?" they inquired. "Nothing," I replied. "When it is done, you ask him how much it is, and he will say, 'O, I leave that to yourself,' which means that he will not charge you anything.' This was eminently satisfactory to the love-sick swains, and the Judge was immediately sent for. His eyes fairly sparkled when he beheld the five couples, and I believe, while performing the ceremony, he chuckled inwardly already over the V's, upon which he confidently counted. The fond anticpation of so rich a harvest caused him to be unusually impressive. At last all was over, the Judge had given the five brides a smack, and one of the grooms said to him; "Well, Squire, how much do we owe you?" His honor replied, with a gracious waive of the hand, 'O, I will leave that entirely to yourself.' This was his usual answer to similar questions, and it meant "Five dollars a piece." Fancy, therefore, his amazement, when the five bridegrooms, instead of giving him the money he looked for, said to him, bowing and scraping, "Well, Squire, we are much obliged to you, indeed, much obligde!" The puzzled' indignant face of the Judge at this unexpected denouement was so extremely ludicrous that the by standers indulged in a hearty laugh at his expense. When the brides and grooms had left the room, the Judge increased our merriment by exclaiming bitterly, "Well, if these clod-hopping, corn cracking Hoosiers are not the biggest skin flint fools on earth I will be etc., etc." After this occurrence I noticed that the judge always said, "Five dollars, sir, in answer to the interrogation how large his wedding fee was."—Indianapolis Jorrnal.

THE KNIGHTLY NEWSBOY.

[illegible]

It was a damp and stormy night,
And the rain in streams came down,
While hundreds of soaked and wretched folk
Were hurrying to Brooklyn town,
And a piping voice at the ferry fence
Cried shrilly out, "Extry, two cents!"

It was a little newsboy chap
Puny and weak and wee,
Not bigger than a pint of beer,
So very small was he.
Yet at the ferry-gate he stood,
To earn his bread as best he could.

He wore no vest, no shoes, no hat—
The scantiest bit of shirt—
One only coat this waif could boast
Was a heavy coat of dirt.
Yet even in the crowd so dense
His cry was heard, "Extry, two cents!"

The homeward-going crowd grew less,
And less disposed to buy;
Yet still to sell his printed wares
The child ceased not to try—
"Extry, two cents!" in tearful tones
Still sobbed along the ferry.
"Don't give it up," a passer said,
"You bet I won't, sir, nary."
E'en as he spoke, o'er cheeks so brown
The ready tears came rolling down.

Oh, then up stepped a bigger boy,
"Spikey," of thirteen years,
Who gave but a glance at the unsold sheets,
And knew the cause of the tears,
"Come, come, little Jacky, mustn't cry;
You shan't get stuck, for we both will try."

Up stepped a good Samaritan,
Of the modern Brooklyn breed;
"Come, tell me, thou newsboy bold,
Has Jacky such urgent need?
For, be it so, this deed of thine
Is worthy of knights of olden time."

"Yes, Jacky has sisters two or three,
An' his mother's a widder, yer honor,
Or as good as such—her man gets drunk,
And he always puts a head on her.
So each of the children, old and young,
Must earn a few pennies to help along."

Then the Brooklynite to his friends so gay
Cried, "Come to me and see
How much great good small cash may do;
Now buy these extras of me,
For each with a ten-cent stamp you must part,
To send little Jacky home joyous of heart."

Little Jacky came up, with the tears running down
A few simple words to say—
"I thank you, gentlemen, every one,
For these 'ere stamps to-day.
I'll take 'em home to mother and sis,
An' they'll allers pray for you fellers for this—
For sis, though she's humpbacked an' not very gay,
Is heavy, the minister says, on the pray.

Now, these boys kept up their sobs and tears
Till their friends had crossed the ferry,
When they changed them quick into laughter and jeers,
And were most unaccountably merry.
And they kicked up their heels in the wildest of jigs,
Which they'd learned, I fear, from the minstrel nigs.

Little Jack, the tears still running down,
Though I fear they were not of sorrow,
Cried, "Spikey, didn't I do it bullee!
But I'll do it better to-morrow.
How they swallowed my mother and sisters three,
And their eyes slopped over at poor little me."

"Yer done it big," said Spikey the bold,
"And a jolly good lark it is,
And we'll try it on every day in the week
Till somebody drops on the biz.
An' to-night, my boys, we'll go an' see
The bully new play at the Old Boweree.

"An' Jack, while the flats do bite so sharp
As we've seen 'em do to-night,
We'll have a good show for plenty of stamps,
If we play our little game right—
Plenty of coffee and cakes, d'ye see,
An' allers the cash for the Old Boweree."

THE DEAD TOWN.

It was among the tangled ridges and ranges of the rugged mining region of Central Nevada, and the sun was but little more than two hours high, but getting higher and hotter every minute.

Along the deep ruts of the old wagon-road, which wound through a crooked valley, there were riding two men of widely-different exterior, although they both were sufficiently noteworthy in their way. The one in front, upon whose slow movements the other was rapidly gaining, was mounted on a stout old mule, whose dull ambition he continuously assisted with hearty thwacks of what was left of the stalk and lash of a worn-out "bull-whip;" and a curious sort of a customer was he. His dress was an odd commingling of the rags and relics of civilized clothing with articles of Indian make, not to speak of sundry rude "improvements" that spoke probably of his own clumsy handiwork. His hat, for instance, consisted of a greasy and battered antelope-skin, stretched over an incomprehensible frame of willow twigs and rusty wire, and had such a "flap-down" behind and such a "flap-up" in front as suited admirably a way the wearer had of bearing his snub nose high in air, as if he perpetually discovered something unpleasant in the surrounding atmosphere. It needed no second glance of an experienced eye to determine that that man had been a long time "in the mountains." In fact, he was just returning from a prospecting and mining tour of prolonged toil and peril, but of very satisfactory success; and there is no other time in his wild, adventurous life when your genuine miner so thoroughly appreciates his right to carry his nose as high in the air as he pleases. And yet our miner seemed to be in no particular hurry, for all his occasional applications to the tough hide of his old mule, and, least of all, did he seem disposed to avoid the man behind him.

The latter wore the uniform of a United States cavalry officer, spick and span new, with the shoulder-straps of a captain, and a general appearance of having just been to the barber's, that was in strong contrast with the outward man of the mule-rider in front of him. He was well mounted on a sleek-skinned and perfectly-groomed fat gelding—quite too fat for use in a country like that. The Captain, however, did not carry his nose in the air, but rather seemed inclined to send its long, sharp point ahead of him on a general scouting expedition of its own.

"Hullo, stranger!" shouted the man on the mule, as he turned half round in his tattered saddle; "I say, cap'n, my name's Bing. Do you know if this 'ere's the right road to Crooked Pine?"

"Can't say, my friend," replied the captain; "never was here before, and I'm just riding on ahead of my men to see what I can find."

"Wall, then, cap'n, this 'ere is the right road to Crooked Pine, and I'm gwine right into that thar city myself, sure as my name's Bing."

"All right," growled the captain; "go in if you want to. I don't suppose any one will try to stop you."

"Won't they, though?" returned the the man on the mule. "Wall, I reckon you never was inty Crooked Pine in yer life, and I'm just gwine right in there, I am. Mebbe it aint a bad place for you, with yer army-blue on and yer cavalry fellers comin' close on behind ye. I ain't got no cavalry but this yer consarned old mule."

"Why," inquired the captain, aiming his long nose at the man on the mule, "is Crooked Pine such a dangerous place to go into?"

"[illegible]," exclaimed Bing. "Why, cap'n, it's just the deadest town you ever heern tell on. It growed powerful fast, it did. Thar was only a coyote-hole, thar, at fust, an' the city sort o' growed up around that—a little the quickest you ever seen. Allers full of human coyotes, too, arter they'd skeered off the four-footed ones. I've been thar more'n once, and now I'm gwine agin. I'm gwine right into that thar town."

"But what do you want to go there for if it's such a dangerous sort of place?" asked the captain.

"Wall, you see, cap'n," said Bing, with a species of snort, "that's just whar the rub comes. You see, Crooked Pine's just the deadest sort of town, and it's the on'y place whar the boys ever made out to git a white skeer onto old Bing. They just did that more'n a year ago. They gobbled my pile fust, and then they run me clean out of Crooked Pine, and thus I took to the mountaings, and I've been thar pretty much ever since. I've had the tallest kine of good luck, but I sha'n't be comfortable in my mind till I've been back to Crooked Pine. I'm gwine to ride this 'ere old mule right into that thar town, I am, sure as my name's Bing, and we're a'most thar, now."

The captain's curiosity was evidently somewhat excited by what he had heard, and his long nose was aimed pointedly up the valley, which was widening out upon a sort of plateau of no very wonderful extent, and there were certainly evidences of some sort of settlement. The land around, here and there, looked even as if at some time or other an effort had been made to put it under fence and cultivation.

"Is that the city of Crooked Pine?" asked the captain of the mule-rider.

"No, sir-ree," replied Bing" we ain't into Crooked Pine. Not yet we ain't; but I'm gwine to ride right in thar on this 'ere old mule. This 'ere place is on'y the graveyard, and, I tell you, they need one, for it's just the deadest town you ever seen."

"Isn't it a healthy place?" asked the captain, with an uneasy twitch of the point of his nose.

"Healthy?" exclaimed Bing. "Did you ever hear of an onhealthy place among these mountings? Crooked Pine's healthy place, you bet, on'y fellers don't seem to live long thar, that's all. It's just the deadest place you ever seen, and, I tell you they scared old Bing, they did. But I'm gwine to ride right in thar, I am."

"Thought you said this place was the graveyard," remarked the captain, veering his nose slowly around the compass.

"Wall, an' so it is," said Bing; "but over yonder's the on'y patch that 'pears to be planted. Look at them sticks? Lots of 'em! Them with a hole bored into 'em means a revolver. Them that's notched so deep all 'round says how the feller himself got notched, over to Crooked Pine. Thar's some on 'em looks as if the boys didn't know what hurt 'em. You see, cap'n, Crooked Pine is just the deadest town; but I'm gwine to ride right in thar onto this old mule."

And now, as they rode somewhat more rapidly forward, the captain's nose became more pointedly inquiring than ever. Houses there were, scattered here and there, with some wild sort of reference to a possible street, and some of them were even of that ambitious sort where one story tries to climb to the dignity of two. There were frame buildings, with marvelously-sprawling signs—most of them "hotels," "halls," "shades," and miners' paradises of that sort; but some were apparently intended for legitimate business—"dry goods emporiums," and the like, not to speak of three or four "banks," and a "Crooked-Pine branch-mint and assay-office."

"That thar's whar they used to keep the tiger," said Bing. "It was right about thar that the skeer took me. But whar on yearth are all the boys gone to?"

Well he might ask, for, although the captain's nose had pointed everywhere, not the first sign of an inhabitant had as yet made its appearance.

"What can be the matter?" exclaimed the captain. "Are you sure that it was such a healthy place?"

"Healthy?" said Bing. "Wall, now, you kin just bet. Anyhow, I've come and rid right straight into Crooked Pine. Hullo, if thar ain't somebody stirrin'! Tell ye what, cap'n, I was beginning to git a leetle skeered agin, everything looked so consarned lonesome."
